Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that the Senator from South Carolina is now claiming that while the contract is made upon the basis of middling, under the contract the seller has the right to deliver in satisfaction of that agreement any cotton within 10 grades.

Mr. DIAL. That is correct, under the law. The law fixes 10 grades now. He can give the purchaser some cotton of all grades.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, I want to ask the Senator this question: Does the Senator propose in his bill that the contract shall specify that none but middling shall be delivered under that contract?

Mr. DIAL. Oh, no. I will come to my bill in a little bit. I had not gotten to that point, but I do not provide that at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand, under the present law, that while the contract is upon the basis of middling the vendor can deliver any of 10 grades of cotton in satisfaction of that contract.

Mr. DIAL. That is correct; at a discount below middling and a premium above.

Mr. SIMMONS. And he pays either a discount below or a premium above.

Mr. DIAL. That is correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. My understanding of the Senator's amendment—and I am going to ask him if I am incorrect—is that his bill would allow the same sort of contract to be made, but it would require that the delivery, instead of being extended to 10 grades, shall be limited to 6 grades of cotton. Am I correct about that?

Mr. DIAL. No; the Senator is not correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask how many grades of cotton may be delivered?

Mr. DIAL. Ten. I do not interfere with the present law.

Mr. SIMMONS. The seller can deliver within 10 grades?

Mr. DIAL. He can deliver within 10 grades, but I want to segregate the grades; group them. I will come to that in a little bit. I have no objection to extending the number of grades that are deliverable, but you must separate the grades and have them in separate contracts. The West, beyond the Mississippi River—they have not very many mills out there—think that the East gets the advantage of them in some way, although that is erroneous, in that they can not tender other grades below the tenth grade. We need not go into the names of them here—strict middling, and low middling, and middling tinges. It is confusing. Just say 10, you can not deliver on contracts below the tenth grade, and they think that is unjust. I should have no objection to making 12 grades tenderable, if you want to, but you must separate the grades, and be more specific in your contracts. My complaint is about the indefiniteness in the contract, and my remedy is to make it more definite. I will come to that in a little bit; but I was trying to get my good friend the Senator to see the wrong first, and see how we got into that wrong, how natural it was, and how we unintentionally and unknowingly and ignorantly got into this proposition, and how helpless we have been all the time, and how we appealed to Congress and begged and besought Congress to give us relief, and they have not done it. Then I will come to the remedy, and the remedy is very simple, I think.

I think I have inoculated the Senate pretty well with the wrong in the contract and have shown that it is a depreciated contract, thereby depressing the price of the actual cotton; and the man who produces the actual cotton is the man I am complaining in behalf of and trying to help. Furthermore, Senators, the injury of the proposition is that when maturity day is approaching the owner of the contract may need a particular grade of cotton in his business, but not knowing within 10 grades what he will get he almost universally sells out his contract. Therefore that makes the market top-heavy. He will not stand up and demand delivery, because he does not know what he is going to get. Hence he would prefer to sell out and pocket the loss. No man ever bought a future contract unless he thought it was at the bottom and would not go any lower and bought it at an auction price, dirt cheap. When maturity day is coming, if he knew what he could get, if the price of that contract was not satisfactory to him, instead of putting it on the market and thereby depressing other contracts and putting the price of cotton down, he would say: "Give me my actual cotton." This contract, however, is of no account for a cotton mill and is of no account for an exporter, and they are the only two people that use cotton.

What I am trying to get is such a contract that an exporter can stand up and say: "Give me my cotton under my contract"; or a mill can say: "Give me my cotton under my contract." I am told that an exporter, if he gets an offer for one grade of cotton, under the custom of the trade can fill it in either of two contiguous grades, but he can not skip down to the seventh or eighth grade. He can use kindred grades of cotton. That is what I am trying to get at. I am trying to make the contract specify what is to be delivered under it, just as you would if you were buying books, pocket handkerchiefs, chairs, or any other commodity. This law reverses the laws of common sense, it reverses the laws of merchandising, it reverses the law of all kinds of decency in trade, and we can not stand it any longer.

Now, Senators, I come to the remedy. Then my next head will be the objections to the remedy, and I will try to cover the situation as best I can. I shall be very brief.

My amendment has been mixed up with one that was introduced by former Senator Comer, of Alabama. Senator Comer proposed an amendment, to wit, to let the purchaser of the contract have a right to take one-half of the quantity in middling and above middling, the seller of the contract to select the other half. In order to be brief, with all due deference to Senator Comer—I apologize to him; he is a great business man, and I believe a conscientious, honest man, trying to get a better price for the farmer's cotton—I told him that his bill was in the right direction, but I thought he annulled some of the benefits that were to be derived thereunder. I requested him to say, let the purchaser select half of the quantity, and let the seller select the other half; but he did not do that. He said he had a reason for it. My objection to it was that he limited the purchaser to taking middling cotton and above middling, whereas the purchaser might want below middling. Therefore, he meant well, and that would have helped the price of cotton, and would have helped the farmer to some extent, but he annulled a good deal of the benefit of his amendment.

For instance, a coarse-goods mill would not want above middling. They would want coarse cotton; and if they had a contract, and if the contract was so low that it did not suit them, they would necessarily sell out. If, however, they knew they could get cotton below middling suitable for their use, if the price of the contract did not suit them, they would say, "Give me my cotton." Under Senator Comer's proposition they could not get below middling; they would have to take above middling, and that is unsuitable for the use of a coarse-goods mill, for making denims, duck, and a few things like that, sheetings, awnings, and so forth.

On the other hand, take a print-cloth mill; they do not want cotton under middling, and they want, say, above middling of a suitable grade. Anyway, Senator Comer's bill passed the Senate. I helped him. I thought it was on the right track and would help the farmers some. It passed the Senate and was killed in the House.

At that stage, in 1920, being greatly interested in trying to help my people, after Congress adjourned I went to the Agricultural Department, and they brought in all their experts, and I told them to get around the table and let us talk this matter over.

I said, "Now, in order that we may understand each other, let us brush the cobwebs away. Why were you opposed to Senator Comer's bill? I know you were opposed to it. But I want to see if we can not get our minds together." They said, "Senator DIAL, the objection to Senator Comer's bill was this: If the purchaser of the contract had a right to select one-half the quantity in middling and above middling, he would select all that half in middling fair, and there was not much middling fair grown, and then he would call for the actual cotton and he would corner the market, run the price sky high. There would not be enough of that kind of cotton to go around, and he would run the price up and they would have to settle with him at an exorbitant price."

I said, "That is true. I know that. I am not trying to break the exchange. I am not trying to corner the market."

The reason I helped Senator Comer was this: I can not see as much sin, as much wrong, if wrong there be, in letting the purchaser select one-half and thereby run the price away up—which would help bring up the price of the other grades, in sympathy—hence the price of all cotton would be higher. I can not see as much wrong in doing that under the present law, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], as letting the seller select the whole quantity, and keep the price at the bottom. It is inequality, thereby injuring the price of spot cotton. Now, gentlemen, what do you say to this: "I do not want to corner the market, up or down." Let the purchaser select one-half of the quantity of the contract—I say to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]—and the seller the other one-half, but in order to prevent a corner up or down, make them divide it equally between two grades. Then you get kindred cotton, and you know to an extent what you are doing. I knew that was not the best solution of the proposition, but it was a compromise, and that was as much as I thought I could get through the Senate at that time. I did not believe there would be a breath raised against that solution.

My objection to it was, because the purchaser could then use the half he would select, but the seller might select his half in something the purchaser could not use. Therefore that contract would not be at as low a price as it would be if the particular grade of cotton were specified. I thought at that time that that was fair between the buyer and the seller. I did not realize fully that the public would be affected to such an extent as I thought later, and think now. But when the price of that contract would go out into the market, it would depress the price somewhat, because there were not equal rights; but I was willing to accept that as a compromise and get it through, and I believed that would bring up the price several cents a pound.

With all due deference I introduced a resolution to that effect and made a statement in the Senate, and Senators were kind enough to ask me many questions and looked into it considerably, and without any praise of myself, I think it put some of them to thinking, I am glad to say. After that I conferred with some of the other cotton Senators, all I could get together, and we concluded that that was not the best remedy, that was not the complete remedy, that the complete remedy would be to specify the particular grade you were trading in, and make them deliver what they specified. There is no question about that being honest. That is the chronological history of the proposition.

At that stage it was thought I was an enemy of the exchanges. I am not an enemy of the exchanges. I believe the exchanges serve a good purpose. Heretofore we exported about half the cotton we raised, and a proper exchange would be a very good place to bring the buyers and the sellers of the world together to trade in cotton, if we had a fair, honest contract, a definite contract, which would fix a definite price of a specific grade. Therefore I dispelled any accusation that I was fighting the exchanges. I would vote to-day to abolish them if the law is not changed, but if we pass a fair law I think they can serve a very good purpose.

After very great consideration, and after a conference with my colleague and others, I concluded that we should repeal section 5, which gives the seller 10 rights and the purchaser none, leaving section 10, which will practically convert the exchange into a spot exchange. That was the point made by the Senator awhile ago.

Therefore, the man who sold the contract would specify the one grade he was selling, and if he had to do that he would be very slow to contract to sell a great quantity of one grade, because he would have difficulty in getting that quantity together; hence he would ask a better price, and when he asked a better price that would bring up the price of the actual cotton. Then you would have 10 quotations every day instead of 1 quotation. The quotation they have to-day is on the basis of middling. Then you would have a quotation for each grade, and it would be confusing. Then you would run a great many people out of the exchange. They would not contract, because a man who would know what he was doing would say, "Give them the cotton." What is the reason a mill in Massachusetts or in Maine could not buy its future supply in contracts and say, "Give me the cotton"? The reason they do not do it is because they do not know the kind they are going to get, and you might give them the very grade they could not use in their machinery.

Talk about hedging. That was not intended as a spot-cotton proposition. It was intended as a hedging proposition. I know something about hedging. Say a mill gets an offer for all the goods it can make for the next four months at a certain price. The management figures on that order at a pretty good price. But they say, "We have not the cotton." They say, "Let us accept that offer at so much a pound." Immediately when they accept the offer for the goods to be made in the future, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], they wire to their broker in New York to buy them that many bales of contract.

They sold the goods four months ahead, and they buy the cotton in one, two, three, or four months delivery. They call that hedging. What I would like to do would be to let that represent the actual cotton, and when maturity day comes, let them say, "Give me my cotton under the contract." But they can not do that because of the indefiniteness of the contract. Hence, this is the way they work it. The mill says, "We will not commence the order until next month. Buyer, go all over town. We want high-grade cotton." We will suppose they are running on high-grade cloth. Or they will say, "We are running a coarse mill, and we want coarse cotton. Go to town and buy us a thousand bales of cotton, all the cotton we need." So they bought the contract at 25 cents a pound, and sold the goods on that basis. The buyer goes over town. They say, "Buyer, every time you buy 100 bales of actual cotton, you wire to Jim Jones, our broker in New Orleans, to sell out one contract." The mills are absolutely oblivious of the price they will have to pay for that cotton. If he goes over town, he may find the contract has gone down, the price of spot cotton has gone down, and he buys it, for instance, at 24 cents a pound. He has lost $500 on that 100 bales of futures he bought, but he has bought his cotton $500 cheaper on the 100 bales than he figured.

Now you get your 1,000 bales. Wait 30 days, get the warehouse empty, and a little more money in the bank. They will say, "Well, John, we are going to need some more cotton. Go out and buy another 1,000 bales." He buys another 1,000, but the price has gone to 26 cents by that time. The mill does not care anything about that. He has paid a cent more a pound for his 100 bales, but he has made that $500 back in his contract. That is hedging, and some of our good exchange friends will holler, "Oh, that is the object of the exchange."

That does pretty well for the mill and I am not kicking the mills.

I have some little interest in mills, and I am proud of it. There is no room for any difference of opinion between the farmers and the mills in my State and in the South. The last South Carolina Democratic convention adopted a resolution reciting that the interests of the mills and the farmers are identical, and I ask leave to print that as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From platform adopted by South Carolina State Democratic convention, held at Columbia, May 17, 1922.]

A condition unparalleled in our history now confronts the people of South Carolina. From the time of our organization as an independent State the foundation of our economic structure has been agriculture. For over a century our supply of money has been largely dependent upon the supply of cotton and its by-products. Of late years the manufacture of cotton cloth has become inseparably linked with the production of the raw material, so that the two now form the basis of our prosperity. It behooves all good citizens to look to the welfare of the cotton farmer and the cotton manufacturer as a matter of self-preservation and for the life of our institutions.

Mr. DIAL. But who is hedging for the poor farmer? This indefinite contract has depressed the price of his actual cotton, and I will say to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] it is just as the negro said about his dream. He said, "Boss, I had a mighty bad dream last night."

The boss said, "What was it?"

"I dreamed that all the white folks went to hell."

"That's mighty bad."

"Yes sir, boss; but that wasn't the worst of it."

"What was the worst of it?"

"Boss, I dreamed every white man had a nigger twixt him and the fire."

That is the way with the farmer. He is between the speculator and the fire.

I do not object to specifying the identical grade, in the wisdom of the Senate, if the Senate thinks that is proper, and certainly it is honest, and, of course, I am for honesty. That would restrict trading tremendously, and some of my exchange friends would get a little tenderfooted on that proposition, and complain. They ought to be run out of business. They do not raise any cotton. They never saw a bale of cotton. Yet they take advantage of the toiling masses of the South.

I own farms. I have them worked, and I know how those people work. I went down home in my car in June, and I got out at a little town in the morning, early in the morning, about 6 o'clock, and by the time I would get out to the field there would be women and children in the fields working. I would sometimes drive out there as late as half past 7 in the evening, and they would still be there working. I knew this before, of course. That is the kind of people I am trying to help. We have never given sufficient consideration to the services of the women and the children. I do not oppose them working; they ought to work. I have no sympathy with some of the resolutions which are designed to keep people from working.

God Almighty intended that they should work. But there, when Saturday night comes, it is not necessary for the father or the husband to pay those children and the wife in actual dollars and cents for the services they rendered in working that week on the farm. I do not say it is necessary to do it at the end of the month, but I do say, with all the power that is in me, that their services ought to be reflected in the price of the cotton when it is sold, and that family ought to be that much better off on account of it.

Not long ago I heard an ex-demonstration agent from Texas make a speech. He said he was trying to get the people to organize to market their cotton. He went to a German. That German had his little wife on a sulky plow, plowing up the ground, getting ready to plant cotton, and he asked him to join the association, so that they could market the cotton together, as I am glad a great many of our people are doing. That man said, "I will not do it. I can raise cotton for 8 cents a pound." He said that in about four months he went back there, and there was that same little woman, weighing perhaps less than 100 pounds, running that same sulky plow, a little basket in front of her with a baby in it, with an umbrella over it. He said, "To hell with such agriculture." And I say, "amen." That is the kind of people I am trying to help.

The remedy is simply to make their infernal contract definite. If you repeal section 5, then you will close the exchanges in a great measure, as they ought to be, and a lot of those speculators ought to be wearing stripes to-day. There is in New York a tremendous band of crooks and thieves known as the odd-lot crowd. There are people there with the most outlandish names who have discarded their original names and assumed American names. Do not think I exaggerate, because I am not given to making assertions I have not investigated.

I have in my office, and I can show to anybody who wants to read them, the names of such people—one that sounds like Gorowitz, or something else that I can not pronounce, going by the distinguished name of Gorman. Others have names that I never heard of in this country, and they now go under Americanized names. The crowd send out the most lurid circulars over the country and are inducing clerks and chauffeurs and cooks to invest a little money with them, and then they turn around and steal it from them.

The other day I got a letter from a friend of mine in South Carolina, a most excellent gentleman, who said they had robbed him out of $5,000. I got a letter from North Carolina from a South Carolinian who made a mistake and moved over to North Carolina, who had invested with that thieving crowd, and had lost a lot of money I got a letter from a friend of mine who went to the State of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and settled, and they had gotten $500 out of him. I have prepared a bill, which I hope to get passed in a few days, and under which I hope to have a few of those crooks put out of business. I took the matter up with the Department of Justice, and one of them has been arrested One of these thieving crowds went into bankruptcy, it being claimed that they had collected over a hundred thousand dollars from our people and would not turn back the profits and would not even send back the margins they had deposited with them. He had himself put in bankruptcy, and the petition was filed by his clerk.

That is what we are up against, and yet Senators sit down here and when I get up and want to take a little time they say I am filibustering against the ship subsidy bill or something like that. My bill is worth more to my people than every other bill passed through Congress in many years. I have no doubt about that. It is worth the time of every man here. I am going to appeal to the men of the South. If we can not get the law amended, let us have a caucus on Sunday. I am a pretty good Presbyterian, but I will waive that and discuss the matter on Sunday if we can not meet any other time. We ought to get together on it. There is no ground for any difference between us. I care nothing about the exchange. I am trying to get an honest law enacted, and if the exchanges can not exist under an honest law, let them go out of business.

Do not say you do not understand cotton. You do not need to know anything about it. Just take the principle and apply it to any commodity in the world. Let a man sell cotton by sample and let him deliver any one of 10 grades under that sample. That is all there is to it. One man wants one class of goods and another man wants another class. We take away from the purchaser the right to select. A man would not give as much for that sort of contract as he would for a definite contract. To illustrate:

Suppose I go to the Senator from Utah and say, "Senator, you are a hat man, I believe?" "Yes; I am running a big store up here." "I have here a line of hats that I will sell you, ranging from $6 to $60 a dozen. There are 10 different kinds of them." "All right; I want some of those hats. Here is your check." That is the way in which the cotton is bought. Now, I come back to the Senator and say, "Senator, I am going to send those hats over to your store, but I am going to give you all $6 a dozen hats, hats at 50 cents apiece." "Good gracious, I don't want to litter up my store with that stuff. Go and sell them to some darkey on the back street, and save me whatever you can out of my check."

That is what is done with the cotton-future contract. Not knowing what we are going to get, we say, "If you can not get one price get another, but save me what you can." The hat drummer would come back to the Senator and say, "Save you a little bit out of that check? All right. Now I want to sell you some more hats."

"Wait a minute. The only way you can get me to buy hats is by naming the quality you are going to give me. You must put those hats down so I will know what I am going to get in a definite way. You handed me a lot of stuff before that I couldn't use, and I lost money on it." The Senator would not give as much for a contract of the first kind as he would for a contract definitely stating the quality of the hat. That is the proposition we are up against.

Now let me state my remedy. It is technical, and I shall not go into the details. The different grades are known, for instance, as middling fair, strict good middling, good middling, strict good middling, and so forth, things we do not understand ordinarily. Here is what I am trying to do: I am trying to make the contract more definite. I think if we were to repeal section 5 of the law and let section 10 remain, which specifies the identical grade of the contract, it would be all right.

There is no reason why exchanges should not deal fairly. Why humor those people and pet them up and give them the advantage to get them to trade? If they do not want to trade, let them stay out of the business. We do not care whether they trade or not. If we were to make one specific grade, the man purchasing it would get the identical grade he purchased. The trouble is we do not, under the present law, allow the law of supply and demand to function. It is hobbled; it is tied by this constant settlement difficulty under the difficult contract system now in use.

I think the most practical remedy would be to group the 10 grades. I am not interfering with the grades. Nature provided the grades and the law named them; that is satisfactory to me. I would not object to changing that in some way or other if it were thought proper to do so. The amendment was prepared by the Agricultural Department. I am not a great expert along that line. They have prepared the wording of it, and it merely carries out my idea of what is wanted in the law.

My idea is simply to take the four highest grades which are kindred. There is but little middling fair grown, and it would not do any harm to strike that out, but I do not care to do that. If that were struck out there would be some propaganda or wrong information go out about it, so therefore let that stay and make three classes of the 10 grades—high grade, class A; medium grade, class B; and low grade, class C—with one grade in each class as the basis of that class. Then one-third of the contract must be filled in that basic grade, and the other in that grade or in either of the other grades in that class, but not in some other class. If anyone wants high-grade cotton, he will buy class A. He would know he was getting all of the contract in that class. He would know the basic grade in that class is good middling. He would know he would get what is called good middling cotton in that class to the extent of at least one-third of his contract, and would know that he would get the other part of it in kindred cotton. If he wants a low grade of cotton, he would buy class C, and would then get one-third of the basis mentioned in that class, and get all of his contract in that class. He would know he could use that in his business. He would know he could export that under his contract.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me understand the Senator. The Senator would retain the 10 grades?

Mr. DIAL. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. He would divide those 10 grades into three classes?

Mr. DIAL. Exactly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Each class would have three grades?

Mr. DIAL. Two classes would have three grades each and one class would have four grades.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator's contract, or the contract which he would authorize to be made, would specify a particular class, one of the three classes?

Mr. DIAL. That is correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. And the delivery under that contract would have to be from some one of the grades catalogued under that class?

Mr. DIAL. I would have one grade mentioned as the basis of that class, and one-third of the contract would have to be in the basis grade, and it would all have to be catalogued in that class.

Mr. SIMMONS. The balance would have to be selected from that class?

Mr. DIAL. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. That would mean that the purchaser would have to take his cotton for his actual delivery in one or the other of those grades. He could not select the one grade and demand that all the cotton he should receive should be of that grade?

Mr. DIAL. No. I am willing to say that he shall get one-third of it in the basic grade and that in the delivery of the remainder he should get of either of the other two grades in that particular class, just as it is done now, but more limited. If there is no grade mentioned in class B it is assumed to be the class traded in.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DIAL. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I did not hear all of the colloquy between the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], but as I understand the Senator's proposition, it is that he classifies all vendable cotton into three classes. Then he divides those classes into 10 grades and in one class would have four grades, in another class three grades, and in the last class three grades. If I were a manufacturer and I wanted grade 10 of cotton for a particular cloth which I manufactured, and made a contract with the Senator from South Carolina for cotton in the class that would more nearly represent the grade that I wanted, I would enter into contract with him to deliver me 1,000 bales of class C or class 3, and if I wanted grade 10 the Senator would be compelled to furnish me with one-third of the 1,000 bales in grade 10, but as to the other two grades the Senator from South Carolina could determine whether it should be grade 8 or grade 9, or whether it should be grade 8 and grade 9.

Mr. DIAL. The basis mentioned in that class is the middle of the class; that is, in the class to which the Senator is referring the basic grade would be grade No. 9. So the Senator would get one-third of his 1,000 bales in grade 9 and the other two-thirds in either No. 9 or No. 10 or No. 8.

Mr. KING. But suppose the grade I wanted in my factory was grade 10 only. I could not then contract for grade 10 exclusively, could I?

Mr. DIAL. If I would make a contract under section 10 of the existing law, but not under the amendment which I have offered to-day.

Mr. KING. I am speaking of the Senator's amendment.

Mr. DIAL. No. However, that would not prevent me from giving the Senator grade 10 if we should agree upon it, but he could not demand it under the contract.

Mr. KING. Under the contract, if I contracted to buy 1,000 bales of cotton and wanted a certain grade I would not get that grade; I would get only one-third of it in that grade?

Mr. DIAL. That is right.

Mr. RANSDELL. There is no objection in the world, I will say to the Senator from Utah, to his making a specific contract for just the grade he might desire for his mill. If the cotton grower or cotton factor or cotton merchant having the cotton to dispose of has the particular grade of cotton and the Senator, as a spinner, desired that particular cotton, I would contract to deliver to him the number of bales he desired of that specific cotton. That is a specific contract between the Senator and myself. There is no future business in that contract.

Mr. KING. That would be a contract between the manufacturer and the cotton farmer.

Mr. RANSDELL. As a matter of fact, that is the kind of contract made between the person desiring cotton and the person having it to sell. But suppose I, the seller, wanted to insure; that is, when I sell him that cotton at a certain price, at his mill, I want to be sure that I can buy it at that price and deliver it to him with a small profit to myself. I then would go into the future market and buy a contract for the same number of bales, and that is called the hedge or the insurance. But the Senator, who desires the cotton, would bind me to give him the exact cotton he wants, and I am obliged to do it.

Mr. DIAL. But he would not get that under the future contract.

Mr. RANSDELL. Not under the future contract. We have the future contract as an insurance. It is a means of carrying on the business in that way.

Mr. DIAL. The 10 grades are divided into three classes. The Agricultural Department fixed up those classes and put the kindred grades in each class.

Mr. SIMMONS. But under the contract the man who wants middling and only middling would get but one-third of the amount that he bought in middling cotton.

Mr. DIAL. That is right.

Mr. SIMMONS. He would have to take the other two-thirds in a grade that he did not want.

Mr. DIAL. That is true; but he could use them—mix them.

Mr. SIMMONS. So the proposition involves an element of uncertainty as well as the contract made under the present law involving the same element of uncertainty.

Mr. DIAL. That is true; but not to the same extent.

Mr. SIMMONS. But the extent of the uncertainty is simply less.

Mr. DIAL. Yes. I am coming to that just now. I do not say that my solution is the only solution of the proposition, but it is much better than the present law. It is about as far, I think, as Congress should go at this time. I would be willing to accept it as a compromise. What I want is a contract elastic enough to be traded in. I do not object to trading. Let them go to it. I am willing to give some latitude to it.

I also want it to be definite enough to be practicable. Here is the point. I am not an expert cotton man nor a cotton-mill man but I know something of the business generally. I am told that a mill does not have to have all of its cotton in one identical grade. It would like to have it in that grade, but if it can not get it in that particular grade it can use the kindred grades, and the Agricultural Department has fixed those kindred grades in the amendment which I have offered, and no serious harm would result from the use of those kindred grades. They could mix the cotton and use it satisfactorily in making any particular kind of cloth for which their machinery is set. It would suit the machinery and would suit the cloth they are making. Therefore I am willing to group it in the three classes or in any other way the Senate may desire to make it, just so we get a good solution of the difficulty. If it is desired to add more grades that is all right, but classify it. If it is desired to strike out section 5 of the present law and have section 10, which is the only section of the law on the subject that is satisfactory to me, I am very glad to have it; in fact, I would prefer to have it, but I doubt whether the Senate is going to do that.

As I said a while ago, I am told, in Liverpool, when they go to make delivery of the cotton they are not allowed to spread it out over 10 grades, but they must deliver within 3 grades. That makes the cotton usable and makes the contract more valuable and useful. That is what I am trying to do. I am trying to get a better price for cotton. If I could secure the adoption of the amendment, it would stabilize the price of cotton. An increase of even 1 cent a pound in the price of cotton would mean on a 12,000,000 bale crop $60,000,000 a year for our people. I believe as firmly as I believe the sun shines it would bring up the price of cotton several cents a pound. I believe we are deprived of hundreds of millions of dollars every year because of the operations of the present law. We are simply imposing upon people who can not help themselves and who appeal to Congress here to help them.

Senators, that is the remedy that I offer. I need the help of Senators from the South who represent cotton growers as I do. The question is of as much importance to your constituents as it is to mine, and I appeal to you to study the matter and to vote for my amendment. Unless we get some relief at once, there is no use allowing our people to work and then go deeper into debt simply to raise cotton, because they will have to take whatever they can get for it. Cooperative marketing is one of the best things that has ever been proposed for our people. Such a system is helping and will aid them wonderfully; but with this law on top of them the price of cotton would still be depressed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, before the Senator concludes, I should like to interrupt him. The Senator's colleague [Mr. SMITH] is one of the two joint authors of the present law, I think. Am I mistaken about that?

Mr. DIAL. That is my understanding. I was not here at the time the law was passed, but my understanding is that it was called the Smith-Lever bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator's colleague, as I know, has very positive ideas about this matter. He has talked with me about it. I may not altogether have comprehended his exact position, but my recollection is that he entertains the idea that the adoption of the scheme proposed by the Senator from South Carolina might possibly very greatly depress the price of certain very low grades of cotton that are somewhat extensively raised in some parts of the South.

Mr. DIAL. They are not included in the present 10 grades, as I understand.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is possible, because they are not included in them, that he has that view; but I do not know the ground, and I am going to ask the Senator if there is anything in the contention that, while his proposal might possibly tend to enhance the price of certain grades, it might also, on the other hand, depress the price of certain other grades?

Mr. DIAL. By no means. We can not make a man buy what he does not want. Since the Senator has mentioned my colleague, I will say that I am sorry he is not here to-day; I wish very much that he were here, but he is detained on official business. I would not have brought this matter up in his absence—in fact, I have been waiting for him, as other Senators, to be here—but I realize that I can offer my amendment to the present bill and a point of order may not be made against it. So I want to bring it to the attention of the Senate. I do not take much of the time of the Senate, but I would feel that I were derelict in my duty and almost a traitor to my people if I did not do everything in my power to get my amendment adopted.

My colleague is one of the best-known cotton men in the United States; indeed, he has an international reputation as a cotton expert. He grows large quantities of cotton and knows the cotton situation very well indeed. He is, perhaps, the best-known southern cotton expert in the United States. I am not here to speak for his private views. I have talked with him about the matter. He made a speech on the floor of the Senate some time ago, and I was certainly hopeful for a long time that he would agree to my solution of the difficulty. I hold him in the highest respect. I said in the first speech I ever made that the framers of the present law deserved the thanks of the people of my section every day of the year. They thought they had enacted a perfect law, and they did have a law, if the exchanges had dealt under and followed the provisions of section 10, which would have been very beneficial. It was thought, no doubt, that the exchanges would operate under that section, but they simply declined to trade in that way and will not so trade now; so that the law has fallen short of expectation, as I see the situation.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator says the exchanges will not trade under section 10?

Mr. DIAL. The New York Exchange, the Agricultural Department tells me, have never traded under section 10.

Mr. SIMMONS. What was the contract under section 10?

Mr. DIAL. It specified the identical grade.

Mr. SIMMONS. Without any play at all or any margin?

Mr. DIAL. It is in section 5 where the play comes—sliding options I call it. Some of our southern friends thought we ought to repeal section 5 and leave section 10. I have no objection to that. If that were done, the price of cotton might be 50 cents or 75 cents a pound; in other words, the law of supply and demand would regulate the price; but the law of supply and demand is simply hog tied under the present circumstances, because the operators on the exchanges can go on selling more cotton than there is in existence or will be in existence for many years.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator think if we limit them to three grades, requiring them to deliver one-third of the contract in one grade and the other two-thirds in the other two grades, the exchanges would trade on that basis?

Mr. DIAL. They would go out of business; and I do not care whether they would come out or not. That would, however, help the price of cotton.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator thinks that his bill, then, might possibly break up the exchanges?

Mr. DIAL. No; I do not think it would. I think it would limit the trading a good deal; and trading ought to be limited. I will illustrate my position by saying that we are taught that overproduction decreases the price of the commodity; that is elementary. If that is true, then does not overselling have the same effect? Suppose we were using in Washington a hundred thousand eggs, say, at 50 cents a dozen, and a man in Alexandria comes over here and says, "I want to sell eggs at 48 cents a dozen"; and a man from Baltimore comes and says he wants to sell eggs here at 46 cents a dozen, and some other man comes and says he will sell eggs at 45 cents a dozen. Cotton is selling at auction; but in the case of eggs, when the customer goes to the grocery store and the storekeeper asks him 50 cents a dozen for them, he says, "Oh, no; I will not pay more than 45 cents a dozen."

That is what they do with the quotations in the case of cotton. Every few minutes all over the South the quotations on the New York market are posted, and that fixes the price. If overproduction decreases the price of a commodity, in all common sense does not overselling have the same effect? It is presumed the cotton is right there behind the contract to be delivered; and that is the iniquity of the proposition.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator, I think, does not understand me as opposed to his amendment; he does not understand me as defending or championing the methods of the cotton exchanges or dealings in cotton futures.

Mr. DIAL. No; I understand the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the evil of which the Senator speaks, that of unlimited selling of a commodity that is produced only to a limited extent, is bad.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, is not that true of all products, such as grain, meat, corn, eggs, and so forth?

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I was going to ask the Senator from South Carolina. The Senator seems to think that the exchanges, if properly restricted and restrained, would serve a good purpose. Does the Senator believe that cotton exchanges could exist if they were limited in their transactions to the sale and purchase of only the number of bales of cotton that are actually produced in the country?

Mr. DIAL. I do not think there would be much of an exchange under those conditions.

Mr. SIMMONS. There would not be any exchange at all.

Mr. DIAL. I doubt if there would be. That brings up the point that I am driving at. I do not object to them selling more, but I want them to specify what they are selling.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator from South Carolina, it is absurd that there should be a right—and I do not yet see how they ever secured it by law—in the face of the common law and common sense and the universal trade customs of all civilized peoples, to make a contract for the sale of one commodity and legally to satisfy that contract by the delivery of another, with the Secretary of Agriculture adjusting the alleged loss by virtue not of a breach of contract but of the exercise of an option under it conferred by law. I do not know much about cotton; but when the Senator urges the propriety of having men keep their contracts and sell the thing they agreed to sell in quality and character, it strikes me it is a very sensible and apparently a very just proposition; it is almost self-evident, to my mind. However, as the Senator from North Carolina has indicated, I am not inclined to agree, though the Senator knows much more about it than I do, in the assumption of the Senator—I did not understand him to state it as a fact—that several sales of the same commodity necessarily depress the price of that commodity. For instance, I may have a dozen eggs on a farm; I may sell those eggs to a wholesaler; he may sell them to a retailer; the retailer may sell them to my neighbor; and my neighbor may sell them to me.

The value of those eggs is going to be fixed by the number of eggs consumed and the number of eggs produced. A series of sales of the same commodity may tend rather to raise the price of the commodity to the ultimate consumer, because the middleman has to be paid. I do not see how a multiplicity of sales will necessarily depress the price, nor can I see where a cotton exchange will be materially interested in the value of the product it handles, for it will make just as much money when the prices go up as when they go down. The Senator, however, is much better qualified to judge as to that than am I.

Mr. DIAL. That is the difficulty, Senator. I would not care how much selling there was if the sales represented specifically what was being sold, but when a dealer can sell milk and deliver buttermilk, that is what I object to. That is the point I am making.

Mr. STANLEY. I entirely agree with the Senator as to that.

Mr. DIAL. I am not opposed to the exchanges selling to their heart's content; but when maturity day comes I want to give the right to the buyer to say to them, "Deliver me specifically what you have sold me; I am not satisfied with the price; give me my commodity."

He says, "Oh, no; I am going to give you something else, and at a different price." Now, as I understand, when maturity day comes the seller of the contract says, "Here is your cotton," and I understand that the buyer of the contract has to express his acceptance in 15 minutes, and if you take it you possibly have to pay for it in two days; you have to accept it right away; but in case you accept the cotton they give the seller 30 days to go down South and hunt it up and deliver it to you. That is my understanding of that proposition.

The point that is made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is that this thing is wrong between the buyer and the seller because the indefiniteness of the contract does not induce the buyer to pay as much for that contract as he would if he knew what he was going to get. You depreciate the value of any commodity in the world if you make contracts of that kind in regard to it. The contract ought to represent the actual price. The actual price is governed by supply and demand.

Now, let us take this proposition:

Before the war the world consumed about 21,000,000 bales of cotton a year.

Mr. KING. Did that include India?

Mr. DIAL. Yes. We raised about thirteen and a half million bales on an average of 10 years. Now, let us assume this proposition: The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] are appointed by the mills of the world to contract for their supply of cotton, and they go out and contract for 21,000,000 bales. The mills then have all they want contracted for and they withdraw from the market.

These people kept on selling contracts, however, in 1920, up to over 128,000,000 bales in the United States, and by the time you count the other exchanges of the world possibly many times that much over. They put contracts on the market, and the mills, having been supplied, will withdraw, and the price will go down, and yet they will keep on selling. There is nothing else for it to do but to go down. You auction it off, and that affects the poor devil that raised it. He has to take his cotton in to market, and he supplies the actual cotton at the price of that contract. You see, that is what fixes his price. The buying power has dropped out from under him. That is the iniquity of the proposition—consumption can not be stimulated.

Suppose a man should come to the Senator from North Carolina and say to him: "Senator SIMMONS, you live down here in North Carolina. You have a pretty good cotton State down there. I sold out my interests some time ago, and I have some money. I believe I will buy some cotton. You say you are likely to get a short crop, and the boll weevil is bothering you a little, and so you say you think the price will go up. I do not know a thing in the world about cotton, and I want you to tell me about it."

"Well, all right, my friend. I think cotton will go up, maybe. Everybody thinks so. You go down and buy a thousand bales—it will take a good deal of money—and put it in the warehouse. You will have to pay carrying charges, interest, and all that kind of thing. It is a pretty expensive proposition."

He says: "Well, Senator, I have heard something about this future business. Tell me something about that. I do not need the cotton until next March or May. I have a good friend who is a big cotton-mill man, and he can use the cotton, and if you think the price is going up I believe I will just buy some futures, 1,000 bales of futures. What do you think about it? I have the money, and will put up the margin."

You say, "Well, my friend, that would cost you a good deal less than carrying the actual cotton; it would be a heap less trouble, and all that sort of thing."

He says, "My friend is making print cloth, a fine quality of goods, up in New England, and he will take the cotton off my hands if I accidentally have to take the cotton."

"Yes; that will be all right. Now," you say, "it is my duty to tell you, my friend, that you can contract to buy futures, but you have not contracted for any particular kind of cotton. You have contracted on the basis of middling. The seller will give you strict low middling, the lowest grade that there is, and your friend needs the highest grade, and therefore he would not take that cotton off your hands."

"What? Is that the way you make contracts? Can I not specify the kind of cotton I want?"

"Oh, no; the law says he can sell you on the basis of middling, and deliver whatever he chooses."

He says, "Well, I will not buy. I will not buy at all or I will wait and buy cheap, away down yonder"—a depreciated commodity, at a discount.

You see, not knowing what he is going to get, of course he would not pay as much as the cotton is worth. Therefore you do not allow people who have money and who otherwise would come to the rescue of the South to contract for the commodity, because they do not know what they are going to get under their contract. Just think about Congress allowing any such law as that to remain on the statute books! It is wrong in the sight of God, and our people ought not to stand it for two days, and if our constituents at home understood it as it is they would rise up and demand that we change it or that we send in our resignations, and they ought to do it.

To make a practical illustration of it: Some time ago a farmer came into my office—a very intelligent man, a graduate of a college. He said, "DIAL, I have been reading in the paper what you have been saying, and I am very much interested in your proposition." He said, "Of course, you are right. The contract ought to specify the particular grade." He said, "Now, you need not make any fuss about it; you need not call my name, but I lost some money in 1920"—and we all have a sad recollection of that year. He said, "I lost some money then, and I thought I would make a little back, and I bought two contracts. I thought I would get 200 bales of cotton." He said, "I keep a pretty good account down at the ——— bank." He is a cotton-mill man, and he said he would take that cotton off my hands. I told him I had 200 bales of cotton. He did not know anything about my buying the contract"; and he said, "I thought I bought middling cotton, but I found out that I did not know what kind of cotton they were going to give me. The price went away down, and," he said, "I went down to ———, the mill man, and I said 'I want to see you about my cotton.' He said 'What kind of cotton have you?' I have not any cotton. I bought a contract. I do not know what kind of cotton I am going to get.' 'Well, we are making print cloth here. We need fine cotton, and we can not use your kind of cotton at all.'" He said, "I could not blame him when I looked into it and understood what he said about it. Therefore, I sold out my two contracts and lost $8,000."

That is the way it is. Hence your contract market is always top-heavy. The interests of the buyer of a contract and the owner of cotton are identical. They expect the price to go up—that is, for the present. When maturity day comes, however, the buyer of the cotton puts his contract on the market, and that makes the market top-heavy, because he can not stand up and demand delivery. It is just like water running over a dam; a little fish down there at the bottom starts up, and here is more coming, and it hits him on the head. The man can put up the margin and keep selling. That is the way the market goes; and then the people who raise the cotton, who labor, who work, who are honest people, can not help themselves, and we allow any such thing as that to remain on the statute books.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] brought up here awhile ago a question about my colleague. I said I would much prefer that he were here. I want to accord him all the credit for just as much honesty as I claim for myself, but I do not yield to anybody in my efforts to try to do good for my people. His objection to my proposition as stated here on the floor was this, as I recollect it, that there was not much difference between the value of these 10 different grades of cotton. Well, now, in that he deserved great credit, because he helped to cut out or possibly did the main work in cutting out 22 grades of sorrier cotton than that. They meant to leave the 10 grades, all good, strong, sound, spinnable cotton, and that is what it is. It is all good, strong, sound, spinnable cotton. He said, however, that there is very little difference in the value of those grades.

Senators, I did not make the 10 different grades of cotton. Nature made them. That was in the law when I came here. That has been recognized ever since we have been growing cotton, so far as I know. I heard about it when I was a boy. Congress appropriated money and had a test made of the strength and the bleaching qualities of cotton, and there is not such a tremendous difference between the adjacent grades of cotton, but there is a difference.

I think the farmers have been robbed of millions of dollars by too great a difference between the grades of cotton. A year or two ago the difference between one grade and another was something like 1,900 points. They bought it on the contract for middling, for instance, so many points off of middling, and it went down to practically nothing at the time the slump came on; but, anyway, I want to call your attention briefly to this situation: I did not fix the 10 different grades of cotton. I do not know any way to make a man buy one grade of cloth if he does not want to buy it. That is not my part, but my bill does not interfere with that at all. I take the 10 grades as I find them in the law and group them together. A man would pay more for the group, because he knows what he is going to get, and he is not going to buy the other group, because he can not use it. As I illustrated to you awhile ago, he has to go out and sell it and get rid of it the best he can. Therefore I am trying to make it a practical contract, a workable contract.

I will ask the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] this question: If he is in Kentucky, and perhaps they do not raise any cotton there——

Mr. STANLEY. Yes; they raise some.

Mr. DIAL. Or very little, at any rate. Suppose you have a mill where you do not raise it; what is the reason why you can not sell your goods ahead, buy your contract, make arrangements at the bank, go to Europe, if you want to, and have a good time—I know you would enjoy yourself—and leave your superintendent to demand delivery of the cotton, make the cloth, and deliver the cloth under the contract? Your superintendent would tell you that you are using a certain grade of cotton in that cloth—you had forgotten about that—and he could not use this other grade. That fellow would deliver him the other grade, and he would have to shut down his mill and go out over there in the other part, where you say they raise that cotton—I did not know you raised much—and get the right kind of cotton, and bring it over to the mill. You could not rely upon the contract.

Now, do you know any other contract that you can make and carry out in that way? Why does the law want to come in here and favor these—I do not want to use harsh terms—dealers who have no interest in our people, who do not raise cotton, who would not know a bale of cotton if they were to see it? Yet you humor them, you give them an option or a preference to sell you one kind of stuff and deliver you something else. Ten options to the purchaser's none.

That is one proposition of my colleague, that there is not much difference. I do not know what is in his mind, but I do not see how you can make a man buy one quality of goods when he wants another.

If you will allow me to be a little personal, a year or two ago a friend of mine lunched with me one day. He and I were in college together. He is a mill president. He runs two very large mills. We went down on the train that night, and I said to him, "What is the reason you mill folks do not just go on and buy these 10 grades of cotton and mix them up and make cloth out of them?" He said, "DIAL, we can not do it." I said, "What is the reason?" I am not an expert. I said, "I think you discriminate too much." He said, "Well, I can not do that." I said, "Well, why? Tell me the practical part of it."

He said: "Over here in Georgia, in our mills, we have a trade-mark on some goods that we sell in China. We had a great run on them, and we are doing a good business in China, and we had to have certain grades of cotton to make that cloth. Over here in South Carolina, at our other big mill, orders began to get a little slack, and we commenced to make that trade-mark out of a different kind of cotton. We shipped that cloth to China, and the first shipment we made they sent back a claim on us for $20,000, and we had to pay it."

That is what that man told me. If you want his name, I shall be glad to give it to you. That is the practical part of the proposition. Therefore, I do not see that my colleague has any complaint along that line. A mill is not going to buy another grade if it can not use it, and I do not see how you are going to make the same price for it. If the purchaser discriminates between the prices, I can not help that. Anyway, I did not make the distinction in the grades. Nature made that. The law—my colleague's own law, that he put on the statute books—recognizes these 10 different grades. I have the technical names here if any Senator wants to see them.

That is one of his propositions. My amendment does not interfere with that at all, except that it puts them in classes. If you wanted all of them, you could buy three contracts, and you would get some of each grade, or practically so, you see; or, if you wanted one particular kind, you would buy that particular character.

Here is another argument that my colleague presented here that evening, at the time I offered this amendment to the tariff bill. I wanted to sound out the Senate and see how you all felt about it. Another point my colleague made was that it was for the benefit of the farmer that 10 grades were made tenderable, in that the farmer could contract to sell his cotton before he harvested it, even before he planted it, and then, when he did harvest it, he would take it up to the contract man and say, "Here are my 10 different grades on the contract," and my colleague says that was done for the benefit of the farmer. That sounds pretty well, but let us analyze it a little.

In the first place, not one man in a hundred makes 100 bales, and that is the unit. In the next place, our kind of farmers—not the rich ones they have farther West on those palatial prairie ranches—our people, where they plow with a little bit of a gray mule, and raise 5 or 6 bales to the plow, have not enough cotton to tender on a contract. Not only that, Senators, but I venture to say that not one farmer in a thousand in the South who actually grew the cotton ever made a contract to sell his crop before he harvested it.

Not only that, if you take the whole crop, there are more than 10 grades, and he could not tender the grades below the 10th grade on the contract. Not only that; he would not ship his cotton to the exchange, because it would cost him perhaps a cent and a half a pound to ship it, to pay the freight on it, and then he does not know how they would treat him in the grades. Therefore, he will do just exactly as a rich farmer who lives here in Washington, who owned land in my State, told me he did some time ago, when we were talking about this proposition. He said he would venture that not one in a thousand ever sold a contract; then he said that he would venture that if one in a thousand sold it, not one in a thousand ever delivered the cotton on the contract. He said, without calling names, that he sold a contract some time before that, and he said he wanted to test out this proposition, and he wrote to his broker, "I want to ship you my cotton on the contract. I want to ship you my cotton, and you tender it on the contract." He said the broker wrote back and "raised Cain" with him and replied that he did not want to handle his cotton, to take his cotton and sell it to a mill or to an exporter, and close out the contract "instanter"; and that is what he did, and that is what anybody else would do. They would not deliver cotton on the exchange.

That is a false hope to hold out to the farmer. That is simply a promise that you are going to help him. Even if you supply him a market for it, you put the price of the market down. My hat illustration a little while ago covers that.

You might provide a market, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], for a man to handle the hats that would be manufactured; but if the purchaser let the manufacturer select them, he would not pay as much as if he knew the quality he was going to get. If they were making only 10 grades of hats and the cotton law applied, contracts could be sold, and a market made by the price would be lower.

You may provide a market, but with all due respect to everybody I call that a false hope, a false promise, without any substance or reality in it, and the farmers can not avail themselves of it. Possibly a few very rich men do, but not one in a thousand, or possibly ten thousand.

I could talk from now until to-morrow night on this subject. Those are just a few preliminary thoughts I had in my mind. I appeal to the fairness of the Senate. I want the southern men to get together and talk this thing over, if they will. Most of them have been here much longer than I have. They raise cotton, and they know something about it, but I must say, with all due respect, I do not think they have studied the effect on the poor man who grows the cotton.

I am not here as the mouthpiece of the poor man alone, hollering poverty, but I have a heart as big as the Atlantic Ocean for the man who creates something, who digs it out of the ground, who adds to the wealth of the world. He is to be encouraged, and it is not right, it is not fair, it is not honest, for the United States Senate to keep a one-sided law on him, and to depress his product, and to deprive him of a great proportion of the value of his crop. I believe we have paid out many billions of dollars since the Civil War by reason of this unjust practice. I explained before the Senator from Arkansas came in that we inherited it. We should get together and set it aside. It is not right to try to bolster up one class at the expense of another class. As I said before, I am a long-suffering man. I have tried all my life to make one dollar go where two dollars could go, and have advised my people to work hard, but I would be glad if they would not plant another seed of cotton until Congress amends this law.

There is not going to be enough cotton to go around another year. Some mills will have to shut down, and if we do not do something here to help our people, they will be in despair. They are leaving the farms by the hundreds and by the thousands. I have a friend in my little county who this last year ran 34 plows, and is now going to run 2. I have a brother-in-law who ordinarily raises 1,000 bales. This last year he raised 125.

I want to appeal to my good friend from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. He is a seasoned Senator. He is a fair man, and he owns cotton farms. He raises cotton. He is just as honest in his views as I am in mine. I feel the highest regard for him. He is a country lawyer, as I am, and I want him to forget about the New Orleans Cotton Exchange. I have no particular ill will against those gentlemen. I do not know that I know any of them. But they toil not, neither do they spin, and yet they live on the fat of the earth. The Senator is fair until he gets down to that point, but the point I make is this: That the price of the actual cotton on the street would have been more if it had not been for the superstructure on top of it.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator kindly tell me why the price of beeves is not higher right now? There is no future market for them. I had a lot of beeves, and I had to practically give them away. I believe that has been the experience of pretty nearly everybody else who has had any. There are numerous agricultural products not dealt in on the future market, and you can not get anything for them.

Mr. DIAL. Too much supply and too high a freight rate.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator always finds some excuse.

Mr. DIAL. I do not deem it necessary to have a cotton exchange. We have no exchange for coal, we have no exchange for iron, we have no exchange for steel, no exchange for lumber and plenty of other things that are marketed. I do not mind an exchange for cotton if you have it as you have it with regard to wheat, where the grade is specified, and then the seller required to deliver what is specified. There can not be anything wrong with that proposition. You need not be uneasy. Nobody is going to accuse you of gambling. Study the proposition and forget about cotton. Then apply the principle to any other commodity.

I offered this amendment I have here, which I say is elastic enough and broad enough to be workable, and yet definite enough to be practical. I offered this and asked that it be taken as a substitute for the other amendment which I had offered. The committee did not report for a long time, something like a year; I moved to discharge the committee. I had no disrespect for the committee, of course; in fact, I have no disrespect for any Senator here, have the kindliest feeling for everyone in the Senate. But I thought they kept my bill unnecessarily long. I represent in part a large cotton State, and I offered the amendment in good faith. I believed it would help our people, and then at last I moved to discharge the Committee on Agriculture, and said I had hoped they would make a favorable report on my amendment, but if they would not do that to be kind enough to report it without recommendation, and if they would not do that to report it back with an unfavorable report, because I wanted to get it on the calendar and bring it to the attention of Senators and see what they would do with it.

So the Committee on Agriculture had a meeting, and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] was appointed a subcommitteeman to make a report. I presumed, since I had been so fair with them, that they would send it back without recommendation, but it comes back with an unfavorable report. That unfavorable report, however, deals almost exclusively with the amendment which I had withdrawn, knocking that amendment after I had withdrawn it. But, as I have already said several times this afternoon, that was a considerable improvement over the present law.

Senators sitting over on the other side perhaps will not look into it. They will say it came here with an unfavorable report from the Committee on Agriculture. I recognize your power, but I say that the Senate is too big to listen to any one man or to any one committee. I do not believe there are four men on the Committee on Agriculture who would report the amendment unfavorably if they studied the subject. I say that with all due respect to them, and I have faith in them, and I believe they would not unfavorably report it if they would look into it.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] sort of twitted me here on the fact that I did not bring any witnesses to talk about my amendment. I did not have an opportunity that night to reply to him. I did not bring any witnesses—and I hope Senators will listen to this—because from 1884 to 1914 the South had had bills introduced in Congress looking to a change in this law, or to put a law on the books relating to this subject at that time, and witnesses were brought here, and thousands of pages of testimony were taken. That testimony is just as germane to-day as it was then. The exchanges are just the same now as they were at that time. So if anybody wanted to read up on the exchanges, all he had to do was to go down in some of the musty old files and get out the testimony and read it.

I did not bring witnesses for the further and more potent reason that I did not need any witnesses. I represent my State, in part, and I assume the responsibility in this Chamber, if I can assume it, and I assume it to the extent of my ability and limitations. I assume it for the South, so far as I can.

I did not bring any witnesses here, furthermore, because this is not a question of fact. I did not want witnesses here to testify what they think about it—this, that, or the other. My friend from Louisiana brought them all the way from Texas to New York. I paid no attention to them because I knew what they were going to say. The farmers sent me here to look out for their interests, and it is not necessary for me to bring them here to testify about this. The crowd they brought here were speculators or members of the exchange—very clever people, perhaps—but I suggest that Senators read some of their testimony. A man by the name of Harris said that before this law went into effect the exchanges just did the public going and coming. That was his own testimony.

You will not find one exchange member in the United States, or one man who deals in futures in the United States, so far as I know, who will approve of my amendment, and I am not expecting them to do it, but the main reason I did not bring any witnesses here was this: That this is not a question on which to take testimony. This is a moral proposition; this is a legal proposition; this is a business proposition; and I know that Senators have the fairness to look into it and the ability and nerve to decide.

I merely want Senators to take this thought home with them. Here is a contract that authorizes a man to sell by sample, and here is a law that authorizes him to sell by sample that says he can deliver some other goods in 10 qualities under that sample. What would anyone give for that kind of a contract? No one would give value for that contract, and anyone can see what the result would be.

My friends will get up here and say, "Why, you are the wildest man I ever heard." My good friend, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], is listening to me, and I am glad. Some Senator said, "If there is a seller, is there not also a buyer?" There is a buyer, of course, but he is not a buyer for value when he does not know what he is going to get. He is buying a pig in a bag, as we say.

The Senator from Indiana and other Senators from his section are not interested in the matter to the extent we are in the South. Our people are in straitened circumstances. We never have gotten anything like we ought to have for our cotton, as I have shown by the reports of the Joint Agricultural Commission. Our country would bloom, our people would thrive, if Senators would help us pass a fair law; but if we take the quotations and buy on the quotations that is buying on false pretense and false representation, and the cotton is purchased and shipped out to Japan, India, Germany, France, Spain, and all over the world, and is made into cloth and sent back here to compete with our people.

All I ask is to make a fair law, an honest law. Do not give any favors. I do not want any favors. I do not ask for any favor. It is not right to have favors. It would not inure to our benefit. Our farmers do not want that, but it is not right to put a one-sided law on the statute books and confiscate the labor of our people. It deprives us of our wealth and of the common necessities of life. We can not buy the goods we otherwise would buy. It takes the wealth out of the United States and cripples our home people.

We pay our taxes, we bought bonds, we helped to fight the war. I want each any every Senator to study the proposition for himself and see if I am not right morally, legally, and in a business way.

Mr. President, I have said a great deal more than I intended to say, but with these few extemporaneous remarks I believe I am about through for to-day. I do hope that there will be no difference between my Southern friends and myself on this question. If they have anything better than I have offered to relieve the suffering of our people and help us get a just compensation or reasonable compensation for our work, I would gladly accept it; I would gladly tear up my amendment and throw it in the basket. But I do insist that we are here as business people after the war to try to get back to normalcy, to try to help readjust things in behalf of the whole country. Nothing could be done that would be more of an act of justice, of fairness, and of right, that would be a greater blessing and would be received with more favor than the proposition which I have presented. I do not know what is going to become of it.

As I said, our labor is leaving, we are shipping our mules away by the carload, and have quit farming. Many places are idle. I am a law-abiding man, a peaceful man, a good-natured man, but the time has come to fight. If I can do nothing else about it, if I can not get the measure through in some way, I am going to talk all over the country next spring and next summer. I would rather run than make a speech, but I know the principle involved is wrong. There is no excuse for it except to help the exchanges to gather in whatever they please. Can anyone tell me any reason why cotton should bring 25 cents a pound at 10 o'clock in the morning and in the afternoon at 3 o'clock bring 23 cents a pound? Everyone knows that is not honest. The reason for it is that the price of the spot market is following the price of the future market, fluctuating. The farming man can not know how to plan for his crop, and the banks do not know how to plan to lend him money to help him. Nobody can plan ahead with any degree of certainty. Conditions are unstable.

Cotton is a commodity that does not depreciate by reason of the passage of time when properly housed. If I may be pardoned for another personal allusion, there is in a warehouse in my town, a warehouse which I built twenty-odd years ago, a bale of cotton which was raised in 1862, the year I was born. It is just kept there as a matter of curiosity. The staple is good to-day. We know that cotton would not rapidly fluctuate in value. There is no reason for it in the world, and yet with this gambling business permeating the whole country, people running around in little towns and villages of 500 inhabitants watching the market quotations all the time, what are we going to do about it? They watch the telegraph quotations every minute of the day. We ought to have staple and regular prices. Let the law of supply and demand function.

Mr. President, I feel that I have done about the best I could do in 15 minutes or more of talk. If I had more time I could do more, but I leave the matter with Senators in the hope and belief that they will vote for my amendment. I leave the subject for you, your conscience, and your constituents.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President and Senators, if I can secure the attention of the Senate for about 15 minutes I will promise not to take longer than that, and I will try to explain just a few points about the amendment which my friend, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], has discussed with so much eloquence for, I believe, about four hours.

The measure which he has offered in the nature of an amendment to the pending bill is not a new one in the Senate. It has been repeatedly before Congress. For the past 40 years, aye, more than 40 years, future trading in cotton and other commodities has been engaged in. Future trading has been engaged in not only in the big marts of America but throughout the world. At the present day there are great future contract markets at Havre and Liverpool in the Old World. If the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina were adopted and we were stopped from contracting here, the contracting would go on abroad.

This is merely an agency for carrying on business transactions. The Senator rang the echoes upon the fact that a man makes a contract and when he goes to get delivery he does not get delivery of the cotton that he bought. Why, Senators, he overlooks the fact, which he ought to know as a millman, that when a man desires cotton he makes a specific contract for that cotton. He desires, let us say, for his mill 1,000 bales in February, 1,000 bales in March, 1,000 bales in April, 1,000 bales in May, 1,000 bales in June, 1,000 in July, and so on down the line. The millman, as I understand the business transactions, goes to the brokers in cities like Little Rock, Dallas, Houston, Galveston, Memphis, Montgomery, Ala., Savannah, Ga., Atlanta, Ga., Charleston, S. C., and Wilmington, N. C. He goes throughout the great Cotton Belt of the land, and there he makes specific contracts with the men who deal in cotton, who handle cotton, cotton merchants, if you please, cotton brokers, men who represent the producers of cotton. He buys from those men, to be delivered so much in the various months, the kind of cotton that he needs, be it middling cotton or strict good middling or low ordinary or any other grades that he needs for his mill. Those are specific contracts.

What does the broker do before he sells the cotton for delivery at some time in the future? Why, sir, that broker goes into the future exchange market of New Orleans or New York and buys there the same number of bales that he has agreed to deliver, and, buying that cotton at a set price, he knows at what price he can deliver to the mill. It is called a hedge; it is called an insurance. Senators, it is just as much a legitimate insurance as the great Lloyd's, which in England for years has been insuring every kind of business that a man can enter into, especially the business of shipping that carries our commerce throughout the world. Lloyd's insures that business. So the cotton exchanges issue a great many of these contracts as legitimate hedges, as legitimate insurance, for the actual transactions that the mills enter into.

I grant that there is a certain amount of speculation carried on in the future market. There is no doubt about it. We speculate in all sorts of things. I have been speculating all my life in real estate. I have been interested in real estate. Whenever I got hold of a little money I would buy a piece of land, expecting to sell that land. We speculate in cattle and hogs and in other things, but we all speculate more or less. There are a lot of gentlemen "gamblers" who go into the future market, buying grain or cotton or coffee or sugar or anything else, but that does not militate against the legitimate, businesslike features of the trade.

I wish to repeat that this agency of commerce has been practiced very much throughout the last 40 years. Senators, it has been well recognized, well established, and yet the Senator from South Carolina comes in here just as we are winding up the bill and proposes to disestablish, to destroy, to break down, one of the best-established modes of business known to commerce.

Let me show what happened to his measure recently. He introduced his bill some time ago, I believe in February, 1922.

Mr. DIAL. Nineteen hundred and twenty-one.

Mr. RANSDELL. Was it 1921?

Mr. DIAL. I think so, though perhaps I am wrong.

Mr. RANSDELL. As a matter of form, the bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of this body. That committee held elaborate hearings. The committee invited the Senator from South Carolina and all other interested parties to come before the committee and testify. That committee appointed a subcommittee to hold hearings, and a great many witnesses appeared. I hold in my hand a copy of the hearings. I am not going to detain the Senate by reading at length from them, but I shall be glad to furnish any Senator with a copy of the document. The print is very fine; it covers 175 pages. We went into every phase of the subject; we considered and discussed it with the greatest care; and here is the result of our labors:

The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bills (S. 385 and S. 3146) to amend section 5 of the cotton futures act, approved August 11, 1916, as amended—

Those were the two bills introduced by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL]— having carefully considered the bills, respectfully reports them back with an unfavorable recommendation. Both bills are attached hereto and made part hereof.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DIAL. I withdrew the first bill when I introduced the second one.

Mr. RANSDELL. But the committee did not know that; both bills were before us, and we were trying to treat the Senator from South Carolina with all possible courtesy. I continue the quotation from the report:

These bills have a common authorship, S. 3146 being in the nature of a substitute for S. 385—

So if Senate bill 385 had been withdrawn, there is no harm done in referring to it—and broadly stated is intended to revolutionize the method of trading in cotton for future delivery as now conducted under the supervision of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Your committee wishes to emphasize the fact—

Please listen to this, Senators—that with the solitary exception of their author, not a witness appeared in support of these bills from the time the hearings started on Friday, January 20, until they closed on Friday, June 2—

From January to June not a single, solitary witness appeared in behalf of the measures except their author—although ample opportunity was afforded everyone interested to be heard.

In striking contrast with this showing—

Senators, I dislike to read this, but it is not my statement. It is the unanimous report of the committee—

In striking contrast with this showing some of the most representative planters, spot-cotton merchants, exporters, and bankers from the cotton-producing States either appeared in person or notified the committee in writing of their unalterable opposition to these bills. Resolutions were received from the spot-cotton exchanges located throughout the South, whose members were no less emphatic than the witnesses for the New Orleans Cotton Exchange in opposition to these bills, or to any material change in the future contract now operating under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Now, listen to this:

And finally, representatives from the Department of Agriculture, which is primarily concerned with the welfare of the small cotton farmer—

Just as much as my friend from South Carolina is concerned or as I am concerned or as any other Senator is concerned about the welfare of the small cotton farmer—appeared before the committee and placed the stamp of the unqualified disapproval of the Department of Agriculture on S. 385 and S. 3146.

Mr. President and Senators, late as is the hour, I do not wish to take the time of the Senate to read more than I have read, but the report of the committee is very brief; it embraces only four pages; and I will ask to append it to my remarks as a part thereof, and that it may be printed in 8-point type.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina has referred to the existing cotton futures law. Let me remind those Senators who have been in Congress for some time that this is not the first occasion when we have had this question before us. It was before us in 1914; it was before us in 1916; it was before us in 1919; and legislation was enacted in each instance. The State of South Carolina was ably represented in both Houses when those laws were passed. The law which is known as the Smith-Lever Cotton Futures Act reflects credit upon its authors and it reflects credit upon the great State of South Carolina, whence those two distinguished men came. I was here at the time, and I know Congress gave the most painstaking and earnest consideration to this extremely difficult business question. It was conceded generally that there should be some legislation thereon, and, after earnest investigation and the taking of a great deal of testimony in both Houses of Congress, the law was passed in 1914. It was amended in 1916, and again slightly changed in 1919. We did not enact the legislation in any instance as an amendment to some other bill. The measures were not proposed without having been considered in committee; we did not attempt to pass them when the committee in charge of it had reported adversely to them; but in each instance we had the fullest, fairest consideration of the subject, and the bill was reported to the Senate; we threshed it out here and made the proper changes.

Senators, this is a most important matter. Are you willing to break down the ordinary means of conducting business in one of the most valuable commodities of America—the cotton crop, a crop which this year is worth considerably over $1,000,000,000; a crop which for years has given to America the balance of trade between the United States and the Old World? More than to any other commodity we owe our balance of trade to cotton.

As I have three times previously said, for more than 40 years the trading in futures has been a recognized agency in disposing of the cotton crop and is considered an essential means of handling the crop, as a hedge, as an insurance to the actual transactions which are taking place between the consumers of cotton and its producers.

Mr. President, if it were necessary I should be glad to discuss this question for two or three hours or for two or three days. A great man from my State, one whom Louisiana and the Nation delights to honor, Edward Douglas White, made a remarkable speech on this floor on this very subject in 1892, about 31 years ago; and, as a cotton grower, as a representative of the cotton section, whose home is 300 miles from New Orleans, who has nothing in common with the exchange, who has nothing in common with the mills, every fiber of whose being is filled with love and interest for the cotton farmer—for that is my sole business at home—I say to you, sirs, that I am proud to emulate White and other men from that section who have stood for the continuance of the exchange under proper regulations.

Senators, all human institutions are faulty; I do not claim perfection for the exchanges; perhaps their methods should be somewhat changed; but, if so, let us approach the change in an orderly and proper manner. We have passed the three bills to which I have referred; we have found it necessary to make slight changes in the law from time to time. Let us approach other modifications in the same way. When the time comes, if it can be shown that changes are needed but not destruction, I promise to help. The men best informed on this subject say that the Dial bill means destruction; your committee in its report says, in substance, that it means destruction. Now, I appeal to the Senate to vote the amendment down, and let us take up the question in regular and proper order at the appropriate time.

APPENDIX.

[Senate Report No. 841, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

TO AMEND SECTION 5 OF THE COTTON FUTURES ACT.

Mr. RANSDELL, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, submitted the following adverse report to accompany S. 385 and S. 3146:

"The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bills (S. 385 and S. 3146) to amend section 5 of the cotton futures act, approved August 11, 1916, as amended, having carefully considered the bills, respectfully reports them back with an unfavorable recommendation. Both bills are attached hereto, and made part hereof.

"These bill have a common authorship, S. 3146 being in the nature of a substitute for S. 385, and broadly stated is intended to revolutionize the method of trading in cotton for future delivery as now conducted under the supervision of the United States Department of Agriculture.

"Your committee wishes to emphasize the fact that with the solitary exception of their author, not a witness appeared in support of these bills from the time the hearings started on Friday, January 20, until they closed on Friday, June 2, although ample opportunity was afforded everyone interested to be heard.

"In striking contrast with this showing, some of the most representative planters, spot-cotton merchants, exporters, and bankers from the cotton-producing States either appeared in person or notified the committee in writing of their unalterable opposition to these bills. Resolutions were received from the spot-cotton exchanges located throughout the South, whose members were no less emphatic than the witnesses for the New Orleans Cotton Exchange in opposition to these bills, or to any material change in the future contract now operating under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture. And finally, representatives from the Department of Agriculture, which is primarily concerned with the welfare of the small cotton farmer, appeared before the committee and placed the stamp of the unqualified disapproval of the Department of Agriculture on S. 385 and S. 3146.

"The evidence adduced by the committee developed that the contract-delivery system as conducted on the New Orleans Cotton Exchange consists of the buying and selling of cotton for future delivery under the United States cotton futures act, as amended March 4, 1919, and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture pursuant thereto.

"The contracts are known as section 5 contracts, as that section of the United States cotton futures act and the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture constitute the limitations thereof. These provide that—

"All contracts made for future delivery on any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business not in conformity with the United States cotton futures act are subject to a tax of 2 cents per pound;

"The contract must specify the basis grade of the cotton involved, which shall be one of the 10 grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture; middling shall be deemed the basis grade if no other grade be specified in the contract;

"All cotton dealt with shall be of or within the grades specified by the Secretary of Agriculture;

"Cotton delivered on such contracts above or below the basis grade must be settled for at actual commercial differences above or below the contract price for the basis grade;

"No cotton shall be delivered that is below low middling or that is reduced below the value of low middling because of defects, and so forth, and is of less than seven-eighths of an inch in length of staple;

"Tenders on contracts must be the full number of bales involved or the equivalent weight thereof, and the person making the tender shall give written notice five business days before delivery to the receiver, and in advance of final settlement must furnish the receiver a written notice or certificate stating the grade of each individual bale and by means of numbers identifying each bale with its grade;

"All cotton delivered must be classed in accordance with the classification, made under the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, by officers of the Government designated by the Secretary for that purpose.

"Under the authority vested in it the Department of Agriculture has standardized spinable catton tenderable on contracts into 10 grades, and subject to the above regulations cotton tendered on future-delivery contracts is inspected and classed by Government officials who issue certificates therefor; in other words, under the law the Government becomes a party to the final settlement of the contracts, insuring the honesty, correctness, and uniformity of such deliveries.

"The author of S. 3146 says frankly that both the old custom, under which future trading in cotton was developed, and the present statute 'have always been wrong,' and in lieu of the present law and the regulations promulgated thereunder by the Secretary of Agriculture he would divide 9 grades into 3 classes, to wit, A, B, and C, with 3 grades in each class, and make the middle class the basis, with a discount for a grade below and a premium for a grade above. He can see no objection whatever to this proposition which limits the tender of the seller from 10 grades to 3 in a given contract; he would require the specific grade to be specified at the time the contract is made; and, finally, he would allow the purchaser and the seller of a contract to each select half of the quantity; but in order to avert the possibility of a corner, either up or down, let them divide each half equally in two or even three grades.

"As has been stated, with the exception of the author not a solitary advocate of this plan appeared to urge its substitution for the existing law. It was pointed out, however, that the present law permits the trading in specific grade contracts under section 10, although such contracts are never made across the future ring, and such contracts are stronger than those provided for in S. 3146.

"With the exception of the author, every witness heard orally and every communication received by mail from representative cotton interests condemned that feature of S. 3146 which would reduce the number of grades allowed in the future contract from 10 to 3. The spot merchants, who deal directly with the growers, pointed out that their purchases necessarily covered a wide range, embracing some 20 or more grades known to the spot trade, and if they were compelled under this bill when selling futures to insure these purchases, to be limited in those future contracts to only 2 or 3 grades, then the future contract used as a legitimate hedge or insurance would cease to function.

"But by far the more vigorous attack upon the proposition to reduce the number of grades and revise the form of contract came from representatives of the United States Department of Agriculture.

"It was pointed out that the present law calls for one form of contract which is the basis of all transactions and provides a continuous market that the spot-cotton trade argues from. It was problematical if the volume of business could be reduced and still provide a continuous market, yet the bill under consideration proposed to divide the present form of contract up into three. If this were done, then the volume of business would be cut into fractions of its present size or there would be a tremendous increase in business to provide the same volume of business in any one of these three forms of contract. The opinion of the departmental spokesman was that the trade would not adopt three forms of contract, and the fact was stressed that the adoption of any form of contract which would reduce the number of tenderable grades would vastly increase the number of bales annually left on the hands of the "aggregate producer." As an illustration of the awful menace threatening the smaller farmer which is involved in any plan which would reduce the number of grades tenderable upon future contracts the department pointed out that in the comparatively recent past when the Senate called upon the Census Bureau for figures showing the quantity of spinable cotton on hand it was shown that there was in storage in the warehouses of the country cotton that was untenderable on future contracts to the extent of 24 per cent of the total.

"The same unanimity of adverse opinion was expressed by all branches of the cotton trade upon the third and remaining feature of the bill, which provides that the purchaser and the seller of a contract each select half of the quantity involved in the contract. The effect of this arrangement, it was contended, would be to restrict the contract to a point where the spot-cotton merchant could not make use of it in connection with his business, and trading in futures as a hedge or insurance for legitimate business transactions would be automatically discontinued.

"As disclosed by their titles, neither S. 385 nor S. 3146 were intended to suppress the two exchanges in this country where future contracts in cotton are dealt in, irrespective of what their ultimate effect upon the trade might be. But in view of the very general interest that has recently been manifested in the subject of future trading in agricultural products and because of the attention that has been bestowed upon certain phases of the question by the judicial as well as the legislative branch of the Government the committee decided to conduct a broad and comprehensive inquiry in the operation of the cotton futures act as amended.

"It is believed that the hearings, embracing a volume of 175 pages, will prove a valuable and timely contribution to the information on a subject that promises to engage the attention of Congress for some time to come.

"The witnesses from the various cotton States, and who were very largely engaged in the spot-cotton business, are recognized throughout the trade as qualified to speak for the interests they represented.

"The communications from the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, dealing with the other phase of the cotton trade, are from officials of that institution whose long and distinguished service in the cause of future trading have made their names household words throughout the civilized world wherever cotton future contracts are traded in.

"The committee has also deemed it advisable to include in the hearings, for the convenience of those who wish to study this question, a summary of the exhaustive discussion of the Comer amendment to the cotton futures act on the floor of the Senate, Friday, April 30, 1920, by Senator JOSEPH E. RANSDELL, of Louisiana, together with the speech of Hon. Edward D. White, of Louisiana (subsequently Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States), in the Senate of the United States, Thursday, July 21, and Friday, July 22, 1892."

A bill to amend section 5 of the United States cotton futures act, approved August 11, 1916, as amended.

"Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the United States cotton futures act, approved August 11, 1916, as amended, be, and the same hereby is, amended as follows:

"In the fourth subdivision of section 5 of said act insert '(a)' after 'fourth' and before 'provide' and add at the end of such fourth subdivision:

"'(b) To provide that unless cotton in the basis grade be tendered in settlement of such contract, the buyer shall have the right to demand that one-half of the amount deliverable under the contract shall be delivered in equal quantity in two grades, to be specified by him, and that the seller shall have the right to tender one-half of the amount deliverable under the contract in equal quantity in two grades to be specified by such seller.'

"The foregoing amendments shall be effective on and after the thirtieth day after the approval of this amendatory act, but nothing herein shall be construed as applicable to contracts entered into prior to the effective date of this amendatory act, or to affect rights acquired or powers exercised thereunder."

[S. 3146, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session. By Senator DIAL.]
A bill to amend section 5 of the United States cotton futures act.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the second subdivision of section 5 of the United States cotton futures act, approved August 11, 1916, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'Second. (a) Specify as the class of the contract one of the following classes:

"'Class A, which shall include only middling fair, strict good middling, good middling, and strict middling grades;

"'Class B, which shall include only strict middling, middling, strict low middling, and good middling yellow tinged grades;

"'Class C, which shall include only strict low middling, low middling, strict middling yellow tinged, and good middling yellow stained grades.

"'(b) Specify the basis grade for the cotton involved in the contract, which shall be one of the grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture, and which shall be one of the grades included within a class in paragraph (a) of this subdivision; the price per pound at which the cotton of such basis grade is contracted to be bought or sold; the date when the purchase or sale was made; and the month or months in which the contract is to be fulfilled or settled.

"'(c) If no other class is specified in the contract, or in the memorandum evidencing the same, the contract shall be deemed a class B contract.

"'(d) If no other basis grade be specified in the contract, or in the memorandum evidencing the same, good middling shall be deemed the basis grade incorporated into a class A contract, middling shall be deemed the basis grade incorporated into a class B contract, and low middling shall be deemed the basis grade incorporated into a class C contract.'

"SEC. 2. That the third subdivision of section 5 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"'Third. Provided that the cotton dealt with therein or delivered thereunder shall be of or within the grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture, and of or within the grades included within the class so specified or incorporated as the class of the contract, and that cotton of any other grade or grades shall not be dealt with therein nor delivered thereunder.'

"SEC. 3. That the fifth subdivision of section 5 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'Fifth. Provided that cotton that, because of the presence of extraneous matter of any character, or irregularities or defects, is reduced in value below that of strict middling in the case of a class A contract, strict low middling in the case of a class B contract, or low middling in the case of a class C contract, the grades mentioned being of the official cotton standards of the United States, or cotton that is less than seven-eighths of an inch in length of staple, or cotton of perished staple or of immature staple, or cotton that is "gin cut" or reginned, or cotton that is "repacked" or "false packed" or "mixed packed" or "water packed," shall not be delivered on, under, or in settlement of such contract.'

"SEC. 4. That the second paragraph of the seventh subdivision of section 5 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'The provisions of the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh subdivisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is signed, the phrase "subject to United States cotton futures act, section 5, class A," if the contract is a class A contract; or the phrase "subject to United States cotton futures act, section 5, class B," if the contract is a class B contract; or the phrase "subject to United States cotton futures act, section 5, class C," if the contract is a class C contract.'

"SEC. 5. That the provisions of this act shall be effective on and after the thirtieth day after its passage, but such provisions shall not be construed as applicable to nor as affecting any right, power, privilege, or immunity under any contract entered into prior to such day."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington and Mr. DIAL addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. KING. I desire to ask the Senator from Louisiana a question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely wish to see if I can not get an agreement. I had hoped that we should be able to dispose of the pending bill to-night. I do not wish to try to bring Senators here now; so I was going to ask unanimous consent that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow, with the understanding and an agreement to that effect that the Senate shall vote on the pending amendment not later than 11.30 o'clock. Could I obtain an agreement of that character?

Mr. DIAL. No; and I hope the Senator will not make the request.

Mr. KING. I suggest to the Senator that he ask that a vote be taken at 1 o'clock.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator from South Carolina be willing to fix a time when we shall come to a vote?

Mr. DIAL. I do not desire to take up much longer the time of the Senate; but I have been absent for four or five days, having been called out of the city, and have just returned. I am very tired and can not proceed to-night. The reason I have not previously offered the amendment is because I have been away. To-morrow I shall only want 10 or 15 minutes, if the Senator from Washington will give me that much time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Would the Senator from South Carolina be willing then to take a vote not later than 12 o'clock?

Mr. DIAL. I suggest that the Senator make it 1 o'clock, as some other Senator might wish to speak.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Washington will yield to me, I desire to say that I do not think the pending amendment will consume a great deal of time in discussion to-morrow. I think, perhaps, it would be better to take a recess now and to-morrow resume the consideration of the bill, without an attempt to agree upon a time for a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Might we not fix a later hour at which to vote on the pending amendment?

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall not object to voting at 1 o'clock or even before that time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest that the vote be taken not later than 1 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the discussion shall have been concluded prior to that time, so far as I am concerned, I shall not object to a vote, but I do not believe it will be necessary to take a recess until 11 o'clock.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We have had this amendment under consideration now for about three hours, although it is a proposition that really is not germane to the bill. I do not want to press the matter unduly, and I do not think I have, but I think that the Senate ought to be willing to recess until 11 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall object to any unanimous-consent agreement for a recess until 11 o'clock; but I shall not object to any arrangement the Senator from Washington may be able to effectuate if he contemplates a recess until 12 o'clock.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish we might agree upon the proposition which has been made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. I gave notice last night that I wished to have taken up to-day an important appropriation bill, and I had hoped that it might be considered. It is rather necessary that the appropriation bill should be passed to-morrow, but I do not wish to move to displace any other measure.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is no objection to the Senator taking up the bill at 12 o'clock; but I think it unnecessary to begin at this time the practice of recessing until 11 o'clock and I shall object to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator that if the Senate shall agree to vote on this amendment at not later than 1 o'clock I am willing to propose a recess until 12.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to that arrangement.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent, then, Mr. President, that when the Senate closes its session to-day it recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow, and that we vote on this amendment not later than 1 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to say only a very few words. The senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is not here; I understand that some members of his family are sick; and I want to say a few words. I do not think I shall consume over 10 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that the Senator get recognition now and go on to-morrow, and take such portion of the time as he desires.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then, Mr. President, I ask for recognition now, that I may be recognized in the morning, so that I can proceed the first thing in the morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

The agreement was reduced to writing, as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow, and that at not later than 1 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Thursday, January 18, 1923, the Senate will proceed to vote without further debate upon the pending amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to Senate bill 4280.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have only one other amendment that I want to offer to this bill. So far as I know, it will not take a very great while.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator desire to offer the amendment now?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I simply want to let the Senator know that there is another amendment pending.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 5 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously made, took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, January 18, 1923, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 17 (legislative day of January 16), 1923.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 17, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

By faith, by love, and by hope, our Heavenly Father, may we be joined to Thee. As Thou art an infinite God, we believe that all good work is immortal. As through Thy mercy our days are renewed, O renew our strength unto all good things that make for righteousness and peace. May each morning be a new call to duty, and help us to blend all our privileges with gratitude and humility. Spare us from being afraid of our deepest convictions. Bless all who sow in tears, and some happy moment may they reap in joy. Through Christ, our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last evening there were 11 minutes remaining to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, we will not use that time. I ask that the Clerk read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENCIES OF THE ARMY.

For all contingent expenses of the Army not otherwise provided for and embracing all branches of the military service, including the office of the Chief of Staff; for all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, including the employment of translators and exclusive of all other personal services in the War Department or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., or in the Army at large, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, to be expended on the approval or authority of the Secretary of War, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, including the payment of a per diem allowance not to exceed $4, in lieu of subsistence, to employees of the War Department traveling on official business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated posts, $62,980: Provided, That not to exceed $34,980 of the money herein appropriated shall be expended for the payment of salaries of civilian employees connected with the sale of war supplies and the adjustment of war contracts and claims: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for the payment of expenses connected with the transfer of surplus property of the War Department to any other activity of the Government where the articles or lots of articles to be transferred are located at any place at which the total surplus quantities of the same commodity are so small that their transfer would not, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, be economical: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated or made available under this act shall be used for the payment of any salary in excess of $5,000 per annum to any civilian employee in the War Department, unless otherwise specifically provided by law.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, on page 11 of the bill I notice that the Clerk read "$34,980." On my copy of the committee print of the bill, which originally provided not to exceed $67,000, I have it marked that we reduced it to $30,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. If my memory is correct, we reduced the item $15,000 and changed the figures from $49,980 to $34,980 to reflect that reduction of $15,000.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman may be correct about it. I have it marked $30,000 in my copy of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY POST EXCHANGES.

For continuing the construction, equipment, and maintenance of suitable buildings at military posts and stations, for the conduct of the post exchange, school, reading, lunch, amusement rooms; for the conduct and maintenance of libraries, service clubs, chapels, and gymnasiums, including repairs to buildings erected at private cost, in the operation of the act approved May 31, 1902, and including salaries and travel for civilians employed in the hostess and library services, and for transportation of books and equipment for these services; for the rental of films, purchase of slides, for and making repairs to moving-picture outfits and for similar and other recreational purposes at training and mobilization camps now established, or which may be hereafter established, $75,000: Provided, That not to exceed $30,000 from this appropriation may be expended for the conduct and maintenance of libraries and not to exceed $30,000 may be expended for the conduct and maintenance of hostess houses: Provided further, That no person paid from this appropriation shall receive a total salary at a rate exceeding $3,500 per annum and not more than two may be employed at $3,500 per annum each.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCKENZIE: On page 9, line 19, after the word "each," change the period to a colon and add the following: "Provided further, That hereafter civilians employed in the hostess and library services and paid from the appropriation for military post exchanges may be appointed by the Secretary of War without reference to civil-service rules and regulations."

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, the incorporating of hostess houses in the Military Establishment is something rather new and novel, but it has been found to be a very great advantage, and the War Department feels that it should be continued. The Committee on Appropriations have appropriated the money for the continuance of the same, but when it comes to selecting the proper persons to be put in charge of these hostess houses they have found that it would be infinitely better if they had the privilege of making that selection without having to apply to the Civil Service Commission to have some one certified. That is the only purpose of this amendment. I think it ought to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORGANIZED RESERVES.

Officers' Reserve Corps: For pay and allowances of reserve officers called to active duty for 15 days' training, $900,000; for pay of reserve officers called to active duty for more than 15 days in accordance with law, $200,000; for mileage, $250,000; in all, $1,350,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on page 9, line 25, to strike out the figures "$1,350,000" and insert "$5,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL: Page 9, line 25, strike out the figures "$1,350,000" and insert "$5,000,000."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, of all the appropriations which we make for the national defense that which we make for the Officers' Reserve Corps accomplishes more for less money than any other appropriation. We have to-day in the Officers' Reserve Corps 69,000 officers. Of that number we ought to train one-half every year, so that every officer in the corps would receive training every two years. Unfortunately, as I understand it, only 17,000 of the 69,000 have applied for training next year. To train the 17,000 men will take $5,000,000. If you cut that to $1,350,000 you can not train one-half of the men who have applied for training next year. At that rate you would not give training in six years' time to the 69,000 men that you have in the corps. It is the testimony of all experts—and with that testimony I agree—that unless you train these officers every two years they become obsolete and practically of no value. The lesson of the recent war was that we did not have trained officers. The great cost of the war in the lives of our boys was due to the fact that many of them went out to fight under officers who were not properly trained. If you do not train these reserve officers you must train regulars, and regulars cost fifteen to twenty times as much money as it costs to train these officers in the reserve corps. The training lasts only two weeks. Surely if these men who come out of civil life and offer to devote two weeks to the training that is necessary for them to remain efficient trained officers, we ought to give them the money that will make it possible for them to receive the training. I do not think it is necessary to have any lengthy debate on this. It is admitted by the chairman of the committee that they have not provided enough money in the bill to take care of the men who have asked for training. The amount of money that I propose will simply train the men who have asked for the privilege.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is exceedingly generous in his application of Treasury funds. He has only asked to raise this item from a little over $1,000,000 to $5,000,000, about double what the War Department is asking for, for this activity. I do not know where he proposes to get the money. Probably he proposes to raise it out among his Iowa farmers.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The inmates of the Rock Island Arsenal might help the gentleman.

Mr. ANTHONY. Probably that would be a very good source of revenue. But in regard to training of reserve officers I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that of the $1,000,000 appropriated for the purpose of the Organized Reserve last year there is $381,000 remaining unexpended to-day. The committee has increased the appropriations available for training the reserve officers until we are going to train nearly double the number who were trained during the current year; and with our experience during this year, when the department was unable to use all the funds we appropriated, we feel sure that we have been exceedingly liberal in the treatment of this activity. There is no disposition on the part of the committee to hamper a reasonable amount of training for reserve officers, but we think it would be extremely inadvisable to go to the limit suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL.]

Mr. HULL. Will the chairman state the full amount appropriated for training camps for reserve officers under the bill? It occurs in several items.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Maryland to the fact that last year the mileage for the reserve officers was taken out of the mileage of the Army, but this year we appropriate directly for the mileage of the reserve officers, so there is an appropriation of $250,000 and over for that purpose.

Mr. HILL. I understood that this year there would be money available for training about 11,000 reserve officers.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that is about the number that will be covered.

Mr. HILL. I want to say that I propose to offer an amendment on page 9, striking out $900,000 and inserting in lieu thereof $1,746,709. I would like to ask the gentleman how many the War Department plans to train under that request.

Mr. ANTHONY. About 15,000, and the gentleman from Iowa wants to train 35,000. The committee proposes to train about 11,000.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. I understood the gentleman to say yesterday that this item provided for sufficient funds to enable the department to train all the men that it was in a position to train at this time.

Mr. ANTHONY. In connection with all the other training activities, we thought it was a full program for the Army.

Mr. ROACH. There would be no necessity, then, for increasing the amount carried in the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think if we go on at 100 per cent increase it is very liberal.

Mr. ROACH. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by making it read "$3,000,000" instead of "$5,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 25, strike out the figures "$1,350,000" and insert "$3,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Page 9, line 23, strike out the figures "$900,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,746,709."

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the printed hearings show that the committee went very fully into the matter of training the Reserve Corps. My proposed amendment is the amount the War Department asked for, providing training for 15,000 officers. I understand from the chairman of the committee that the amount recommended by it will train over 11,000 officers. I think there should be 15,000 trained, but I am glad to see that the committee has doubled the number of officers to be trained next year over those trained this year.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is hardly necessary, Mr. Chairman, for me to add anything to what has been said by the chairman of the subcommittee. The proposal of the gentleman from Maryland would increase the estimates of the department by more than $200,000. The hearings before the committee show that the total was $1,746,000, and that not only included the training at the small camps but also the training at the Army school for more than 15 days, for which we appropriate $200,000.

Mr. HILL. And the $200,000 is included in that amount?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to reduce the amount in my amendment by $200,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 23, strike out the figures "$900,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,546,709."

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am not certain whether the amount carried in this paragraph is sufficient to train 11,000 reserve officers or not. I sincerely hope that it is. My judgment in regard to this matter is that we should provide sufficient money to train every reserve officer who desires to be trained. I think that is money well spent. There is nothing that we can do in this country that will do so much in preparedness for war as to have a well-organized and trained body of officers, and you can not do that, you can not keep the morale of the officers who desire to be trained to a proper standard, unless you give the officers the training that they are entitled to and need. I think it is fair to assume that the propaganda we have been hearing about on this matter is a fair and honorable propaganda. It is brought to us on the part of the men themselves.

There is no question but what we are penny-wise and pound-foolish unless we provide sufficient money to train all of the officers who desire to be trained.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. SNYDER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of the sum total appropriated last year there is to-day remaining $381,000 unexpended.

Mr. SNYDER. That may be true.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the officers were not trained it was not due to lack of appropriation by Congress.

Mr. SNYDER. That may be so. It may be that last year arrangements could not be made so quickly to take care of the great number of reserve officers we found in the Reserve Corps, but there can not be any question about that now, and if the managers of our Army down here are not keeping in step with this situation it is not the fault of the reserve officers. They should take the money we provide for that purpose and put themselves in a position to use it, and if they do not do it they ought to be reprimanded for it. Everyone in this House knows that I have always been an advocate of preparedness. The first thing I did when I came into this House eight years ago was to drop a bill into the basket authorizing the expenditure of a half billion dollars to be divided equally between the Army and the Navy for the purpose of preparing the country for war that was imminent at that time, and if that had been done and the money had been expended for the necessaries of war this country would have saved a few years later more than a billion dollars in the purchase of the same items.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is it known how many officers will want training during the next year?

Mr. SNYDER. My understanding is that 17,000 have applied for training now.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is that the information of the committee?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think that 17,000 have directly applied, but a questionnaire has been sent out and they have endeavored to recruit the number of officers for training purposes, and either 17,000 or 19,000 have indicated their desire to be trained.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What does the committee propose to do with the seven or eight thousand not covered by the appropriation?

Mr. ANTHONY. We think they can well wait another year to get their training, and that in training 11,000 it is a very good start.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to pursue the inquiry a little further?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. How long since those seven or eight thousand men have had any training?

Mr. ANTHONY. I presume most of them got their training during the war, but 2,900 have come in during the last year, fresh from the schools and colleges, graduates of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps training. I do not think there is any necessity for training these men every year.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is not the purpose of my inquiry. I am trying to find out whether there are seven or eight thousand men who want training and have not had it since the war.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think there are seven or eight thousand men who are clamoring for training.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I have great confidence in the ability of the distinguished chairman of this subcommittee. I have no doubt that he has made a careful study of this proposition, but it seems to me there is no activity of the Army wherein we can get so much for so little as we can by keeping our reserve officers trained as they should be for service, and I think we ought to provide every year to give training to not only those who are desirous of having training but as many more as this Congress believes should be trained, so that they may be in a position to train troops at any time they might be called upon to do so. I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] unless it can be shown that sufficient money is provided here for the purpose of training all officers who decide to be trained this year.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I heartily agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER]. According to the statement made by the chairman of the committee, there will be at least eight or nine thousand of these reserve officers who can not be trained and who have received no training since they went out of the service. If we are to take advantage of the opportunity we now have of keeping these reserve officers in training, we should give them an opportunity each year to continue the work. If they have the opportunity now, they will take advantage of it and do this work. If you postpone it for four or five years, it may be possible they may lose interest in it and you will not get their service.

I want to say a word about the statement of the chairman of the subcommittee relative to this propaganda. This is not propaganda. As stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], it is an honest desire on the part of these reserve officers to take their training every year and to keep abreast of the latest there is in military matters.

As suggested by the gentleman from New York, I believe we will make a mistake if we refuse to give these officers the opportunity to continue this training. It has now been more than three years since some of them have had this training, and at least 9,000 of them can not have any training this year. My judgment is that you can multiply that 9,000 several times and still be within the limit of those who desire to continue the training. I am heartily in favor of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Maryland, and I believe if these officers are willing to devote their time to the interest of the Government we can afford to pay their expenses in order to keep these reserve officers well trained.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I want the House to know and understand the liberal spirit with which the committee has treated the growth of these requests for training activities outside of the Regular Army. In the year 1916 there was appropriated the sum of $4,000,000 all told for training camps, reserves, Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and training in the National Guard. During last year there was appropriated $35,895,000 for this purpose. This year the amount will be greater, so that it is a continual growth and augmentation of these activities, and we must not complain of the increased cost in this bill if we allow these expenses to expand beyond a reasonable amount each year. The committee has endeavored to meet this growing demand for training in a reasonable way. It does not believe that the matter should be allowed to get entirely out of control.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. As I look through the list of Officers' Reserve Corps, enlisted reserve corps, divisional and regimental headquarters, camp maintenance, reserve officers' training camp, ordnance stores, military supplies, and civilian military training camps I find there is a total in the Budget estimate of $10,200,759. That has been reduced by the committee to $7,140,220. The committee seems to have taken off a third from almost every item, and from the Officers' Reserve Corps the allowance is reduced from the Budget estimate of $1,746,709 to $1,100,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is correct.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It seems to me the committee has been much less liberal than the Budget.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is true. We have pruned the figures of the Budget.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I should think the committee has.

Mr. ANTHONY. On this question of the reserve officers the Army wants to train 15,000; and the committee thinks that 11,000, 100 per cent more than were trained this year, will be sufficient.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Has Camp Des Moines, Iowa, been shortpotted or mistreated in any way by the committee?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think not. There is no specific appropriation for the camp, but I understand there will be another reserve officers' camp at Des Moines, Iowa, this coming summer.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. SNYDER. It was stated, I think, by the gentleman that only slightly over 5,000 officers were trained last year?

Mr. ANTHONY. A little less than that. There is $318,000 of the appropriation unused.

Mr. SNYDER. But from now until next July the balance will be used up or could be used? Does the gentleman know whether all the officers who desired to be trained last year were trained or not?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; it was a new activity, and undoubtedly they did not train all the officers who desired to be trained.

Mr. SNYDER. I recall during the periods of 1916 and 1917, when we were getting ready to go to war, we fellows who were in favor of preparedness met up with this same sort of proposition in regard to things that ought to have been done to get us ready for war. Now, I do not see any war on the horizon at the present time, but I think this is the cheapest way we can go ahead and prepare for war.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does the gentleman from New York realize that with the appropriation in this bill the Regular Army during the coming summer will have about 250,000 men on its hands to train, including the National Guard; and there will be tremendous training activities going on in this country, more men under arms than ever before in the history of the country? Now, do not let us overdo it.

Mr. SNYDER. That sounds well; but when we get back home and see how difficult it is to get these fellows in the Army to train, and everything, I fear there is going to be less than 250,000 this year under proper training.

Mr. ANTHONY. The money is here for them.

Mr. SNYDER. Unless they are encouraged to do it by reasonable treatment on the part of the Military Committee.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. How does this appropriation compare with the request made of the subcommittee?

Mr. ANTHONY. The Budget estimate, as I have stated, provided training for about 15,000 and this appropriation we make will train about 11,000.

Mr. HILL. The difference in amount between my amendment and that carried in the bill is $646,709.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking the gentleman a question. I would like to ask the chairman if he does not think it would tend to discourage men from entering the Officers' Reserve Corps and remaining in the Officers' Reserve Corps if we do not make reasonable provision for the training of those officers who want training and whom the War Department say they have the facilities to train? If men enter the reserve corps and want training, men who are really interested and want to become efficient officers, and they are told by the War Department they can take care of, say, 17,000 officers, and you make provision for only 11,000, does not the gentleman think these officers will be rather discouraged? Desirable men will not want to stay in and other men will not want to come in. They will realize they can not be trained in the reserve corps. They may be willing to accept the situation if they are convinced that the Army can not assimilate them rapidly enough to furnish training for all who want it, but if they are told by the Army that they can take care of them and Congress refuses to make the necessary appropriation, it seems to me it would have the tendency to discourage them and to weaken interest in the Officers' Reserve Corps.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the gentleman hit the nail on the head when he said "reasonable provision," and that is what the committee has tried to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported? Was the amendment changed?

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. ANTHONY) there were—ayes 27, noes 33.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

On the vote by tellers, Mr. DOWELL and Mr. HILL reported there were—ayes 29, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13593) making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. STERLING, Mr. MCKELLAR, and Mr. HARRIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 13511) granting the consent of Congress to the city of St. Paul, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

RESERVE OFFICERS' TRAINING CORPS.

For the procurement, maintenance, and issue, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, to institutions at which one or more units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained, of such public animals, means of transportation, supplies, tentage, equipment, and uniforms as he may deem necessary, and to forage at the expense of the United States public animals so issued, and to pay commutation in lieu of uniforms at a rate to be fixed annually by the Secretary of War; for transporting said animals and other authorized supplies and equipment from place of issue to the several institutions and training camps and return of same to place of issue when necessary; for the establishment and maintenance of camps for the further practical instruction of the members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and for transporting members of such corps to and from such camps, and to subsist them while traveling to and from such camps and while remaining therein, so far as appropriations will permit; or in lieu of transporting them to and from such camps and subsisting them while en route to pay them travel allowance at the rate of 5 cents per mile for the distance by the shortest usually traveled route from the places from which they are authorized to proceed to the camp and for the return travel thereto, and to pay the return travel pay in advance of the actual performance of the travel; for pay for students attending advanced camps at the rate prescribed for soldiers of the seventh grade of the Regular Army; for the payment of commutation of subsistence to members of the senior division of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, at a rate not exceeding the cost of the garrison ration prescribed for the Army, as authorized in the act approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act approved June 4, 1920, $3,250,000, to remain available until December 31, 1924: Provided, That uniforms and other equipment or material issued to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps in accordance with law shall be furnished from surplus or reserve stocks of the War Department without payment from this appropriation, except for actual expense incurred in the manufacture or issue, in so far as said stocks are in excess of actual requirements of the Regular Army for the fiscal year 1924: Provided further, That in no case shall the amount paid from this appropriation for uniforms, equipment, or material furnished to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps from stocks under the control of the War Department be in excess of the price current at the time the issue is made: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for the organization or maintenance of additional mounted, motor transport, tank, or air units in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps: Provided further, That not to exceed $10,000 of the total appropriated by this act may be expended for the transportation of authorized Reserve Officers' Training Corps students who may be competitors in the national rifle match, and to subsist them while traveling to and from said match and while remaining thereat.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The appropriation contained in this section for the Reserve Officers' Training Corps is $3,250,000. I would like to ask the chairman how many that will train under the plan submitted?

Mr. ANTHONY. This is an appropriation to take care of training in schools and colleges; and the figures show that during the current year there were 103,999 in training, of which 9,796 were in the advanced course.

It is estimated that there will be 110,000 in training during the next fiscal year; and this appropriation will take care of that number, because we provide for the use of reserve stocks of the Army in addition to these appropriations.

Mr. HILL. This takes care of what are known as the "red, white, and blue" courses, does it not?

Mr. ANTHONY. No. You have civilian military training in your mind. It is for schools and colleges entirely, and for the summer training camps of those who are being trained in schools and colleges.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CIVILIAN MILITARY TRAINING CAMPS.

For furnishing, at the expense of the United States, to warrant officers, enlisted men, and civilians attending training camps maintained under the provisions of section 47–d of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, uniforms, including altering, fitting, washing, and cleaning when necessary, subsistence, and transportation, or in lieu of such transportation and of subsistence for travel to and from camps, travel allowances at 5 cents per mile, as prescribed in said section 47–d; for such expenditures as are authorized by said section 47–d as may be necessary for the establishment and maintenance of said camps, $2,000,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1923, to remain available until December 31, 1924: Provided, That the funds herein appropriated shall not be used for the training of any person who is over 27 years of age: Provided further, That uniforms and other equipment or material furnished in accordance with law for use at civilian military training camps shall be furnished from surplus or reserve stocks of the War Department without payment from this appropriation, except for actual expense incurred in the manufacture or issue, in so far as said stocks are in excess of actual requirements of the Regular Army for the fiscal year 1924: Provided further, That in no case shall the amount paid from this appropriation for uniforms, equipment, or material furnished in accordance with law for use at civilian military training camps from stocks under control of the War Department be in excess of the price current at the time the issue is made.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HILL. This appropriates $2,000,000 as against $2,972,150 asked for, but the report of the committee states that in addition to the $2,000,000 there is an unexpended balance from the appropriation for 1923. How much is that unexpended balance?

Mr. ANTHONY. There is an unexpended balance from the current year's appropriation of approximately $500,000, which the committee makes available for use next year in addition to this $2,000,000 appropriation; and in addition to that we give them authority to use the surplus and reserve stocks of the War Department, so that there is approximately $3,000,000 available.

Mr. HILL. So that this item is really more than the department asked for, or is it practically the same?

Mr. ANTHONY. The department asked for $2,972,150. It is simply a question of how much they will get out of the surplus and reserve.

Mr. HILL. But you do give them about $500,000 of an unexpended balance, which makes approximately $2,500,000 without the reserve stocks?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; and it is our understanding that the department will use it in preparing the camps this year in anticipation of the summer work.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

FINANCE DEPARTMENT.

PAY, ETC., OF THE ARMY.

Pay of officers: For pay of officers of the line and staff, $31,214,358.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL: Page 16, line 9, after the figures "$31,214,358," insert: "Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used to pay for the allowance or subsistence of any captain promoted after the passage of this act in the Army until all first lieutenants in the Army otherwise eligible who were demoted from the grade of captain under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 30, 1922, as amended by the act of September 14, 1922, shall be promoted to the grade of captain in advance of officers who were serving in the grade of first lieutenant on June 30, 1920, notwithstanding the names of some of those demoted captains are carried on the promotion list below the names of some first lieutenants."

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary to argue the point of order. I am sure that this amendment comes within the Holman rule. It is a limitation and will save money.

I want to say, however, that that is not the main object of the amendment. The real object of this amendment is to do an act of justice to about 200 officers who have been demoted. It comes about in this way: In 1920 we passed the Army reorganization act, and, due to that act, they reorganized the Army and placed certain men in certain grades and with compensating rank. We permitted them to place men who had had World War experience as they saw fit, according to the efficiency that those officers had shown during the war. Now they took a great number of National Guard officers and others and placed them above some who had had longer service records. It was due to their actual efficiency as officers, as demonstrated in the World War. I am sure you will all agree that this was wise.

Now, we passed later on a single list line of promotion. It is a very complicated affair. I believe that it is a good piece of legislation. It was designed to do away with the jealousy between the different corps in the Army, and all the Army officers were placed on a single list line of promotion. Now, when they placed them there they placed them according to length of service. Some who were captains in the Army at that time were placed below certain first lieutenants. Afterwards we passed what was known as the Anthony bill, which called for demotions, and they had to demote some of these captains.

Now, when they demoted these captains to first lieutenants they were on the single list, and in some 200 cases, as I understand it, they were placed below men who had never been a captain. Now, unless you adopt an amendment like this, this will happen in the Army: Some who have never been captains will be promoted to captains before those captains who have been demoted have been restored to the rank they held. I am sure all gentlemen will admit that this is a rank injustice.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Is this amendment introduced for the purpose of preventing maladministration in the War Department?

Mr. HULL. No. It is to remedy a condition that was not contemplated when the original acts were passed. I do not think that anyone can blame the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Appropriations or the War Department. It is just one of those things that happen, an actual injustice that should be corrected by a piece of legislation like this. And I want to say that this will save money, but I am not asking it on account of the saving of money. I am asking it simply as an act of justice.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. I am in favor of the gentleman's proposal, but does not the gentleman think this would be a good time to rearrange and do justice to other classes in addition to the classes he has mentioned wherein injustice has occurred along the same lines?

Mr. HULL. I will vote for any amendment that the gentleman will propose that will correct an act of injustice if it is not within a point of order. But I have given up the idea of the possibility of correcting in a million years all the injustices that have been committed in time of war.

Mr. KINDRED. Then the gentleman is not an optimist?

Mr. HULL. Not as to correcting injustices done in war. War is always wrong and unjust.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a point of order reserved. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois will be recognized for five minutes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Gentlemen of the committee, this is a rather important proposition, and one that has in it a very great deal of justice to a certain class of Army officers. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] was a little mistaken when he said all of the officers in the Army were put upon the single list. That is not correct so far as the chaplains and the medical officers are concerned, but the officers of the other organizations were placed upon the single list, and they were placed in the order of their length of service, time being the measure by which they were placed upon that single list.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BRIGGS. When they were placed on the single promotion list according to length of service, that was irrespective of the branch of the service, too, was it not?

Mr. McKENZIE. Oh, yes. When the Anthony amendment was adopted, requiring the elimination from the commissioned personnel of the Army of a certain number of officers and the demotion of others in order to bring the number within 12,000, it was found necessary to demote a great many captains. Their commissions as captains were surrendered, and they were commissioned as first lieutenants, and they now find themselves in the grade of first lieutenants. But there was a provision attached to that which provided that their pay should not be reduced, and under the pay bill the grade does not control the pay of an Army officer, but the length of service now controls.

The only point really involved in this matter is that when a vacancy occurs in the grade of captain under the law the senior first lieutenant moves into that vacancy. I do not know how the gentleman has his amendment prepared, whether he has the language just as it should be or not, but the purpose of it is to promote one of these men now serving as first lieutenants who was demoted from the grade of captain, and that they shall proceed along that line until all of these officers now serving as first lieutenants and who were formerly captains shall be promoted into the grade of captain over the officers who are serving in the grade of first lieutenant. That is all there is to this amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLACK. I wish to see if I understand the principle of the single list correctly. Suppose a man is serving as captain in the Cavalry and he dies and a vacancy is created by reason of his death. Would a man who is serving in the Infantry be promoted to fill that vacancy?

Mr. McKENZIE. My good friend from Texas is thinking of days long since gone by, when officers were commissioned in the Artillery or the Cavalry or the Infantry. Now they are commissioned in the Army of the United States and detailed to these various branches.

Mr. BLACK. I know, but a man who had served in the Cavalry might have a special qualification for that service. I understand that under this proposition they might take a man out of the Infantry or take him out of the Quartermaster's Department and commission him to fill that vacancy caused by the death of a captain in the Cavalry.

Mr. McKENZIE. No; it means this, that if a captain who has served in the Cavalry dies, that makes a vacancy in the grade of captain, and the senior first lieutenant will move up into that grade.

Mr. BLACK. Regardless of what branch he has been serving in?

Mr. McKENZIE. Regardless of the branch.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Let me see if I understand it. There are some men now holding commissions as first lieutenants who were formerly captains?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. When they were given the rank of captains originally they were selected on account of merit?

Mr. McKENZIE. That is the understanding.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And then it was found necessary to demote them after the war?

Mr. McKENZIE. Under the Anthony amendment.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Now, in filling these vacancies the idea is to take these men who have shown their ability and capacity to be captains, who have earned their standing by merit, instead of promoting over them or instead of them some first lieutenants who have never shown any capacity?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes. I will simply say to the gentleman from Michigan that there has been a proposal made to reinstate those captains, but to carry them on a single list of their own as surplus captains. You will remember that the legislation that we enacted on the appropriation bill provided for the arrangement of the officers in all of the grades within 12,000. Now, if we should put these men in as captains, we would have more captains than are provided for in the law, but the proposition has been made that they be carried as surplus. That would increase the expense of the Government; but the plan suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] simply provides that as vacancies occur in the grade of captain, those captains who are now serving as first lieutenants, having been demoted from the grade of captain, shall have the first right to promotion into the vacancies as captains.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. As I understand, those captains who were demoted are now drawing the pay of captains?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. And this does not change their pay, but simply puts them back to their former status and rank?

Mr. McKENZIE. That is it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the point of order which I reserved, I want to make this statement, with the Chair's permission: I have no comment to make on the merits of the proposition, but will address myself to the point of order. I sincerely believe that we are making a mistake in the committee and in the House by repeatedly incorporating legislation on appropriation bills. I think we should curtail the power of the Committee on Appropriations rather than enlarge it; decrease rather than increase the practice which has been growing of placing legislation on appropriation bills in the guise of limitations or as direct legislative enactments. I grant that the effort to incorporate legislative provisions upon these bills when made from the floor by Members not members of the Appropriations Committee is not so distasteful as when the effort is inaugurated by the committee itself, but in either case it is unwise, in my opinion, and contrary to our practice and procedure.

In my judgment, this amendment is clearly subject to a point of order. I do not think it can be shown, as argued by its sponsor, that it makes on its face such a saving to the Federal Treasury as to bring it within the protection of the Holman rule. I think the amendment, by including directions for the conduct of officers, makes it not a limitation as such, but legislation and therefore repugnant to the rule. According to section 3854, of volume 4, Hinds, a proposition to establish affirmative directions for an executive officer constitutes legislation and is not in order on a general appropriation bill. My own feeling is that the time has come when we should look with disfavor upon these provisions which propose in reality legislation in substance, if not in form, on appropriation bills. If I were voicing my own sentiments merely, in view of my personal feeling and in line with decisions of the Chair, I would make a point of order against the amendment, but my friends on the great Military Committee who have studied the needs of this proposition have convinced me that it is absoutely essential, and, therefore, I am going to be inconsistent, and instead of making the point of order, which I think should be made, I make a protest instead. In view of the persuasive appeal of my friends and in deference to their knowledge of the necessity of this amendment, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no objection to the amendment that has just been offered. I would like, however, to have the House understand that this legislation comes from outside the committee, and if the gentlemen who offer it desire to use this appropriation bill as a vehicle for what I consider is a meritorious amendment I am glad to accept it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 9, after the figures "$31,214,358," strike out the period and insert a colon and add the following: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended to pay any officer who in peace time permits any man under 21 years of age to be enlisted without the parents' knowledge or consent.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to that. This amendment can not be placed in the bill at the point suggested, because there has been another amendment adopted at that place.

Mr. BLANTON. My amendment should come in after the other amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. May we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again reported the amendment, as follows:

Page 16, line 9, after the last amendment, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended to pay any officer who in peace time permits any man under 21 years of age to be enlisted without the parents' knowledge and consent."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Kansas reserve points of order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kansas on the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, it is my opinion that the amendment is a limitation.

Mr. BLANTON. It is clearly a limitation, and it would be in order if it were not.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas withdraw his reservation of a point of order?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I started this fight some time ago with my friend from New York [Mr. HICKS] against enlisting men under 21 years of age against the consent of their parents, and I think we ought to carry the fight on to a finish. There is hardly a week passes that I do not get a communication from some parent objecting to their minor son being in the service. In war time the Government has the right, if they are needed, if the Government exhausts the man power and needs the minor, it has a right to take my minor boy or yours, but in peace time the Government ought not to have that right. I do not know of any State that denies to the mother and father of the youth of this land the supervision of their boy until he is 21 years of ago. I think every State gives that right to the parents. Every State gives to the parents the right of the service of their sons until they are 21 years of age, and yet in peace time we let the Army officers go into the homes of our constituents and enlist their boys under 21 years of age continually without the knowledge and consent of the parents.

The parents are holding us responsible and they ought to hold us responsible. I know the present law permits the Army and Navy to enlist boys 18 years of age, but they enlist them under 18 years of age. I had that question up here with the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] some weeks ago over a boy who had been enlisted at the age of 15 years, and his parents had tried for months to get him out without success. After I had those several colloquies with my friend from New York here on the floor, I am thankful to say that within the last two weeks they have sent the young boy Bradshaw home, and he is at home now with an honorable discharge.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. Has the gentleman had within recent times any great deal of trouble in securing the release of boys who have gone into the Navy who have lied about their ages?

Mr. BLANTON. That is an unkind reference to these boys by the gentleman from New York. If the gentleman knew some of the mothers that I know he would not make that statement. Here is what happens. A slick-tongued recruiting officer goes to your or my home town. He has all sorts of advertisements about the sea and the world that appeal to the unsophisticated country boy 15, 16, 17, or 18 years of age. By the blandishments of this recruiting officer he is persuaded to enlist. When the boy goes to enlist he reads down the paper and note, "This says that I am swearing that I am 18 years of age." "Oh, that is all right," says the recruiting officer, "go on and sign." That has happened in many cases, and so far as the oath is concerned, there is no oath administered lots of times. There is no oath administered to impress the boy that he is swearing to a lie. He does not realize that he is swearing to a lie. He is imposed upon. He wants to see the world and goes and enlists, and his mother later appeals to the officers—if it is the Navy, to the Bureau of Navigation—to discharge him, and the bureau says your boy swore to a lie, we probably will have to take action against him, and intimates that he may be tried and given a dishonorable discharge.

Mr. KINDRED. May I suggest that I have had a number of cases where I am much concerned to secure the release, and I have found the Government in recent times has been very desirous to comply with the wishes of the dependent parents.

Mr. BLANTON. Not on the question of dependency, but if you can show that they are under 18 years of age and you get up here and fight, as I did, you can get them released finally; but suppose they are over 18 years of age, what is the fact then? Just this morning I received a letter from a farmer in my district. He owns a little farm and he owes a debt upon it. He can barely make a living. His main dependence was a boy just over 18 years of age. The boy enlisted not long ago, and now he wants that boy.

Mr. SNYDER. Does the boy want to get out?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; the boy wants to get out, since now he finds out that the glamour of travel is gone. I can not get that boy out, because the man can not make the proper affidavit of dependency. I have just written him to say that his boy can not be gotten out, because the father is not dependent upon him in the sense the Army requires he should be, in that he has a farm—although he owes debts upon it, he is not dependent on this boy entirely for his support—notwithstanding he is a youth only 18 years of age. I want to reach just such cases as that.

Mr. KINDRED. May I ask if the department has not been liberal in its construction of those conditions?

Mr. BLANTON. It has stood on the letter of the law in many cases.

Mr. KINDRED. I have found it has not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. I would like to bring to the attention of the gentleman for what it is worth a case of the kind that he has been describing. I know of a woman at home who has three sons. All entered the Army. She asked me to get her son released. I found the boy was just 17 years of age. I sent for the boy and I told him that he had made an affidavit that he was 18 years of age. He told me that he told the officer he was not 18, and he said the officer told him, "That is all right; we will take care of that."

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, that has happened, I dare say, in every district in the United States. There are hundreds of just such instances. If they are over 18 years of age you can not get them out in most cases unless the parents are absolutely dependent upon them. Therefore, my amendment reaches just such cases. It provides that if they want to enlist boys under 21 years of age they must get the consent of their parents first, and if their parents are willing, well and good. Lots of parents are willing to have their boys go in. That is all right, but unless their mothers and fathers are willing to have those minor boys go into the service they ought not to be taken by the Government in time of peace, and that is as far as my amendment goes. What excuse are we going to offer our constituents at home for not stopping this? My amendment will stop it. Why not adopt it? When you go back home and some mother comes to you and asks you why you did not stop it, stating that you had an opportunity, what excuse are you going to offer for permitting the Army to take their minor boys without their knowledge and consent?

Mr. FOCHT. Is it correct that these recruiting sergeants get paid so much per head?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no. They used to, but they do not now; but the business of a recruiting sergeant is to recruit. He takes a pride in it. He wants to get the men for the Army and the Navy. He wants to get action; he wants to do like Congressmen do, take back the bacon.

Mr. KINDRED. Does it not add to the merit of his record?

Mr. BLANTON. Of course it does.

Mr. KINDRED. And to his probable promotion?

Mr. BLANTON. Of course it does. If he goes out and gets no men recruited, he comes back with a black eye, but when he comes back with a number of recruited men he gets a little better standing, because every time you increase the enlistment personnel it sort of pushes up some officer a little higher in rank. We ought to stop this. We ought to stop putting these young minors in the Army and the Navy against the knowledge and consent of their parents, and I hope my colleagues will help pass this limitation and let the Army understand that we do not want in peace time boys under 21 years of age taken in unless their parents are willing. If my amendment is not broad enough amend it, but it ought to be passed in this bill.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I have had a number of cases in my office of boys who have been enlisted under 18 years of age. I have never had the slightest trouble in securing a prompt dismissal, and I have not had a case where any deception was practiced by the enlistment officer. In all of these cases the boys represented themselves as being over 18 years of age, and, so far as I know, the enlisting officers believed the boys' statements. I do not think any Member of this House is having trouble at the present time in securing the prompt discharge of a boy from the Army or the Navy or the Marine Corps if it can be shown that the boy was under legal age at the time of enlistment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Would it not be just about as easy and efficient for the recruiting officer to require the proof at the time he enlists a boy, as at the time of dismissal? If you attempt to get one of these boys out, the Army requires a birth certificate or the affidavits of disinterested witnesses. Why should not the enlisting officer require those things at the beginning and save all of this trouble?

Mr. HUSTED. I do not see any objection to that, but that is not covered by this amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. This would in effect reach the same thing, because they would either have to get the consent of the parents or the recruiting officer would have to satisfy himself that the boy is over 21 years of age. He would require this proof under this amendment. It would require a birth certificate or some very strong affidavits if the boy did not have the parents' consent.

Mr. HUSTED. This amendment goes a good deal further. The legal age at the present time is 18. This would raise the legal age from 18 to 21. Under the present law if a boy is under 18 years of age, he is absolutely entitled to dismissal on his own application or upon the application of a parent or guardian. If he is over 18 years of age he is not entitled to dismissal, and under the rules and regulations he can not secure dismissal unless the dependency of the parents upon the boy's services can be shown.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Let me make this suggestion in this connection. In practically every State in the Union, I take it, the parents are entitled to the boy's services and any earnings he may make until the boy is 21 years of age. During peace times does not the gentleman think that before the United States Government utilizes the services of these boys it should secure the consent of those who are entitled to these services?

Mr. HUSTED. I do not think that is necessary; but if it were necessary, this amendment should not be adopted in the form in which it has been drawn. It provides that no part of this appropriation shall be used to compensate any officer who permits the enlistment of a boy under 21 years of age without the consent of his parents. Now, it says "anyone" who permits enlistments. Does that apply solely to the enlistment officer, or to whom does it apply?

Mr. CLAGUE. If the gentleman will permit, I understood him to say that the gentleman had no trouble in getting boys under 17 years of age discharged. Did not they receive a dishonorable discharge?

Mr. HUSTED. No; they did not receive a dishonorable discharge.

Mr. JONES of Texas. He did not receive an honorable discharge. They received a discharge without honor.

Mr. HUSTED. Well, it does not say without honor; I think I am correct about it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It is a blue discharge, which shows on its face it is not a discharge with honor.

Mr. HUSTED. Well, if a boy under 18 years of age is enticed to enlist in the Army I think he is entitled to a discharge without any implication, at least, of dishonor. I agree to that absolutely; but I am talking about the amendment before the committee and not the changes in substantive law or in the rules and regulations of the War Department and the Navy Department, which are not covered by this amendment. This amendment penalizes any officer who permits the enlistment of a boy under 21 years of age without his parents' consent. Now, that might be construed to apply to a great many more officers than the enlistment officer, and it will be penalizing him even though there is no wrongful intent upon the part of the enlistment or other officer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUSTED. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUSTED. The amendment does not even provide that the officer must knowingly and willfully permit the boy to enlist. The officer may be absolutely innocent. A large boy may come and represent himself to be over 21 years of age, and the officer accept him. He believes him to be over 21 years of age, and yet under the provisions of this amendment he would be penalized. No part of this appropriation could be used to compensate an officer even though that officer was absolutely innocent and accepted that boy in good faith.

Mr. HILL. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is not the case: Might not the point be raised if this amendment were passed that any officer would have to prove they did not violate the law before he drew pay? That is a very possible ruling the comptroller might make.

Mr. HUSTED. I think that is a very possible ruling.

Mr. BLANTON. What would happen if this amendment is passed is they would quit enlisting minors. If we forbid any officer enlisting them, they would not enlist minors in peace times.

Mr. HUSTED. Well, I think it would be very unwise by an amendment of this kind to change the legal age of enlistment, an age which has existed in our law for many years. Now, there are many boys who have not any parents, or if they have parents do not know who their parents are, between 18 years of age and 21 years of age who might want to enter the Army, and who are big enough and strong enough to enter the Army, and the Army might be a very good place for them to enter under the circumstances of their lives; and yet under the provisions of this amendment these boys are absolutely barred from enlistment in the Army, because it provides that no boy under 21 years of age can be enlisted without the consent of his parents. I think that objection alone is enough to show the folly of an amendment of this kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in eight minutes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I would like to have some time.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will make it 18 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 18 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED] desires three minutes.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I desire to add in a very few words one or two thoughts to this discussion which are not original, but by way of emphasizing some matter which has already been brought out here. It is very desirable that the recruiting go on as rapidly and under as favorable circumstances as possible, but it does seem that there should be some limitation placed upon the present activities of the recruiting officers who do entice our boys by the allurements of travel, and so forth. It is known that many boys have enlisted under age whose parents would have objected to their enlistment and whose parents are entirely dependent upon the services of those boys. Now, I believe that the amendment in principle is good, but it should be altered and modified to read in the common form of such an amendment, to the effect that if such recruiting officer willfully does this act and entices the boy and causes him to enlist under age, some limitation should be placed upon the recruiting officer, and at the proper time I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas with such a qualification to his amendment, and with that qualification I believe that we can go on and make the amendment workable in the form which I propose and at the same time relieve the parents and ourselves of a great many unnecessary complications in this matter.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will permit, the amendment had to be drawn to make it not subject to the point of order. If I had placed in the matter of which the gentleman speaks it would have been subject to the point of order.

Mr. KINDRED. Let us have it out on that proposition.

Mr. BLANTON. It would be ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. KINDRED. Is the gentleman sure it would be ruled out?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas offers a substitute for the amendment offerred by Mr. BLANTON: Page 16, at the end of the amendment previously adopted, insert "Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be utilized for the recruiting or enlistment of boys under the age of 21 years without the written consent of the parents or guardians of such boys."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to accept that, and I ask leave to withdrawn my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MICHENER). The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, is the time exhausted on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. No. By unanimous consent the time has been limited to 18 minutes, to be divided as follows: Three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED], five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL], five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], and five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute at the end of that. Add this at the end of the Connally amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JONES of Texas offers an amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. CONNALLY: At the end of the Connally amendment add the following: "or unless the applicant furnishes a birth certificate or the affidavit of two disinterested witnesses showing such applicant for enlistment to be 21 years of age."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up much time, but the only objection that was offered during the argument to the amendment that has been under discussion has been the fact that there might be some boy who had no parent or guardian—some boy who desired to enter the Army—and that the officers might be deceived in some instances.

Now, this would take care of the boy who has no parent or guardian, and it would also protect the officer in this, that in all cases where there could be any possible doubt of the boy being 21 years of age he could either require the written consent of the parents, or if that were not obtainable, he could require the boy to produce a birth certificate showing that he is 21 years of age, or the affidavit of two disinterested witnesses who actually know the age of the boy. That would protect the officer. That is exactly what is required now before a discharge can be secured. Why not have that before you start in?

Mr. HUSTED. I think there is but one case that should be covered which is not covered. It does not cover the boy under 21 who has neither parent nor guardian. Now, if the amendment provided that no money should be used for enlistment purposes for the enlistment of boys under 21 without the consent of their parents or guardians, if any, that would cover the case; but I think your amendment should provide for the case of a boy who has no parent or guardian.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I accept that.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think that is correct. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to insert those words "if any" after the words "parents or guardians." That is at the end of Mr. CONNALLY's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment offered by Mr. CONNALLY of Texas: Page 16, at the end of the amendment previously adopted, insert: "Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be utilized for the recruiting or enlistment of boys under the age of 21 years without the written consent of the parents or guardians, if any, of such boys.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Now, there is a further suggestion in connection with this matter: It is frequently more or less humiliating to the boy after he is in. He gets a discharge without honor. It is an expense to the Government. It is a trouble to the Government. All these things that are required by this amendment are required before you get the boy out. Why not take time by the forelock and require it before the boy enters the Army? I can not see how there can be a legitimate objection to the amendment as finally prepared.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, the governor of my State has forwarded to me a copy of a letter received by him from the mother of a boy who has just been enlisted in the Navy. From the statement in the letter received from the governor and from the statement in a copy of the letter received from the mother of the boy it appears that the boy was taken from the high school and enlisted in the Navy without any knowledge whatever on the part of the mother. I want to ask the Clerk to read the copy of the letter of the mother, addressed to the governor of the State.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

ADEL, IOWA, January 5, 1923.

Hon. N. E. KENDALL,
Governor State of Iowa.

DEAR SIR: I am writing you in regard to my son, Raymond Marker. Thursday there was a Navy recruiting officer came to Adel and got my son with another boy to run away from home and enlist. Got the boy to go to the high-school superintendent and tell him a falsehood to get their age, and also got them to come to their own homes to take their insurance policy, not letting me know one thing about it. As soon as we found it out our sheriff called the recruiting station to find them. We asked them to hold the boy till we got there and the captain said he would do so, but instead he turned right around and sent the boy out on the 5.15 train, only giving us 40 minutes to make the trip in, and they were gone when we got there, and they only laughed and made fun of us. Does this Government approve of such work? I have been left alone with my family on my hands to support and I have did it by washing and daywork. Now I am sick and broke down when my boy was trying to help me along, then to have some officer come and do as he certainly has done surely can't be the ways our Government should do. Is there any way I can get him out, as I sure need him, as you will find? I have lived right in this town and people here know. Would you please do what you can to help us get the boy? I will sure appreciate it more than I can tell.

His mother,

Mrs. MINNIE MARKER STEELE.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, after taking this matter up with the Navy Department I find that the Navy Department has approved the action of the recruiting officer. I read from the last paragraph of a letter which I received from the department this morning:

Before the bureau can consider the question of discharging young Marker it will be necessary that he present a written request by way of his immediate commanding officer with affidavits from disinterested person testifying as to the circumstances of the case.

And so forth.

Now, this case is just one of a kind that happens nearly every day, where these officers go to a town and take a boy and get him out of school and enlist him without his parents knowing anything about it. It is an outrage on the people of the country. [Applause.] And the higher officers here, instead of putting the heel down on the officer who perpetrates this thing apparently approve the action of the officer.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] is a member of the party in power. Unless we are going to have a military government, where the military runs over the civil end of the Government, somebody on that side of the House, or somebody who is close to the administration, ought to take up that matter and see that this recruiting officer is dealt with. And if you can not handle him through the War Department, then we ought to go after the War Department. This is only one of thousands of cases like this.

Mr. DOWELL. I innocently assumed that all that would be necessary to do would be to take up with the department here the facts with reference to the conduct of this recruiting officer, and the matter would be instantly corrected. Now, I find the department here approved of the conduct of the recruiting officer, and the boy can get out only in the regular way.

Mr. KINDRED. Does the gentleman think it is unreasonable that the Navy Department, through the proper channels, makes the requirement that the gentleman has just indicated, in view of the fact that the boy has already sworn to a lie in order to get into the Navy?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes; but that boy was under the control of the officer who was trying to recruit him; and instead of going to the boy's mother, as he ought to have gone, he went to the school to get the age of the boy and found that he was over 18 and then took him away without his parents knowing anything about it.

Mr. KINDRED. Has not the gentleman found that uniformly the department has released these boys when that formula has been followed?

Mr. DOWELL. I am reading you exactly the reply I received from the Navy Department after they had received a copy of this letter. I take it, they do not intend to release him.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, Congress and Congress alone is responsible for the situation presented by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL]. Congress is responsible for what happened out in Iowa, because heretofore we have permitted by law the enlistment of boys above the age of 18 without the consent of their parents. So the officer in the case mentioned by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] did what the law authorized him to do, did what he had a right to do under the law; and if anybody is to blame for it, it is Congress. If you want to correct that situation, adopt the amendment which I have offered and tell the War Department that it shall not enlist any boy under 21 years of age without the written consent of his parent or guardian. [Applause.] We have recently reduced the size of the Army. We have no urgent need for a large military force, and I do not believe that the Army needs men so badly that the Congress should authorize recruiting officers to invade high schools in Iowa and drag recruits from the schoolroom and place them in some military camp, where they may acquire habits of idleness and spend their youth without the advantage of pursuing their studies. I do not believe that we need men so badly that we should go out on the farms and into other useful occupations where a boy is earning a livelihood or learning a trade and perhaps contributing to the support of his family and drag him off to a military camp against the protests and against the walls of their mothers and their fathers. If you will adopt my amendment, you will put a stop to it in the Army of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, instances have been cited, and we are all acquainted with them, both in the Army and the Navy, where boys under 18 years of age have misrepresented their ages to recruiting officers and then some difficulty is encountered in securing their release. Of course, any young man under 18 years of age who enlists in either the Army or the Navy upon the misrepresentation of his age can secure an honorable discharge upon it being shown to the War Department, prior to his reaching the age of 18 years, that such misrepresentation was made.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the ranking Democratic member of the Military Committee.

Mr. FIELDS. The boy does not secure an honorable discharge.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have just confirmed my impression by calling up the office of The Adjutant General, who states that such a boy receives an honorable discharge.

Mr. FIELDS. Regardless of any statement of the department, that is not the fact.

Mr. MICHENER. I can confirm the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] that that is not the fact. That is, I have a case now pending.

Mr. HICKS. In the Navy Department they give the boy an honorable discharge.

Mr. STAFFORD. By adopting this amendment the House will virtually raise the age of enlistment from 18 to 21 years.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. My time is limited. I have only five minutes. We have heard many protests here against legislation on appropriation bills. In this matter you are attempting to legislate without a committee having given any consideration to the proposition. Criticism has been lodged against the Appropriations Committee, which gives consideration in some degree at least to the legislation which it inserts in appropriation bills, but neither the Appropriations nor the Military Affairs Committee has given this proposal any consideration. There are numerous instances where young men who have left home in early childhood to make their own living and who are 19 or 20 years of age will not be able to enlist in the Army because of this drastic provision. If the gentleman would make it 18 years, of course, it would merely carry into effect the existing law. The argument of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is that you want to hamper the Government in its enlistment of young men. I remember when I was 19 or 20 years of age I was earning my own living. Why should I not have had the right to go and enlist if I were 19 years old and earning my own living as I was then? In some States the age of consent is 18. This is hastily considered legislation. The average age of the young men attending the citizens' military training camps is but 17 years. That is voluntary, and I assume with the approval of the parents of the boys. It is up to the House whether in a spell of enthusiasm and sentimentalism they want to adopt a provision which will practically change the age of enlistment. We have heard of a number of instances where boys have enlisted under the age of 18 by misrepresenting their ages. But that is not the question before the House—to make certain that boys under 18 should not be accepted. If you want to make difficult the enlistment of our young men in cases where there is no misrepresentation, go ahead and adopt this amendment. I am opposed to it because it has not been given the consideration that it deserves, and also because it virtually restricts voluntary enlistments of all persons under 21.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report both amendments.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. CONNALLY of Texas and the amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were 42 ayes and 29 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were 51 ayes and 26 noes.

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

For aviation increase to commissioned and warrant officers of the Army, $950,000.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am gratified by the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] that the War Department has just notified him that the department is now issuing an honorable discharge to the young men who have enlisted in the military service who are not of military age but who have been in the main enlisted through the influence of the recruiting officer.

Members of the House will recall that I have been fighting this proposition for a long time. I have fought it here when I did it with but little assistance. I have fought it not only here but in the department, and I am gratified to learn that the department has at last decided to grant an honorable discharge in cases of this character.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] well said a moment ago that many of the things that occur in the department, especially in regard to the enlistment of young men, are chargeable to Congress, and that is true. There is no other branch of the military service that touches the homes of the civil population as does the recruiting service of the Army. Just so long as Congress looks lightly upon the conduct of recruiting officers who continuously endeavor to exert their energies in recruiting into the service children under the legal age, just so long as Congress refuses to take any action upon that subject, and, moreover, when it is discussed here and Congress refuses to take action, these recruiting officers feel that they are licensed to continue their course.

I take this opportunity, now that the amendment has been adopted in Committee of the Whole, to express the hope that it will remain in the bill when it leaves this Chamber and that it will be retained in the bill by the conferees. And I want to give notice now, Mr. Chairman, that, having succeeded thus far, if the bill shall come back from conference with this proposition eliminated it will result in a further fight on the floor of the House. I believe that the conferees will fight to retain it in the bill in conference, and in the event that they fail to do so, I trust that the membership of the House will reject the conference report and send it back to conference with instructions to the conferees to rewrite it into the bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of enlisted men: For pay of enlisted men of the line and staff, not including the Philippine Scouts, $53,494,207: Provided, That the total authorized number of enlisted men, not including the Philippine Scouts, shall be 125,000.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I rise at this time to say that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the Hon. JULIUS KAHN, is not physically able to be present during the consideration of this bill. He had intended to appear at this time and make a speech in general debate, but his health will not permit him to attend the sessions of the House. He asked me, as one of his colleagues on the committee, if I would not state to the House that he is still of the belief that Congress made a mistake in the cutting of the enlisted personnel of the Army down to 125,000 and cutting the commissioned personnel from 13,000 to 12,000. He said that he wanted me to state to the House that he did not favor a large standing army; and indeed I know that that is true, for my association with him on the committee has convinced me that he is not in favor of a large standing army. When the Secretary of War and General March and others appeared before the committee and asked us to give them an army of 525,000 men, or something over 500,000 men, Mr. KAHN opposed it and said that he favored an army of 175,000. He favors it now. He said that it was with much regret to him that with his long service on the committee and the study he has given matters of this character, realizing the condition of the world to-day when there are more armed men in Europe than ever before, our country should cut its military force down to the point where it now is, and that it gives him great concern. I told him that I would be very glad to make this statement to his colleagues in the House, and I am sure we all regret that he is not able to be here and speak for himself. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, line 18, strike out the figures "$53,494,207" and insert "$45,000,000." And in line 20 after the word "hundred," strike out the words "and twenty-five."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a year ago the House adopted as the enlisted force of the Army 115,000 men. The Senate, as I now recall, adopted an amendment providing for a force of 140,000 as a maximum, with an average strength of 130,000 men. In conference the limit was fixed at 125,000 men. That limit as carried in the existing law is recommended for adoption in the pending bill. That does not mean that there are 125,000 enlisted men at any one time in the year. It is impossible under the arrangement of enlistment to have that number. The maximum number as figured by the War Department is 95 per cent of the total enlisted strength, or 118,500. But the 118,500 men are not all enlisted men. Technically they are enlisted men, but that also includes all of the noncommissioned officers, and those noncommissioned officers in the various five grades numbered on October 31 last 28,970. On October 31 last the number of enlisted men proper was about 86,000 men, and all the others of the total enlisted strength of 114,800 were men in the noncommissioned-officer grade. So it will be seen that we are not even providing for an Army of 125,000 men. We had on October 31 last a skeleton Army of enlisted men of 86,000, and that is the lowest, in my opinion, that the Army can possibly have to act as a skeleton Army for the various activities of the Government.

We waged the fight as to the size of the Army and we waged it strongly in the committee of conference for three weeks. Never before in my legislative service here have I known of an appropriation bill being so long in conference as the Army appropriation bill last year. For three weeks, every day, morning and afternoon, your conferees were contending for a lower military personnel, and we won. The personnel of this House has not changed. The Constitution provides that we shall not provide for a Military Establishment for a longer period than two years. Your subcommittee accepted the action of the House, which was agreed upon as the policy at least for this Congress, and decided that we would not go into the discussion of a question of that kind this session.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The only reason for my interrupting the gentleman is that he limited the time for debate to five minutes and then took it all himself.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, if the gentleman had asked, I should have been glad to give him 10 minutes or 5 minutes, or even an hour, because, for one, I like to hear the gentleman expatiate on any topic.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is it the gentleman's intention, in lines 18 and 19, to change the authorized strength of the Regular Army to 125,000 men instead of the number fixed in the defense act of 1920?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Texas offered the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is the gentleman trying to modify the number of the enlisted strength of the Army?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman's colleague, Mr. JONES of Texas, is attempting to change the fixed law determined upon in the War Department appropriation act of last year, that the Army should be 125,000.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is that permanent law?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Then you changed the act of 1920?

Mr. STAFFORD. We did.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. What is the necessity for providing that the total authorized number shall be 125,000 men if that is already existing law? Why does the gentleman want to risk modifying it at this time?

Mr. STAFFORD. Because we do not know that the appropriation of $53,494,000 might not be utilized some time during the year for a larger number than 125,000 men.

We have accepted the estimates of the department that that will be what is required to maintain an Army of 125,000 as carried in the law, but so there will be no question it is the intention of Congress to have only 125,000 as the enlisted strength of the Army we iterate the present strength.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Then under the existing law the Army could not have over 125,000 enlisted men?

Mr. STAFFORD. It could not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For aviation increase to enlisted men of the Army, $200,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for increased pay on flying status to more than 500 enlisted men.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 25, after the word "men," change the period to a colon and add the following: "Provided further, That hereafter the authorization for increase in flying pay, contained in section 13–A of the act of June 4, 1920, shall be construed to include warrant officers of the Army who may be ordered by proper authority to perform duty requiring them to participate regularly and frequently in aerial flights."

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. HICKS. I reserve it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the provision of pay to men and warrant officers for aviation increase has already been passed by the committee. I am of the opinion that that covers the ground that this amendment of mine covers, but we know that the comptroller is very apt to raise questions that are not absolutely clear. Now, the purpose of this amendment is to provide increase aviation pay for those warrant officers, and I understand there are very few of them, and there are not more than 10 or a dozen who are entitled to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Many more than that.

Mr. HILL. I would like to ask the gentleman, acting chairman of the committee, to tell us how many there are.

Mr. STAFFORD. The hearings show there are 1,040.

Mr. HILL. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks the amendment is already provided for in lines 12 and 13?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as to the question of the point of order, of course it is subject to the point of order. I may say for the benefit of the gentleman who reserved the point of order that in last year's bill no provision whatsoever was made to allow aviation increase to warrant officers. The aviation increase, which is 50 per cent, as the gentleman knows, only applies to enlisted men and commissioned officers. This year, for the first time, we have added to this item the pay not only for commissioned but also for warrant officers, and so far as this year is concerned warrant officers will be entitled to aviation increase. General Patrick, head of the Aviation Service, explained at some length showing that these warrant officers should not be denied the privileges extended to commissioned officers or to enlisted men. There are many instances where warrant officers should be entitled to the 50 per cent increase. The provision offered by the gentleman from Maryland was considered in committee and acted on favorably. It should be so that hereafter it would not be subject to the point of order, there being substantive provision of law authorizing it. In my opinion there should be no objection to warrant officers receiving the additional 50 per cent increase.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I am in great sympathy with the aviation officers and with aviation generally, as most members of the committee know. I believe in aviation and want to encourage its development in every way. My opposition to provisions in this bill is not founded on the merits of the proposed legislation, but on the fact that our procedure and our rules are being violated. I feel that if these warrant officers are taken care of for this year, as admitted by the gentleman from Wisconsin, we will not be doing them any injury if we throw this amendment out and then let the Military Committee bring in the proper legislative bill which should provide for these men for the future. On the ground that this amendment in using the word "hereafter" clearly indicates that it is legislation for the future, to operate beyond the life of this bill, I think it is subject to the point of order, and on that count I make the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. I think it is a limitation and it has been on the bill before.

The CHAIRMAN. The language of the amendment as it stands is clearly subject to the point of order. It provides for permanent legislation, and that is the purpose of it, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reoffer the amendment with the word "hereafter" left out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 16, line 25, after the word "men," change the period to a colon and add the following: "Provided further,"—

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask to have the amendment changed by striking out the word "further."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 25, after the word "men," change the period to colon and add the following: "Provided, That the authorization for increase in flying pay contained in section 13–A of the act of June 4, 1920, shall be construed to include warrant officers of the Army who may be ordered by proper authority to perform duty requiring them to participate regularly and frequently in aerial flights."

Mr. HICKS. I reserve a point of order, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin this question: What is the permanent law in reference to aviation pay, and so forth, as now provided for?

Mr. STAFFORD. The permanent law, as found in the Army reorganization act of June 4, 1920, provides for granting 50 per cent increase of pay to officers and enlisted men. It reads as follows:

Officers and enlisted men of the Army shall receive an increase of 50 per cent of their pay while on duty requiring them to participate regularly and frequently in aerial flights.

Then, in section 20 of the pay bill, which was passed at the last session of Congress, it is provided:

That all officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of all branches of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, when detailed to duty involving flying, shall receive the same increase of their pay and the same allowance for traveling expenses as are now authorized for the performance of like duties in the Army.

Mr. HICKS. Does this amendment change the old law?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not in the chair. I am submitting it to meet the objections that have been made.

Mr. HICKS. If it does not change existing law, what is the object of the amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. To make it clearer, providing for the pay of warrant officers, to make it clear that they shall be entitled to this 50 per cent increase.

Mr. HICKS. If the amendment changes existing law, it is legislation, and therefore contrary to our rule. If it does not change the law or attempts to interpret it, why advance the proposition? In other words, the amendment has for its purpose the interpretation of the law, which is obnoxious to our practice in the consideration of appropriation bills.

A provision proposing to construe existing law is in itself a proposition of legislation and therefore not in order on an appropriation bill. (Vol. 4, Hinds' Precedents, sec. 3936.)

I make the point of order that this is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment heretofore had in it the word "hereafter," which made it permanent legislation. The amendment as modified is still subject to the point of order, because it changes existing law, and the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of retired enlisted men, $7,000,000.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LINEBERGER: Page 17, line 5, after the word "status," insert:

"That all persons who have served as officers of the United States Army during the World War other than officers of the Regular Army, and who have incurred physical disability in line of duty and who have heretofore or may hereafter be rated at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability by the Veterans' Bureau shall, upon application, be placed upon the retired list of the Army in the grade last held by them when in the service of the United States with the same privileges as now provided by law for officers of the Regular Army who have been retired for physical disability incurred in line of duty, and shall thereupon receive the retired pay provided by section 1274, Revised Statutes, computed on the pay provided for officers of the Regular Army in the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922: Provided, That all pay and allowances to which such persons or officers may be entitled under the provisions of this law shall be paid solely out of the military and naval compensation appropriation fund of the Veterans' Bureau and shall be in lieu of the disability compensation benefits provided in the act creating the Veterans' Bureau and amendments thereto: And provided further, That such officers of the United States Army as shall have incurred disability of less than 30 per cent and more than 10 per cent permanent disability as may have been, or may hereafter be, rated by the Veterans' Bureau, shall, on application, be placed on the retired list of the Army under the same conditions as now provided by law for officers of the Regular Army who have incurred physical disability in line of duty but without retired pay and shall be entitled only to such compensation and other benefits as may now or hereafter be provided for by law.

"No person shall be entitled to benefits under the provisions of this act except he make application as hereinbefore provided within 12 months after the passage of this act."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I am going to reserve a point of order on that amendment, and I do so in courtesy to my Los Angeles friend in order that the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] can speak upon it. It seems to me so full of legislative provisions that there is no question but that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I made the point of order, but at the request of the gentleman from California I will withhold it.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] for reserving the point of order. I had hoped that no one would make it. I recognize the fact, however, that, according to the rules of the House, it is probably subject to a point of order. However, I do not think that my position in attempting to attach legislation to an appropriation bill is altogether unprecedented, inasmuch as it has often been attempted and often with success. Legislation much less justifiable than this has been attached to an appropriation bill by our genial friends who compose the Committee on Appropriations itself. The power which is theirs, however, is not mine. As the humble sponsor of legislation affecting the lives and welfare of the disabled emergency officer—long-suffering and patient as he is—I only wish his cause to-day were in more able but no less willing hands.

However, that is not the question in point. The particular amendment which I have offered is for the purpose of bringing to the attention of this body the fact that 11 months ago, or, to be exact, on February 20, 1922, a bill (S. 1565) of very similar import to the amendment which I have just offered, passed the Senate. That bill has been slumbering for a period of practically 11 months in the House Committee on Military Affairs. Had these officers, affected by this bill, acted when at the front with the same lack of celerity the outcome of the war would have been different from what it was. I am not going to discuss the merits or demerits of this legislation here at this time. I wish, however, to bring to the attention of the House the fact that I have been reliably informed that approximately 250 Members of this House, a clear majority—a clear majority, I will say further, of both the Democrats and Republicans of this House—have petitioned the Committee on Military Affairs, respectfully requesting the committee to report this bill in time for it to be considered by the present Congress. This, of course, in order that its merits or demerits may be determined by this body. Otherwise, as Members well know, the Senate bill will automatically die on March 4, 1923, when this Congress adjourns. That request, in view of the fact that there are many disabled emergency officers throughout the country patiently awaiting the outcome of this legislation, is one which I think in no way presumes upon the prerogatives of the great Committee on Military Affairs. But we believe, gentlemen, that the time has now arrived—if, indeed, it did not arrive months ago—when the House should have an opportunity to pass upon the worthiness of this legislation.

Certain amendments have been suggested to the Committee on Military Affairs which will make the legislation effective in those respects in which the committee considered the Senate bill lacking. Those suggested amendments come from no less an authority than the Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States. Whether or not the bill should be adopted in its present form, which is that covered by my amendment, or with further amendments, or whether or not it should be passed or be defeated on the floor of this House, is a question which alone the Members of this body can determine; and they have expressed their desire for that opportunity. I therefore again entreat the gentlemen in charge of the machinery of the great Committee on Military Affairs to give heed to the respectful request of the majority of the membership of this House. Both as a request from the House and in deference to the desires of the majority of the membership of the two great parties which go to compose it, I hope that these gentlemen in charge of this legislation will see fit to report the bill at an early date, in order that its merits or demerits may be passed upon by this House. Any other action by the committee will place upon it the responsibility of the prevention of the free consideration of this bill by the House, amounting in effect to its death by strangulation by the Military Affairs Committee. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, under the reservation of the point of order I wish to say briefly that although the subcommittee in the consideration of the War Department appropriation bill has had submitted to it in the past two years by the many officers who came before it almost every conceivable phase of retirement pay, yet never was any mention made of the proposal suggested in the amendment offered by the gentleman from California. Being entirely in the dark as to it, as I suppose a great number of other Members are—although there may be members of the Committee on Military Affairs who are properly versed in it—I feel impelled to insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from California is clearly legislation. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

None of the funds herein or heretofore appropriated shall be used for payment of the six months' pay (authorized by the act of December 17, 1919, to be paid to certain specified beneficiaries of officers or enlisted men of the Regular Army who died from wounds or diseases not the result of their own misconduct) to any child of a deceased officer or enlisted man who is not actually a dependent of such deceased officer or enlisted man.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, on page 19, line 18, I offer the following amendment: After the word "herein" strike out the word "or" and insert a comma in lieu thereof, and after the word "heretofore" insert the words "or hereafter." This is a correction.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANTHONY: Page 19, line 18, after the word "herein," strike out the word "or" and insert a comma in lieu thereof, and after the word "heretofore" insert the words "or hereafter."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DICKINSON: On page 19, after line 25, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"None of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for payment of any officer of the Army on the active or retired list while such officer is engaged in the business of selling supplies or services to the United States, or is employed by any individual, partnership, or corporation which engages in such business."

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, the provision of the Navy bill of June 10, 1896, carries this provision with reference to retired and active officers in the Navy. Just now we have put in a similar provision as to the retirement of General Crowder. Now we have the retirement of General Harbord, who immediately becomes president of the Radio Corporation of America, not because he is an expert in radio but on account of the influence that they hope he will have in selling their products to the United States Government. I have no objection to his getting a good job, but I do say that if he is going to be engaged in the manufacture of articles for sale to the Government he ought not to be entitled to any retired pay in the Army. [Applause.] For that reason I want to see a provision of this kind put in with reference to retired officers or active officers in the Army, and I call attention to a clipping in the Chicago Tribune of the other day:

The Radio Corporation, now headed by General Harbord, formerly Assistant Chief of Staff of the Army, is one of the most powerful aggregations of capital in the world. Behind it are the General Electric Co. and the J. P. Morgan interests.

ALLEGE CONTROL OF PATENTS.

The activities of the Radio Corporation, some of which are now undergoing investigation by the Federal Trade Commission, are alleged to be in the direction of establishing a wireless communication monopoly through control of patents, through exclusive traffic agreements, and through direct governmental grants and provisions conferring exclusive rights to valuable bands of wave lengths.

The Radio Corporation is reported to have closed a large number of exclusive contracts which will prevent any serious competition in domestic and foreign wireless communication. In the case of a country where radio is a government monopoly such an exclusive contract would give the Radio Corporation a monopoly of wireless communication from that country to the United States.

The purpose of getting General Harbord in this job is on account of his acquaintance with the people who are occupying positions in the Army and Navy whom they hope to influence, that is all. If he is going to occupy this position and draw a salary for it, all right, but he should not receive a dollar of Government money out of the Public Treasury while he is so engaged, and I hope this amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I did not hear the amendment read. May it be again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES TO AND LOSS OF PRIVATE PROPERTY.

For payment of claims of not to exceed $500 in amount for damages to and loss of private property incident to the training, practice, operation, or maintenance of the Army that have accrued, or may hereafter accrue, from time to time, $40,000: Provided, That settlement of such claims shall be made by the General Accounting Office, upon the approval and recommendation of the Secretary of War, where the amount of damages has been ascertained by the War Department, and payment thereof will be accepted by the owners of the property in full satisfaction of such damages.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, line 19, page 20, I move to strike out the word "of" where it occurs the second time. The word does not strengthen the meaning of the paragraph nor give grace to the grammatical construction.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WATSON: Page 20, line 19, strike out the word "of" where it occurs the second time.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not the gentleman think that second "of" is necessary?

Mr. WATSON. I do not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, we all recognize that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON] is one of the leading grammarians of the House.

Mr. WATSON. I do not profess to be.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is so modest that he never admits either his worth or his wonderful attainments; but I think if he will study that sentence closely he will come to the conclusion that the second "of" is necessary.

Mr. WATSON. We all recognize that the gentleman from Wisconsin is a philosopher, and we also recognize his claim as an expert in grammatical construction.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am as modest in disclaiming to be a philosopher as the gentleman is a grammarian. I have nothing further to say. I am opposed to the amendment. This wording is carried in existing law.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The existing law uses this phraseology, and the comptroller is likely to consider this a change in existing law. I agree with the gentleman on the grammar, but it is sure to make trouble if we change it.

Mr. WATSON. If an error were made in writing a paragraph 100 years ago, I do not understand that is any argument in favor of its being continued. The question is the grammatical construction of the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that "for payment of claims of not to exceed $500 in amount" means that each claim must not exceed that amount, but that "for payment of claims not to exceed $500 in amount" means that all the claims together must not exceed $500. It seems to me it is dangerous to leave out the second word "of." [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from New Jersey has shed considerable light on the erudition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

None of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for payment of expenses of operating any utility of the War Department selling services or supplies at which the cost of the services or supplies so sold does not include all customary overhead costs of labor, rent, light, heat, and other expenses properly chargeable to the conduct of such utility.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call attention of gentlemen to the word "customary," in line 8, page 24, where it says "selling services or supplies at which the cost of the services or supplies so sold does not include all customary overhead cost of labor," and so forth, otherwise there may be added the overhead cost of some expensively conducted private operation.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the use of the word "customary" is intended to convey the usual overhead charges—those expenses which are usual.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Usual to whom?

Mr. ANTHONY. To the conduct of business. The funds are to apply to utilities operated by the War Department on a business basis.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The usual overhead expenses may be the expense in private business where unreasonable charges are made.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think they are set out here. They are the overhead cost of labor, rent, light, and other expenses properly chargeable to the conduct of the utility.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The words "such utilities" do not mean anything, because there are no overhead charges attached to or taken into consideration in public business. In order to find the customary charges, in order to find any value of the use whatever for the word "utility" we must go outside of the public business and find private business comparable to the business that is Government conducted.

Mr. ANTHONY. This paragraph refers to the utilities, such as ice plant and similar utilities for the business of the entire garrison.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Is it not true that in all public utilities no account is taken of overhead costs?

Mr. ANTHONY. We do this to compel them to take into account the overhead cost. The principal utilities are the laundries and ice plants, and the purpose is to put the thing on a business basis. The idea was to make them pay their way.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If that is true, I doubt the advisability of using the word "customary," because we have to go outside altogether and ascertain the overhead charges of a private concern.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That from this appropriation not to exceed $710,000 shall be expended for the pay of civilian employees; not to exceed $1,250,000 shall be expended for power, heat, and electric current; not to exceed $40,000 shall be expended for maintenance and repair of buildings (including repair of machinery) for laundries; not to exceed $200,000 shall be expended for the maintenance and repair of heating apparatus (other than stoves); not to exceed $150,000 for maintenance and repair of electric wiring and fixtures; not to exceed $10,000 for the repair and exchange of typewriters; not to exceed $3,750,000 for fuel; not to exceed $4,500,000 for forage, including salt and vinegar and bedding for animals, and straw for soldiers' bedding; not to exceed $200,000 for ice; and not to exceed $100,000 shall be expended for stationery.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In the paragraph just read, page 26, line 23, is carried an appropriation of $710,000 for paying the civilian employees. Would the gentleman mind stating what some of the principal items are of this expenditure?

Mr. ANTHONY. These are civilian employees handling and carrying the supplies of the Army in a quartermaster's corps. The number of civilian employees of the Army has been greatly reduced in the last year until now the number is about normal as compared with pre-war times.

Mr. ROACH. I am sure the gentleman can give us that assurance.

Mr. ANTHONY. For instance, on December 31, 1921, there were 36,396 civilian employees, excluding the Engineer Corps, handling river and harbor matters. The Budget allows for 21,259, exclusive of the Engineer Corps, and we figure there will be 23,000 under the river and harbor. So on August 31, 1922, the number of civilian employees, exclusive of the Engineer Corps, was 29,000; so you see that under this bill we are cutting the number 8,000.

Mr. ROACH. I am glad to know that these reductions have been made.

Mr. ANTHONY. The employees of the War Department have been reduced. At the time of the armistice there were 37,500; and there are now 29,740, and after this bill goes into effect there will be 26,080.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW] to the fact that his friends, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], possibly may be putting one over on him. Since their speeches on yesterday, for the first time since I have been in Congress, the House restaurant's menu down stairs to-day has the following: "Premium ham glace, sauce shampagne."

Mr. KNUTSON. Did it taste good? [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. That is only a sham, the gentleman knows it is not real.

Mr. BLANTON. There seems to be about as much pain as there is sham.

Mr. CRAMTON. Gentlemen will notice that it is spelled s-h-a-m.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, there are various shams in spelling, as well as there are in enforcing the law.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is the way they spell it in Texas. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the paragraph providing for transportation of the Army and its supplies, including the following proviso on page 31, line 9:

Provided further, That in expending the money appropriated by this act a railroad company which has not received aid in bonds of the United States and which obtained a grant of public land to aid in the construction of its railroad on conditions that such railroad should be a post route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and other Government services, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charge for such Government transportation, having claims against the United States for transportation of troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property over such aided railroads, shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated by the foregoing provisions only on the basis of such rate for the transportation of such troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property as the Secretary of War shall deem just and reasonable under the foregoing provision, such rate not to exceed 50 per cent of the compensation of such Government transportation as shall at that time be charged to and paid by private parties to any such company for like and similar transportation; and the amount so fixed to be paid shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman of the subcommittee in respect to the word "and" in line 11, page 31. My understanding of that proviso is that it is intended to limit the charge that a railroad company may make for transporting troops, a reduction being made, and a limitation put upon the amount that can be received, if the railroad company had been aided by the Federal Government in a substantial way. If this language is to stand as it is, if the word "and" is to remain, then a railroad company would not be limited unless it had received both bonds and a grant of public land. We all know that some of the railroads have been very materially aided by the grant of public lands, lands very valuable at the time they were granted, and that have increased to a very great value since that time. We also know that bonds in large amounts have been issued, or that the Government has guaranteed railroad bonds. There are two very material aids that have been given, and in my judgment—at least it occurs to me at this time—if aid has been given to the railroad in either way, through bonds or by the grant of public land, then the Government should be in a position to ask this concession, this reduction upon the part of the railroad; but as the language of the bill is at present, no concession, no reduction, could be demanded unless the road had been aided in both ways—by bonds and by the grant of public lands. If I am right in my understanding of the provision, I suggest an amendment striking out the word "and" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "or."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, this language in reference to the land-grant railroads has been carried in the bill for a great many years, just as written in the bill now pending. My information is that the original language was prepared by the law officers of the War Department. It has evidently accomplished its purpose all of these years, although it is open to the construction of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN]. Whether it be advisable to change it now without making some investigation as to just what legal aspects the amendment would have, I do not know. Would the gentleman be willing to have the matter passed over so that we may make inquiry of the War Department to find out just what effect it would have?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I am not urging it now. I call the attention of the gentleman to the matter.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the gentleman's suggestion is entirely reasonable.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I presume the gentleman can easily get information as to what railroads are affected by this provision, and the relation of each railroad to the Government, as far as aid from the Government is concerned. I suggest that the gentleman look that matter over and see if the interest of the Government will be properly served by the amendment I suggest.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would be very glad to look into it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that it seems to me the word "or" ought to be inserted. The matter ought to be looked into. However, we do not know just exactly what effect it will have. I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed over without prejudice until the matter can be investigated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed over without prejudice, to be returned to later. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph has been passed over without prejudice and the gentleman will have his right when the paragraph is again called up.

The Clerk read as follows:

HORSES FOR CAVALRY, ARTILLERY, ENGINEERS, ETC.

For the purchase of horses of ages, sex, and size as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War for remounts for officers entitled to public mounts for the Cavalry, Artillery, Signal Corps, and Engineers, the United States Military Academy, service schools, and staff colleges, and for the Indian scouts, and for such Infantry and members of the Medical Department in field campaigns as may be required to be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto (including $25,000 for purchase of remounts and $150,000 for encouragement of the breeding of riding horses suitable for the Army, including cooperation with the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, and for the purchase of animals for breeding purposes and their maintenance), $200,000: Provided, That the number of horses purchased under this appropriation, added to the number now on hand, shall be limited to the actual needs of the mounted service, including reasonable provisions for remounts, and unless otherwise ordered by the Secretary of War no part of this appropriation shall be paid out for horses not purchased by contract after competition duly invited by the Quartermaster Corps and an inspection under the direction and authority of the Secretary of War. When practicable, horses shall be purchased in open market at all military posts or stations, when needed, within a maximum price to be fixed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of any horse below the standard set by Army Regulations for Cavalry and Artillery horses, except when purchased as remounts or for instruction of cadets at the United States Military Academy: And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for polo ponies except for West Point Military Academy, and such ponies shall not be used at any other place: And provided further, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, accept donations of animals for breeding and donations of money or other property to be used as prizes or awards at agricultural fairs, horse shows, and similar exhibitions, in order to encourage the breeding of riding horses suitable for Army purposes: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall report annually to Congress, at the commencement of each session, a statement of all expenditures under this appropriation, and full particulars of means adopted and carried into effect for the encouragement of the breeding of riding horses suitable for the military service.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUDSPETH: Page 35, line 6, after the word "war," strike out the colon and insert a semicolon and add the following: "All purchases shall be made by the Secretary of War or his agent direct from the owners or agents of owners of said horses."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I think it is clearly a limitation upon the purchase of these horses. If the committee will adopt this amendment, we will save the Government at least one-half the sum formerly expended for the purchase of these horses, for this reason: The contract for the purchase of these horses heretofore has been farmed out to Tom, Dick, and Harry. They have then sublet it to some one else, who goes to the owners and buys the horses at a much less sum than the contract with the agents of the Government calls for, thereby depriving the owner of the horses from getting what the Government actually pays for the horses, and also giving to some agent a contract to go out and buy these horses at an exorbitant sum, much more than is paid the owner for the horses. I know of many instances during the war where men were given contracts for the purchase of Cavalry horses. They went to the owners and bought the horses for half the contract price which the Government had to pay. The owner of the horses was deprived of receiving all that the Government paid and the Government, on the other hand, was defrauded out of thousands of dollars by that sort of procedure.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Am I to understand that the object of the gentleman's amendment is the prevention of subletting of these contracts?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Absolutely.

Mr. HUSTED. For the purchase of these horses for the Government?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes. If the amendment be adopted, it will save the Government at least half the appropriation in the purchase of the horses.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. As I understand it, it is not the practice of the War Department to sublet contracts of this nature.

Mr. HUDSPETH. They have been doing it in the past.

Mr. ANTHONY. As I understand it, they advertise for bids for horses to come up to certain specifications, and anyone is at liberty to go out in the country and gather those horses up and present them to the purchasing officer of the Government.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes; but they have been farming out these contracts to men who go through the country and buy the horses at half the price that the Government has to pay for them.

Mr. ANTHONY. Did not the abuse the gentleman speaks of occur during the time of war?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Well, it is being done, I will say to the gentleman, at the present time.

Mr. ANTHONY. There are no horses being purchased under this appropriation except a few remount colts, and also about 200 ponies, in the Philippine Islands, so there are no horses being purchased under this.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will say to my friend horses are purchased, and you will see contracts will be farmed out. A man will go to the owner of the horses and buy at a less price than the Government agrees to pay. There is no question but what that is the practice all over the State of Texas, where they raise horses. Adopt this amendment and you compel the agent of the Secretary of War to select a man to go to the owners, and you save the charges of the middleman, and you will save thousands of dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should the gentleman compel the Government to go to the man who has something to sell rather than that the man who has something to sell should come to the Government?

Mr. HUDSPETH. This does not prevent the man having something to sell from going to the Government, but compels the Government to purchase direct from the owner. It does not prevent the man owning the horses from going to the Government, but it cuts out the middleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why can not the person owning the horses do that to-day?

Mr. HUDSPETH. No; but our contracts are let to middlemen. Men contract for horses of a certain standard at a certain price. Then they go to the owner and buy them at less and turn them in to the Government and make an exorbitant profit.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am afraid the gentleman's amendment would handicap the War Department if it desires to purchase any considerable number of horses, for the reason it is impossible for the War Department to go to every farmer who has a colt or a horse that comes up to the standard of the War Department.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will say to the chairman, in every case they will send out agents to purchase these horses, and they are purchased as a rule in large lots from the man who raises a large number of horses. You simply cut out the middleman and you will see there will be a saving to the Government of thousands of dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized. I want to say to the gentleman that it appears that this amendment would increase the cost to the Government of the horses purchased, as he would compel the War Department to go to the farmer who has horses and enter upon negotiations to buy his horses. In other words, you put the responsibility upon the Government. Under the present conditions the Government says it is on the market for a certain number of horses, and the farmer who has a large number brings his horses to the Government.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will say to the gentleman that does not prevent the farmer from going to the agent of the Government and selling those horses, but it does this alone: It cuts out the middleman and his profits, the man who has been making millions of dollars.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say that the middleman is in a position to save the Government money, is in a position to go and collect those horses and sell 30 or 40 to the Government at a price the Government could not get if it had to go out in the market and get them.

Mr. HUDSPETH. If you advertise at Fort Bliss or El Paso for 1,000 horses, you would have 5,000 there before night from the farmers and stock raisers.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is because they are a drug on the market.

Mr. HUDSPETH. They are a drug on the market all over the country, but if the Government advertised in any part of the Southwest that they wanted 1,000 head of horses the whole country would be swamped with horses in 24 hours.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I notice that there is this provision: "When practical, horses shall be purchased in open market at all military posts or stations, when needed, within the maximum price to be fixed by the Secretary of War." I do not see why the farmer can not sell under that provision.

Mr. ANTHONY. He has absolute access to the Government for the sale of horses at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a reservation of the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. I withdraw the reservation, but I am opposed to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HUDSPETH) there were—ayes 16, noes 22. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My colleagues voted down the amendment of my colleague from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] because they did not understand the situation. His amendment would have saved this Government at least 40 per cent of the cost of these remount horses. Some of the best Cavalry horses in the world are raised on just such Texas ranches as is owned by my colleague [Mr. HUDSPETH]. These ranch horses make the finest Cavalry mounts in the world. Some speculators will go there and buy those horses at $80 or $90 and then turn them over to the Government at $150 to $250 each—that is the profit they make from the Government—and it was to meet that situation that my colleague offered his amendment, but it was defeated.

The distinguished chairman [Mr. ANTHONY], whom we all love, said that there was just a small part of this sum to be used in purchasing horses, and he said that was limited to remount colts. He is mistaken. He is not often mistaken, but he is in error one time. Here is $25,000 for the purchase of remounts. That means remount colts and other horses, and "$150,000 for the encouragement of the breeding of riding horses" suitable for the Army.

Mr. ANTHONY. Now, out of that $150,000 we are informed that $30,000 will be used to buy ponies in the Philippine Islands for remounts and the rest is for the encouragement of the breeding of riding horses.

Mr. BLANTON. But under the language it says, "$150,000 for the encouragement of the breeding of riding horses suitable for the Army," and so forth, and "for the purchase of animals for breeding purposes and their maintenance, $200,000." The gentleman knows what the Army can do under that language if it wants to, and I will tell him some of what it does.

My colleagues from Texas, Mr. JONES and Mr. HUDSPETH, and myself tried to defeat this item here a couple of years ago. The debate showed that they took a great amount of money and bought fine stallions and turned them over to certain individuals and let them breed them without cost for their own private business. They could sell the progeny to the Government if they wanted to, and they need not do so if they did not want to, and we three objected to it, although we come from horse-raising sections which could be benefited by it. We tried to defeat it. What happened? We did not defeat it, but now we three Texans have had quite a deluge of fine stallions sent to our districts. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] had several very fine ones sent to his district. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] had several very fine ones sent also to his district, and I have had some very fine ones sent to my district. Why? But I am still fighting it because I do not believe in it. I believe the Army can get horses in some other way.

Do not you ever fret, our cowmen are going to raise all the horses they need. Whenever the Government needs those horses for Army purposes those cowmen are patriotic enough to see that the Army gets them. You do not need this provision.

I noticed in the paper the other day what they are fixing to do. The Army is hoping to send a great big string of these remount horses to Europe, to display them, and to compete in horse shows abroad. The people of this country are not interested in that kind of foreign enterprise. I submit that it is a waste of money. I submit that an economical Government, of which we hear so much on that side of the House, ought not to stand for a thing of that kind.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not the gentleman think that a horse show abroad would have the same effect, only on a larger scale, as the county fair, such as the gentleman has in his own State, and such as we all have in our own States?

Mr. BLANTON. County fairs in America are all right——

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is a large county fair——

Mr. BLANTON. It is all right for a large county fair to be held in New York or down in Texas or over in Maryland, or somewhere else in the United States, as an American enterprise; but we do not pull them off over in Europe. We should let Europe attend to its own county fairs and furnish its own displays. I want to see a stop put to spending money in wasteful ways. All this is the foolishness of a lot of Army officers who want to straddle fine pacers and fox trotters in our American parks and then go abroad and ride their fine mounts at competitive horse shows in Europe, displaying themselves as well as their horses, at the expense of this Nation. I hope it will stop. I hope the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] in the future will curtail it, as he has attempted to do in the past.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do so, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], in charge of the bill. I find myself in agreement with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] in regard to this appropriation. I think it is a mistake. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas, the chairman of the subcommittee, how many of these stallions are now owned by the War Department and distributed throughout the country?

Mr. ANTHONY. My understanding is that the War Department now owns 254 stallions, of which 90 were acquired by donation and the balance were purchased under appropriations made from year to year for the encouragement and development of the breeding of horses for Army use.

Mr. McKENZIE. I assume that those that were donated are rather old and infirm?

Mr. ANTHONY. No. My understanding is that very valuable animals have been given to the Government by some of the largest breeders of horses in this country.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the War Department employ an attendant known as a manager for each one of these horses?

Mr. ANTHONY. My information is that these horses are placed over the country under a system by which a horse is placed in a community in charge of what is known as a "manager." This manager looks after the horses in the community, and a fee, a standard fee of $10, a nominal fee, is charged, and this nominal fee is turned into the Treasury by the manager, and in turn the War Department, out of this appropriation, allows the manager a reimbursement of $10 for his labor.

Mr. McKENZIE. Another point I am interested in is this: Do they do enough business, is the increase sufficient, to pay the manager's salary? That is, do they collect enough money to pay the manager's salary, or is it an additional expense on the Government to employ these managers?

Mr. BLANTON. I will answer the gentleman's question, if I may. Say the gentleman had a stock farm in his district with 50 fine blooded mares on it. He makes an application to this remount station and they send him one of these stallions and he takes care of it, and when he gets through with it he repays the remount station.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand this activity is self-sustaining.

Mr. BLANTON. The stockman charges himself $10 each and credits himself $10 each, so that it is all a book account. No money is paid in or out.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the gentleman is in error when he states that these horses are placed on large ranches. My information is that they are placed in communities available to the large horse breeders.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman from Kansas well knows that I have endeavored to be a consistent friend of the Military Establishment of our country, and I have been in earnest when I sought to have all these auxiliary expenses cut out and taken away from the Military Establishment in order that the Military Establishment may stand on its own merits. So far as I am personally concerned, I feel that the War Department is making a mistake when it engages in any of these civic pursuits, and certainly this is a character of itinerant activity for which I have no use whatever in the War Department. If the Department of Agriculture wants to handle it, all right.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was not this activity wished upon the War Department by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. McKENZIE. I believe so.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Department of Agriculture desired to get rid of it, and wished it on the War Department.

Mr. McKENZIE. I have sometimes thought it was a conspiracy brought about by those who have it in for the War Department to try to break it down.

Mr. STEPHENS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] whether any of the stallions distributed in Texas were white stallions?

Mr. BLANTON. All of that particular color are reserved for Baltimore. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. KEARNS: After the word "service," in line 26, page 35, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"That section 2 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved July 31, 1894, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows:

"'Retired enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard shall not be construed to hold an office within the meaning of this section,' and that payments heretofore made to retired enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard under appointments to civil offices with a payment of $2,500 or more per annum are hereby validated."

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers a preferential amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: Page 34, line 14, after the word "thereto," insert the figures "$50,000" and strike out the remainder of the paragraph, except the first proviso.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send up his amendment.

Mr. KINDRED. After the provision for the stallions already made in the bill, I want to offer a proviso that one of these stallions shall be kept in the State of New Jersey.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will reduce his amendment to writing and send it to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. KINDRED. I will do that, but I do not want to lose my opportunity to debate the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman claim the floor?

Mr. KINDRED. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the object of my amendment is that one of the stallions provided for in this bill, and I think very properly provided for in order to secure better mounts for the Cavalry service of our Army, shall be kept in that part of New Jersey which is noted for its blue grass, as fine as any in the blue-grass region of Kentucky, where I have the good fortune to own 400 or 500 acres and where I undertook to raise horses, but had to go out of the horse-raising business, in which I hoped to better the mounts for the Army, but had to relinquish that hope because we could not get the proper stallions. So I had to raise mongrels, mules, instead. I understand on the authority of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that as this provision in the Army bill has worked out heretofore it has resulted in the locating of three stallions in his district. I do not know why the gentleman who is so virile should require so many stallions to reinforce him in that district; but I understand that the no less virile gentleman, my good personal friend [Mr. JONES of Texas], has also three stallions in his district.

Mr. BARKLEY. That explains the opposition of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] to this bill.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. JONES of Texas will withdraw his objection if it rests on that, because he can send two of them up into the blue-grass region of New Jersey if you will agree to my amendment. It is a perfectly fair proposition that we should encourage the improvement of the breed of our horses in the East as well as in the Southwest and South. As I have already said, we have unusual conditions and facilities for the raising of good horses in that part of New Jersey.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understand they have sent more of these horses to Virginia than any other State; and I understand there are a number of States that have better facilities for raising horses than does Virginia, as they do not seem to be handling it very efficiently. I am not reflecting on the State of Virginia, but there are other States that grow just as good horses.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman from New York is himself an honored native of Virginia and is a good witness for that State.

Mr. KINDRED. I want to make the point clear that there is no objection coming from me to any particular State having a stallion in order to improve the breed of mounts for the cavalry.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Neither have I any objection, but I think they ought to handle it in an efficient manner.

Mr. KINDRED. I agree with the gentleman on that proposition. But we in the East require some encouragement to improve the breed of our horses. As I have outlined, that portion of the State of New Jersey along the line of the Philadelphia & Reading Railway around Bellemead, about midway between New York and Philadelphia, has a very fine soil for grasses, just as good as any in the blue-grass regions of Kentucky, and we should have encouragement to improve the breed of our horses.

Mr. WINGO. Is that need any more pronounced in horses than in other ways?

Mr. KINDRED. I do not quite get the gentleman's question. The need is pronounced among the horses; and, from the standpoint of quality and distribution, we ought to get some benefit from this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that it is very desirable to continue the encouragement of improving the breed of riding horses in this country. The testimony in the hearings on that subject is very interesting. The House ought to know the story of the hearings, which shows that the motor has driven the horse off the farms of the country except for the heavy labor and drudgery of farm work. Nobody breeds riding or driving horses any more, and the result is that the Army has extreme difficulty in getting proper riding horses. Let me read the testimony of Major Scott in the hearings last year. He says:

Major SCOTT. In 1919, after the war, and during the war, it was found that riding horses in this country were practically extinct. You could not secure them in any large numbers. We had great difficulty in buying enough to supply the Infantry and Artillery, although we used practically no Cavalry during the World War. This is further substantiated by the reports of all foreign officers, who reported to their Government that the type of horse required for riding purposes did not exist in any appreciable numbers. In 1919 the Secretary of War appointed what was known as the remount board, consisting of 10 officers and 10 prominent civilians. The officers were such as chiefs of Cavalry and Artillery, one from the Quartermaster General's office, and one from the office of the Chief of Staff, and distributed through the various services. The civilians were prominent well-known breeders throughout the United States. This board recommended an appropriation of $250,000, which appropriation was secured from Congress, for the fiscal year 1921. This board directed that the Quartermaster General's office draw up a scheme for the encouragement of breeding, which it did, and it was finally approved by the Secretary of War. Last year the appropriation was reduced from $250,000 to $150,000, and this appropriation is to carry on that work.

This year Major Scott again says:

The idea of this breeding is not to raise more horses but better horses. For instance, on the ranches out West they have two or three hundred scrub mares producing colts worth $10 or $15 per head, and we have induced some of those breeders to take 40 of their best mares and raise 30 or 40 colts that will be worth $200 or $300 per head and which will not eat any more than a horse worth only $15 per head.

Now, unless the Government does take a hand and does something to rebuild the standard of riding horses in this country there will be no longer any place for the Government to get the good horses it needs.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. If you are going to subsidize the breeding of saddle horses, does not the gentleman think it ought to be under the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. ANTHONY. It was under the Department of Agriculture, but three years ago it was transferred to the War Department.

Mr. WINGO. What is the need of having fine saddle horses? Does not the gentleman think that if they would train the officers in riding it would overcome the difficulty of trying to breed saddle horses?

Mr. ANTHONY. In my own country saddle horses used to be plenty.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, the gentleman means fancy saddle horses.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman would not have them ride farm horses, would he?

Mr. WINGO. That is the only kind of a horse I ever rode.

Mr. ANTHONY. But the gentleman would not want to ride that kind of a horse and be in the saddle all day.

Mr. WINGO. I have been in the saddle all day long, and for the kind of work I did I did not want a fancy saddle horse with a saddle about as big as a pancake. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, to which a point of order has been reserved.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to make clear a provision in an appropriation bill passed back in 1894. This provision reads as follows:

No person who holds an office the salary or annual compensation attached to which amounts to the sum of $2,500 shall be appointed to or hold any other office to which compensation is attached unless specially heretofore or hereafter specially authorized thereto by law; but this shall not apply to retired officers of the Army or Navy whenever they may be elected to public office or whenever the President shall appoint them to office by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The amendment I have offered, should it become a law, would take care of 12 retired enlisted men who are now employed in the Veterans' Bureau. These men are employed at salaries of $3,000 or $3,500, and they receive a retired enlisted pay of about $1,200 per annum, perhaps some as high as $1,400. If these men were retired Army officers and could get the ear of the President and be appointed by the President to some job, and confirmed by the Senate, this Congress has made that action upon the part of the President and Senate legal. I mean by this the retired Army officer could in that event draw his retired pay and the salary of his office.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. What kind of retired officers are these?

Mr. KEARNS. They are not retired officers, they are retired enlisted men, but the Comptroller General has made the astounding ruling that these men are officers.

Mr. WINGO. How many of these retired enlisted men are there?

Mr. KEARNS. Twelve, employed in the Veterans' Bureau at $3,000 to $3,500.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman mean to leave the impression with the House that there is a large class of retired enlisted men who draw $1,200 a year?

Mr. KEARNS. Oh, yes; I think that is true, is it not, Mr. ANTHONY?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I think very few draw salaries as high as that.

Mr. WINGO. I thought a retired lieutenant or a captain would not draw as much as that.

Mr. ANTHONY. They must have been retired at a very high grade.

Mr. KEARNS. They were retired as noncommissioned officers.

Mr. WINGO. I hardly think they could be drawing that much.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. The evidence shows that the average retired pay of enlisted men on the retired list is $92.54 per month. I am somewhat surprised at that.

Mr. WINGO. Has the gentleman any idea of how many there are on the retired list?

Mr. ANTHONY. Five thousand nine hundred and seventy-three, largely through the operation of the 30-year service law.

Mr. KEARNS. However that may be, there are 12 of these men, I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas, who have been brought into the service in the War Risk Bureau, and they have been working there at a salary of $3,000 to $3,500 per annum for a year and a half. The Comptroller General has written an opinion recently, in which he holds that their employment is void from the beginning, and asks that these men pay back to the United States Treasury all of the money that they have received from the Government as employees in the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. That calls to mind the fact that some employees were put into the Government service who retired under the civil service retirement act, and Congress passed a law permitting them to draw the pay of the position to which they had been appointed, but I recall very distinctly that we put into the law a provision that they should not draw the retirement pay and the pay of the position. Would not that negative the idea that the gentleman has?

Mr. KEARNS. No; I do not think it would. We have many pensioners in the various bureaus who are drawing a pension from the United States and also a salary for the work they do in whatever position they happen to be.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman take the position that retirement is a pension?

Mr. KEARNS. I do, indeed.

Mr. BLACK. In the sense of our pension laws?

Mr. KEARNS. It is not a pension under the pension laws, but it is nothing more nor less than a pension. These men, as retired enlisted men, can not be called back into the military service at the whim of the Military Establishment.

Mr. BLACK. That is true; but it is granted, for example, if a man has served 30 years. He may not be disabled in any way, but out of the gratitude and appreciation of that long service the Government retires him. I do not look upon it, however, as a pension.

Mr. KEARNS. These men are employed in the War Risk Bureau at salaries of $3,000 to $3,500 per annum.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEARNS. They have been employed there because of their technical knowledge. If you bar them from employment the Government will be required to go out, or the bureau will, and get other men at the same salary who have not the technical knowledge. Consequently the War Risk Bureau will suffer. These men are not taking anything from the Government that some other man would not have taken had he been employed.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; but they are taking jobs away from other men who probably want them and who could fill them just as well.

Mr. KEARNS. Oh, not as well, because they have a technical knowledge.

Mr. BLANTON. When they are also drawing retired pay themselves. Is that right to the rest of the population of the country?

Mr. KEARNS. What would the gentleman say to this: These men have been employed there for over a year and a half. The Comptroller General has rendered an opinion only recently, and under that opinion the order has gone out that these men shall pay back every nickle that they have received under their employment there for a year and a half.

Mr. BLANTON. That is exactly what the Members of Congress did when they enlisted in the service during the war. They did not draw the two salaries; they waived one.

Mr. KEARNS. But this Congress has enacted into law this provision that I have read caring for the retired officers. Congress always does take care of the man higher up.

Mr. BLANTON. We applied this to General Harbord this morning in this very bill.

Mr. KEARNS. The general law does not apply to these retired officers; but if he be a poor enlisted man, then there are some men in this House who are always found ready to object to the enlisted man getting anything.

Mr. BLACK. Inasmuch as I interrupted the gentleman with a question, I would say that I would not favor the provision in the law. I did not vote for it. I do not believe in a man drawing more than one salary from the Government. If he is drawing a retired salary and has gone back on the active list, then I think he ought to get the pay of the active list.

Mr. KEARNS. Then why permit men who are on the pension rolls at a high pension to draw salaries? Some men are on the pension rolls for more than these men receive as retired salary, and yet they are employed throughout the Government service.

Mr. BLACK. I do not look upon a pension in the same way as I look upon retired pay.

Mr. KEARNS. The effect on the Treasury and the principle are the same. These men have gone into the service and as enlisted men have gone through the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, and have rendered valuable service to their country, for which they have been retired. This amendment ought to become a law at once, because if not these 12 men will be required to pay back something like $4,000 each, something that none of them is able to do. As employees of the War Risk Bureau they have rendered service to the United States, a better service than any other 12 men could have rendered because of their peculiar knowledge.

Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman will allow just this suggestion, I will not interrupt him any more and will get him more time if he wishes it. As far as I am concerned, I would be perfectly willing to vote for a provision such as we adopted in reference to the pay of civilian employees who had been retired under the civil service retirement act—that is, permit men to draw the salary of the active position which they were holding but not retired pay.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. I will.

Mr. ROACH. These 12 employees in the Veterans' Bureau coming within the decision which the gentleman says was rendered by the comptroller to repay their salaries, if they elected to pay back to the Government their retirement pay instead of their salaries, would not that remedy the situation?

Mr. KEARNS. No. That official has rendered a decision that the employment in the Veterans' Bureau from the beginning was void.

Mr. ROACH. It seems to me if they elected to pay back their retirement pay rather than the salary that would remedy the situation.

Mr. KEARNS. It will not cure the opinion rendered by the Comptroller General, and he seems to be the highest authority on that subject—the last word, I should say.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. I will.

Mr. FIELDS. I understood the gentleman to say that commissioned officers on the retired list had been extended the same protection of law that he now seeks for these men?

Mr. KEARNS. Absolutely.

Mr. FIELDS. And the policy Congress has adopted has extended that protection——

Mr. KEARNS. Discriminating in favor of the retired officer.

Mr. FIELDS. In favor of the commissioned officer as against the enlisted man who has served 30 years?

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman from Kentucky has grasped the point entirely.

Mr. FIELDS. Well, I am never in favor of discriminating against the enlisted man in favor of the man who has the better job.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition on the reservation of the point of order. Mr. Chairman, if it were not for discriminating against the enlisted man as in favor of the officer, I would make the point of order against this amendment, because I am not in favor of any man drawing two salaries. But I am in favor of amending that law that the gentleman read and providing like we did this morning in reference to General Harbord, who has joined this big corporation and is to be its head when he retires. We have kept him from drawing his salary then from this Government. We ought to prevent any employee of this Government from drawing two salaries, but, as the gentleman says, it is an inequity that we are holding against the enlisted man in favor of the officer, and I am not willing to continue that inequitable action against the enlisted man. But I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to this fact that he has opened the doors not merely to these 12 men in the Veterans' Bureau, but he has opened the doors to 5,793 other men who might be in the same fix. There are 5,793 of them who could keep on drawing their $92 per month from this Government in retired pay and then hold their other office at $3,000 to $3,500 a year from the Government in another department, and thereby deprive other deserving American citizens from taking those jobs.

Mr. KEARNS. But they have a job; there are only 12 in the service.

Mr. BLANTON. There could be 5,793 of them, if they could get such offices, because there are 5,793 enlisted men on retired pay.

Mr. KEARNS. Hardly that. All of these 12 men are retired noncommissioned officers, and they have the technical knowledge that the ordinary enlisted man has not.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and because of that I am not going to make a point of order.

Mr. KEARNS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say this, however, that the gentleman from Ohio ought not to stop until he gets that statute repealed that permits any officer on retired pay to hold another big job and draw another big salary from the Government. The fundamental idea of retired pay is to reward a man who is not able to make his own way. That is the idea, that after a long service, when he gets to where he can not earn his own way, to take care of him. It does not contemplate an able-bodied man; an able-minded man shall leave the service on retired pay and then draw a big salary in another department of the Government. It is not right and ought to be stopped.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion we should have a general statute that would provide that when any retired officer or enlisted man accepts a position with the Government of the United States that he should receive the compensation for that position less his retirement pay, to go back to his retired status when his services are concluded in that position; but, as I understand it, that is not the law at this time. But here is an emergency. Here are 12 men who served the Government in the capacity of enlisted men until they gained their retirement right. They were employed in the Veterans' Bureau because of their particular knowledge of that character of work which they were called upon to perform. They are performing that work and have received the compensation, and I suppose like the most of us have expended it for living, and now because of this ruling they are called upon to return this money to the Treasury. It is a hardship upon them that the Congress should not pass over lightly.

As I said in the beginning, I think we should have a general statute that where any officer or enlisted man accepts a Government position he should receive the compensation that goes with that position less his retirement pay, to revert back to his retired status when his services in that particular position are discontinued. As I previously stated, that is not the case, and if Congress does not extend relief to these 12 men they are confronted with a great hardship, a hardship that doubtless they are unable to meet. I trust that in the interest of fairness and justice the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] will be adopted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, on the reservation of a point of order, I wish to say that it has been the policy of the Government always that where an Army officer, retired or active, fills a civilian position the money that he is receiving by reason of his holding an Army position should be credited to that attached to the civilian position.

There is a principle involved in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS]. He seeks not only to validate the salaries that have heretofore been paid to these men—these retired noncommissioned officers—but he seeks to recognize a principle never before recognized by the Government—that where a man is on retired pay he shall not only receive the civilian salary, but he shall receive the civilian salary plus the retired pay.

What is the rule, so far as the War Department is concerned, when retired Army officers come back into active service? He gets not the retired pay and also the active pay; he gets merely the pay of the rank he fills while he is performing active duty. Take, for instance, the case cited by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK]. If you allow this amendment to go into effect, these men when they become of retired age will be entitled to a double retirement pay—retirement by reason of their having served 30 years or more in the Army as enlisted men, and also retirement under the general civil list retirement law.

This is a matter of too broad a scope to be considered at this time, and I feel constrained, for the reason stated, to make the point of order that it is legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] makes the point of order against the amendment. It is clearly and avowedly legislation, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, the discussion that has just taken place suggests to my mind some facts that sooner or later Congress is going to have to face. There are over 5,000 of these retired enlisted men drawing an average retirement pay of over $90 per month. I wonder who on the Committee on Military Affairs or who on the Committee on Appropriations can tell me how many retired officers we have and what the total pay is for them per year?

Mr. STAFFORD. There were 1,659 retired officers on June 30 last. At the present time there are 1,708.

Mr. WINGO. What is the total salary drawn?

Mr. STAFFORD. Last year the total pay was $6,000,000, and now they have asked for an additional amount, which will make $7,000,000, as recommended by the subcommittee.

Mr. WINGO. How many reserve officers not on active duty?

Mr. STAFFORD. I said there were 1,708. That was on June 30. There were on December 31, 2,192.

Mr. WINGO. Now, can the gentleman tell me how many reserve officers there are now who are drawing salaries, and what the total pay of that group is?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is estimated that next year the appropriation for that purpose—commissioned officers we are speaking about, not noncommissioned—will be $7,000,000 for retired pay, not for reserves but retired pay.

Mr. WINGO. I am talking about reserve officers in civil life now drawing salaries.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are no reserve officers, or very few, drawing retired pay, or pay while filling a civilian position. The only time when reserve officers are paid is while attending military camps. They get the pay of their grade. Or they are paid when they go to Army schools for three months. They then get their pay and allowances.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, take a lawyer, practicing law in my own town, a reserve officer. You say he gets no salary except when he goes to a camp?

Mr. STAFFORD. He does not.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is sure of that?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. There are a few reserve officers assigned to military camps and camps of instruction.

Mr. WINGO. How many persons are retired under the civil service law, and what is the total pay roll on that, estimated for next year?

Mr. STAFFORD. This committee has not jurisdiction over the civil-service list.

Mr. WINGO. I am not trying to get into controversy with the committee. I want to call attention to the fact that you have a growing number of people who, by reason of some connection with the Federal pay roll, become for all practical purposes pensioners, whether they be disabled or not, by reason of length of service or other things. That is growing. It is going to continue to grow. And yet Congress, which has done that, says that men who in the early days out in the Indian Territory performed a practical military service are not eligible to pensions. They throw up their hands in holy horror when there are some who wish to pension those men, among whose ranks there was a greater casualty in percentage than in any Army that the United States has ever placed upon the field of battle.

You say to them, "You can not be pensioned in your old age, when helpless and crippled, although you risked your life out in the Indian Territory under a special law and under the orders of a special court and did a special service in place of military troops," and yet you have one of the sons of such a man drawing pay as a retired civilian employee. Oh, you say, it violates the democratic principle of government when you say you are going to put an ex-United States marshal, for example, on a pension roll. I wonder what these gentlemen are going to do who are building up this civil retirement list. I wonder what they will do about old-age pensions. Do you think you can pension those who have been favored by holding public positions and hope to escape the demands of those who have become broken and disabled upon life's far-flung battle line and have become public charges upon the charity of their communities? I wonder how you are going to meet that.

A few days ago we saw in the paper the statement of a coal dealer or some one else in the city of Washington with reference to the Government fuel yard. We put through a proposition for the joint purchasing of fuel for the departments of the Government. This newspaper article stated that over 600 private families in this city are served with coal from this Government coal yard simply because of their connection with the Army and the Navy. Another case of special favors for a special class. You are going to have to meet these propositions sooner or later, and you are going to have to put on greater restrictions or else provide a general law that will provide old-age pensions equal to that you pay those who have been favored by public office, either civil or military.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SIGNAL CORPS.

SIGNAL SERVICE OF THE ARMY.

Telegraph and telephone systems: Purchase, equipment, operation, and repair of military telegraph, telephone, radio, cable, and signaling systems; signal equipment and stores, heliographs, signal lanterns, flags, and other necessary instruments; wind vanes, barometers, anemometers, thermometers, and other meteorological instruments; photographic and cinematographic work performed for the Army by the Signal Corps; motor cycles, motor-driven and other vehicles for technical and official purposes in connection with the construction, operation, and maintenance of communication or signaling systems, and supplies for their operation and maintenance; professional and scientific books of reference, pamphlets, periodicals, newspapers, and maps for use in the office of the Chief Signal Officer and the Signal Corps School, Camp Alfred Vail, N. J.; telephone apparatus, including rental and payment for commercial, exchange, message, trunk-line, long-distance, and leased-line telephone service at or connecting any post, camp, cantonment, depot, arsenal, headquarters, hospital, aviation station, or other office or station of the Army, excepting local telephone service for the various bureaus of the War Department in the District of Columbia, and toll messages pertaining to the office of the Secretary of War; electric time service; the rental of commercial telegraph lines and equipment and their operation at or connecting any post, camp, cantonment, depot, arsenal, headquarters, hospital, aviation station, or other office or station of the Army, including payment for individual telegraph messages transmitted over commercial lines; electrical installations and maintenance at military posts, cantonments, camps, and stations of the Army, fire control and direction apparatus and matériel for Field Artillery; salaries of civilian employees, including those necessary as instructors at vocational schools; supplies, general repairs, reserve supplies, and other expenses connected with the collecting and transmitting of information for the Army by telegraph or otherwise; experimental investigation, research, purchase and development or improvements in apparatus, and maintenance of signaling and accessories thereto, including patent rights and other rights thereto, including machines, instruments, and other equipment for laboratory and repair purposes; tuition, laboratory fees, etc., for Signal Corps officers detailed to civilian technical schools for the purpose of pursuing technical courses of instruction along Signal Corps lines; lease, alteration, and repair of such buildings required for storing or guarding Signal Corps supplies, equipment, and personnel when not otherwise provided for, including the land therefor, the introduction of water, electric light and power, sewerage, grading, roads and walks, and other equipment required, $1,875,000: Provided, That not to exceed $475,000 from this appropriation may be expended for salaries and wages of civilian employees, the foregoing limitation not to apply to temporary labor necessary in carrying out authorized construction or repair projects nor mechanics or labor employed on the manufacture or repair of Signal Corps apparatus in Signal Corps shops or laboratories; not to exceed $475,000 may be expended for commercial and existing Government-owned telephone and telegraph service; not to exceed $500,000 may be expended for signal equipment for organizations; not to exceed $5,000 may be expended for pigeon service; not to exceed $75,000 may be expended for photographic and cinematographic service; and not to exceed $75,000 may be expended for the operation and maintenance of Camp Alfred Vail.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee for some information. This section for the Signal Corps carries a number of large appropriations for the signal service of the Army. I should like to ask how the appropriations under this subdivision compare with the appropriations for last year.

Mr. ANTHONY. Under the different items of the paragraph the gentleman refers to there has been an increase in research work from $60,000 to $70,000. In meteorological work there has been an increase from $20,000 to $30,000. For equipping Army transports with improved radio we have increased the appropriation from $6,000 to $16,000.

Mr. ROACH. What is the expenditure for radio service now?

Mr. ANTHONY. All through the Army?

Mr. ROACH. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. It would be very difficult to arrive at that. For the information of the gentleman I will state that in former years the expense of the telephone and telegraph service of the Army was tremendously large. It reached over half a million dollars. We have been pruning down these appropriations from year to year, and the Signal Corps has met the necessity for lessening this expense by installing radio communication to supplement the commercial telegraph and telephone, so that now in this country the Army transacts its business from post to post almost entirely by the use of radio. It has a complete interdepartmental radio system installed, operated by the Signal Corps.

Mr. ROACH. I only wanted to bring out what developments and improvements had been made in the radio service within the last year.

Mr. ANTHONY. I can not give the gentleman the information from the scientific standpoint, except from statements made to us by officers of the Signal Corps, that practically all the radio equipment we acquired during the war is out of date, and they claim that they are under the necessity of replacing with up-to-date equipment much of that which was acquired within the last few years.

Mr. ROACH. I take it that the gentleman's committee will look with favor on liberal appropriations for radio service.

Mr. ANTHONY. I believe we should keep up to date in that respect.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that the proposed appropriation of $1,875,000 for the Signal Corps is the estimate of the department.

I was greatly interested in the exposition that was made by the representatives of the Signal Corps as to their elaborate system of radio communication reaching from Washington to the Pacific coast. They have a main trunk line established right across the country, with branch headquarters, with one main artery leading to Indianapolis and another one to Leavenworth and going on right across the country through Chicago, Omaha, and across the mountains to San Francisco. The radio, however, has not been found to be successful in communication between the State of Washington and Alaska, because of atmospheric conditions there. In this bill later on you will find that the committee have recommended an appropriation of $750,000 for the laying of a new cable, and an authorization for an additional $750,000. Last year members of the subcommittee were rather skeptical as to whether a new cable was necessary to replace the old one. The advances that had been made in radio communication would, some thought, supplant the use of the cable system. But upon special inquiry made of representatives of the Signal Corps it was stated that it would cost more to establish sufficient radio service to do the work of communication between Seattle and Alaska than the cost of a new cable would be.

The Signal Corps service of the Army is one of the most interesting branches. In fact, all the activities of the War Department are most interesting to a sitter-by as the officers in charge of the various branches testify to the improvements that are going on from time to time. No improvements are so marked and rapid as those in the radio service. The testimony is that the invention of to-day is virtually obsolete to-morrow, so rapid have been the strides. It will be interesting to the gentleman and to the House to know that even in ordnance many of the bombs that were used in air attacks during the World War are absolutely obsolete. Most of the munitions that were in use in the World War have become obsolete for present use. We have availed ourselves to the full of all the valuable information that our Army officers obtained in their observations in the World War, and we are going on only in the slightest experimental way to take advantage of all these modern improvements.

Mr. ROACH. I am glad to have the benefit of the observation which has just been made by the gentleman from Wisconsin and to know that the members of the committee are likewise interested in this important work. I am glad to know that it is receiving the attention of the committee and at the hands of the department as well as at the hands of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. We have not cut down the appropriation one cent.

Mr. ROACH. I was interested to know, and felt that the country would be interested to know, that the appropriation for adequate installation has been made.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to make one single observation. The radio of last year as compared with the radio of this year is about like comparing a wheelbarrow to a Pierce-Arrow. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

AIR SERVICE.

AIR SERVICE, ARMY.

For creating, maintaining, and operating at established flying schools and balloon schools courses of instruction for officers, students, and enlisted men, including cost of equipment and supplies necessary for instruction, purchase of tools, equipment, materials, machines, textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, instruments and materials for theoretical and practical instruction; for maintenance, repair, storage, and operation of airships, war balloons, and other aerial machines, including instruments, materials, gas plants, hangars, and repair shops, and appliances of every sort and description necessary for the operation, construction, or equipment of all types of aircraft, and all necessary spare parts and equipment connected therewith and the establishment of landing and take-off runways; for purchase of supplies for securing, developing, printing, and reproducing photographs in connection with aerial photography; improvement, equipment, maintenance, and operation of plants for testing and experimental work, and procuring and introducing water, electric light and power, repair of such utilities at such plants; for the acquisition of land or interest in land by purchase, lease, or condemnation where necessary to explore for, procure, or reserve helium gas, and also for the purchase, manufacture, construction, maintenance, and operation of plants for the production thereof and experimentation therewith; salaries and wages of civilian employees as may be necessary, and payment of their traveling and other necessary expenses as authorized by existing law; transportation of materials in connection with consolidation of Air Service activities; experimental investigation and purchase and development of new types of aircraft, accessories thereto, and aviation engines, including patents and other rights thereto, and plans, drawings, and specifications thereof; for the purchase, manufacture, and construction of airships, balloons, and other aerial machines, including instruments, gas plants, hangars, and repair shops, and appliances of every sort and description necessary for the operation, construction, or equipment of all types of aircraft, and all necessary spare parts and equipment connected therewith; for the marking of military airways where the purchase of land is not involved; for the purchase, manufacture, and issue of special clothing, wearing apparel, and similar equipment for aviation purposes; for all necessary expenses connected with the sale or disposal of surplus or obsolete aeronautical equipment, and the rental of buildings and other facilities for the handling or storage of such equipment; for the services of such consulting engineers at experimental stations of the Air Service as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, including necessary traveling expenses; purchase of special apparatus and appliances, repairs and replacements of same used in connection with special scientific medical research in the Air Service; for maintenance and operation of such Air Service printing plants outside of the District of Columbia as may be authorized in accordance with law; for publications, station libraries, special furniture, supplies and equipment for offices, shops, and laboratories; for special services, including the salvaging of wrecked aircraft, $12,426,000: Provided, That not to exceed $2,500,000 from this appropriation may be expended for pay and expenses of civilian employees other than those employed in experimental and research work; not exceeding $500,000 may be expended for experimentation, conservation, and production of helium; not exceeding $3,000,000 may be expended for experimental and research work with airplanes or lighter-than-air craft and their equipment, including the pay of necessary civilian employees: Provided, That not less than $50,000 of this amount shall be used for continuation of airplane bombing tests against obsolete naval craft; not exceeding $500,000 may be expended for the production of lighter-than-air equipment; and not exceeding $300,000 may be expended for improvement of stations, hangars, and gas plants for the Regular Army: Provided further, That not less than $2,646,000 shall be expended for the production and purchase of new airplanes and their equipment, spare parts, and accessories: Provided further, That claims not exceeding $250 in amount for damages to persons and private property resulting from the operation of aircraft at home and abroad may be settled out of the funds appropriated hereunder when each claim is substantiated by a survey report of a board of officers appointed by the commanding officer of the nearest aviation post and approved by the Chief of Air Service and the Secretary of War: Provided further, That claims so settled and paid from the sum hereby appropriated shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of $4,000: Provided further, That section 3648, Revised Statutes, shall not apply to subscriptions for foreign and professional newspapers and periodicals to be paid for from this appropriation.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee if he will make some statement and give the committee some information in relation to the activities of the Air Service work that is being carried on in this subdivision.

Mr. ANTHONY. In regard to the appropriation for the Air Service, we have allowed the estimate submitted by the Budget, except that we have reduced the item for experimental development at the Dayton plant about $200,000. We allowed them in full the amount they asked for new production.

Mr. ROACH. To what degree of success and improvement is the work being carried on?

Mr. ANTHONY. The work at the Dayton plant has been toward the development of a new engine. They have made a marked advance in the development of airships along the line toward an all-metal type of plane. The plane of the future, that will be manufactured under this appropriation, will be an all-metal type. For instance, it is proposed to expend for new production—the major item will be 48 pursuit planes that will cost $15,000 each. This will be one of three types they have under consideration at this time. There will be 152 observation planes costing $12,500 each that will involve a total of $2,640,000. In addition to that they are going to build three lighter-than-air ships, type C, of 200,000 cubic feet capacity, costing $72,000 each, and another costing $70,000. They are for observation purposes. The total for lighter-than-air ships is $350,000. To remodel Liberty engines they will utilize a considerable amount. It costs about $1,000 to remodel a Liberty engine. That is in substance how they propose to expend this appropriation.

Mr. ROACH. I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is interesting to know that last year we found that in reference to the previous year's appropriation of $3,000,000 for new production for Air Service the War Department was frank enough to tell us that they had not been able to expend the money because they had been unable to decide on the proper type of plane. Now they feel that they have reached a point where they are able to go ahead. They have obligated the money they had last year, and together with that of this year they will use in this work.

Mr. ROACH. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL: Page 49, line 19, after the word "appropriation," change the period to a colon and add the following: "Provided further, That hereafter actual and necessary expenses of warrant officers and enlisted men traveling by air in connection with aviation shall be paid from the appropriation for the work in connection with which the travel is performed."

Mr. HICKS and Mr. BLANTON reserved a point of order.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee in reference to this amendment—it is clearly a limitation and a proper limitation. Would not that be the effect of it?

Mr. ANTHONY. In my opinion, the amendment along the line of a proper accounting by charging to the individual appropriation the expenditure pertaining thereto is desirable. All the other branches of the service have the right to charge the traveling expenses attached thereto, except the Air Service. It is a new form of travel and communication, and this is being asked for by the Air Service.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I am in great sympathy with the merits of the proposition. I believe it is one that should be enacted into law. I have investigated it as far as the Navy is concerned, and I think the proposition is fair and just; but in protecting as well as I can the procedure of the House in regard to legislation on an appropriation bill, I shall make the point of order on the ground that the word "hereafter" provides for permanent legislation in violation of the rule against legislation on appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The services of aeronautical engineers, skilled draftsmen, and such technical and other services as the Secretary of War may deem necessary may be employed only in the office of the Chief of Air Service to carry into effect the various appropriations for aeronautical purposes, to be paid from such appropriations, in addition to the foregoing employees appropriated for in the office of the Chief of Air Service: Provided, That the entire expenditure for this purpose for the fiscal year 1924 shall not exceed $90,000, and the Secretary of War shall each year in the Budget report to Congress the number of persons so employed, their duties, and the amount paid to each.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13793, the Army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 3384. An act authorizing an appropriation to meet proportionate expenses of providing a drainage system for Paiute Indian lands in the State of Nevada within the Newlands reclamation project of the Reclamation Service; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 4029. An act amendatory of and supplemental to an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Co. and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and acts supplemental thereto approved, respectively, May 2, 1872, March 3, 1873, and June 22, 1874; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 18, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

912. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 1709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act of March 3, 1911; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

913. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation fixing the total cost of officers' quarters at $18,000 for a general officer, $15,000 for a colonel or an officer above the rank of captain, or $12,000 for an officer of or below the rank of captain (H. Doc. No. 534); to the Committees on Military Affairs and Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FOCHT: Committee on the District of Columbia. S. J. Res. 247. SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 18, 1923.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, January 16, 1923.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

INVITATION TO ARMY WAR COLLEGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the commandant of the Army War College, extending an invitation to the Members of the Senate to attend conferences and lectures at the War College on the campaigns and battles of the World War, which was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

THE ARMY WAR COLLEGE,
Washington Barracks, D. C., January 17, 1923.

The VICE PRESIDENT,
Senate Chamber.

MY DEAR SIR: On January 25, 26, and 27 the program of conferences and lectures at the Army War College includes subjects which, I believe, will be of special interest to Members of Congress as indicating the character of work that is being done at this institution.

These conferences will cover some of the phases of the more important campaigns and battles of the World War. While the doors of the college are always open to Members of Congress and we are glad to have them visit us at any time, I am sending the program of these three days with a special invitation to you and the Members of the Senate to be present at some or all of these conferences. The program has been arranged in the hope that it will meet the convenience of the Members.

Very sincerely yours, E. F. MCGLACHLIN, Jr.,
Major General, United States Army, Commandant.

THE ARMY WAR COLLEGE,
Washington Barracks, D. C., January 17, 1923.

BRIDGE BILLS.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I wish to report one Senate and several House bills giving permission for the erection of bridges over navigable streams. There is no objection to them; they are in regular form; and I shall ask unanimous consent for their present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the reports will be received.

MERRIMACK RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. I report back favorably from the Committee on Commerce without amendment the bill (S. 4288) to grant the consent of Congress for the special commission constituted by an act of the Legislature of Massachusetts to construct a bridge across the Merrimack River. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted for the special commission constituted by chapter 507 of the acts passed by the Legislature of Massachusetts during the session of 1922, and the county commissioners of Essex County, in the State of Massachusetts, acting jointly or separately, and their successors and assigns, to construct or reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Merrimack River at Main Street, in the city of Haverhill, in the county of Essex, in the State of Massachusetts, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, said bridge to replace the present or Haverhill lower bridge, so called, at said location.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAM ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. CALDER. I report back favorably, without amendment, from the Committee on Commerce the bill (H. R. 12777) granting the consent of Congress to the cities of Grand Forks, N. Dak., and East Grand Forks, Minn., or either of them, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Red River of the North, and I submit a report (No. 1020) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the cities of Grand Forks, N. Dak., and East Grand Forks, Minn., or either of them, to construct, maintain, and operate, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, a dam across the Red River of the North at or near the cities of Grand Forks, N. Dak., and East Grand Forks, Minn.: Provided, That the work shall not be commenced until the plans therefor have been filed with and approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That this act shall not be construed to authorize the use of such dam to develop water power or generate electricity.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of this dam hereby authorized is commenced within two years and completed within four years from the date hereof.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority is hereby granted to the State Road Department of the State of Florida, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Escambia River, Fla., and its tributaries, between Pensacola and Milton, near Ferry Pass, Fla., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLERK HIRE OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS AND DELEGATES.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask consent to report from the Committee on Appropriations favorably a House joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 16) providing for pay to clerks to Members of Congress and Delegates. It is a measure of only a few lines, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That hereafter appropriations made by Congress for clerk hire for Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners shall be paid by the Clerk of the House of Representatives to one or two persons to be designated by each Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, the names of such persons to be placed upon the roll of employees of the House of Representatives, together with the amount to be paid each; and Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners elect to Congress shall likewise be entitled to make such designations: Provided, That such persons shall be subject to removal at any time by such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner with or without cause.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 4324) to amend "An act to authorize association of producers of agricultural products," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1025) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HALE (by request):

A bill (S. 4364) for the relief of the widow of Capt. Benjamin D. Cotter (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 4365) to authorize the sale of lands allotted to Indians under the Moses agreement of July 7, 1883; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 4366) for the relief of W. Ernest Jarvis (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McKINLEY:

A bill (S. 4367) for the relief of Mary B. Jenks; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4368) granting an increase of pension to Emma J. Eley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:

A bill (S. 4369) for the relief of Wilhelmina D. Holman and the estate of M. Samuel; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 270) concerning lands devised to the United States Government by the late Joseph Battell, of Middlebury, Vt.; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

RANK AND PAY OF NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. KELLOGG submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7864) providing for sundry matters affecting the Naval Establishment, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

THE SILVER SITUATION.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, much anxiety has been felt in certain sections of the country in which the silver industry is important concerning its future when the Pittman Act shall have spent its force. I have here a letter addressed to me a few days ago by one of the officers of the Anaconda Copper Mining Co., a large producer of silver, which is an instructive and interesting discussion of the general subject, regarding which Congress will doubtless be called upon to legislate in the future. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD, and in 8-point type.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

ANACONDA COPPER MINING CO.,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
New York, December 20, 1922.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: In accordance with our conversation of the other day, I submit a general outline of the silver problem as it appears to the American producers, assuring you that we are keenly alive to the importance of the matter and anxious to avail ourselves of the proffered cooperation of yourself and your associates upon a subject that so vitally affects the mining industry in Montana and other States where precious-metal mining constitutes a basic industry.

It is rather difficult to confine even the briefest digest of the silver situation within the proper space of an ordinary letter. There are so many ramifications to the subject that one is tempted, no matter from what angle an approach is made, to digress along lines that inevitably lead into a maze of social, economic, and financial problems, through which no clear pathway is marked and regarding which no definite opinion can be expressed, as the ultimate solution is dependent upon the policies adopted and carried out by the more important Governments with reference to their fiscal requirements and currency systems.

The situation may be summarized by inviting answers to two queries:

First. What, if any, plan have the silver producers, as being the most directly interested, to offer in meeting the situation which will confront the industry upon the termination of purchases of domestic silver under the Pittman Act?

Second. What, if any, assistance can be extended by the Government in connection with the problem?

In answer to the first inquiry, I know that while the matter has been the subject of discussion among the principal producers, they have been unable to formulate a definite plan, principally because they have been and are dealing with a subject embracing many unknown factors; and, second, it has been felt that before any plan is adopted there should be indicated the extent to which cooperation on the part of the Government may be depended upon to enable a proper study of the situation to be made.

In order to explain these rather cryptic statements, a general review of the situation may aid. Whatever differences of opinion there may have been in the past upon the subject of bimetallism or the establishment of a fixed ratio between the coinage value of gold and silver, it will probably be conceded that it would be neither wise nor expedient to attempt a revival of this discussion, nor to undertake to solve the question by the adoption of such a remedy. Issues of controversial economics must be avoided if possible; political economics will destroy, not assist, constructive effort.

If these conclusions be accepted, the position of the American silver producer, in the absence of special legislation, is dependent upon the demand for his product in the markets of the world; and the price should be the reflex of such demand, freed from any effort to artificially increase, decrease, or "fix it." The significance of this statement will become more apparent as the text of this letter is followed.

I have read recently with interest the speech of Senator PITTMAN with reference to the Pittman Act and his prediction as to the future of the silver-producing industry, printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 26 last. I regret, while mindful of his great ability, that I am unable to be as unqualifiedly optimistic about silver's future as is the Senator. Neither can I bring myself to complete agreement with the economics of the situation as outlined in his instructive speech.

It is true that there is not "an unlimited supply of silver in the world ready for mining." It is also true, generally speaking, that the "problem, i. e., the price of silver, is governed by the law of supply and demand for silver throughout the world," but it must be remembered that the current production of silver is not the measure of the supply and that fiscal legislation very largely controls the demand. No one knows how much available silver there is in the world, but experience teaches that at a sufficiently high price, i. e., when it reaches a value as bullion in excess of its value as coin, enormous quantities flow from unexpected sources. During the exceptionally high prices of 1921, tens of millions of ounces in foreign coin were shipped to the refineries of the United States for remelting and refining. On the other hand, had it not been for the fact that the paper-note issue of India was convertible immediately into silver rupees—a demand of fiscal law—the crisis that confronted the British Government in 1917 and 1918, so graphically described by the Senator, would not have occurred; there would have been no necessity to have furnished the enormous quantity of bullion required to meet that emergency, nor to have enacted the Pittman Act as an enabling measure.

The release from the Treasury vaults of 209,000,000 ounces of silver melted under the act, as well as the dumping by European, Central and South American Governments during the period of high prices, has not depleted the silver supply of the world, but merely added to free stock. The bullion has changed hands, but it is still available; on the other hand, a volume of legislation has been enacted during the past three years, intended to, and which will have an important effect upon the demand for silver, none of it tending to an improvement of its market position.

It is because of these important factors, the effect of which can not be accurately measured, that the American producer is unable, unaided, to form definite opinions as to the future of his product.

We do know that upon the expiration of the Pittman Act we will face a new situation, and that unless intelligent study is given the matter we will be at sea until time and tide teach us that which to some extent we should endeavor to anticipate. It is in furthering the practical study that should be made of the situation that I think you and your colleagues, whose constituencies are interested, can be of invaluable assistance.

To develop what I have in mind, I wish, at the risk of perhaps repeating what you already know, to review the situation:

Without discussing the details of the transition from bimetallism to monometallism, which occurred world-wide during the last quarter of the nineteenth century, it is in accord with the facts to assert that the disintegration of the Latin Union was responsible for conditions that led to the enactment of the Bland Act, and, later, the Sherman law, under which more than 400,000,000 ounces of silver were compulsorily purchased by the United States Government; that the effect of these measures was to support the price; and that, following the repeal of the latter law in 1891, America, although by far the most important, if the not the largest, producer of silver, practically ceased to have any influence in fixing the price of the metal until the modus operandi of the London market became disturbed by war conditions.

The enormous increase in the export trade of China and India during the last 25 years, coupled with the fact that silver was by tradition, adaptation, and legislation the money-metal needed by those countries, resulted in the Far East being the most important market for the world's output. The cessation of legislative purchases by the United States was followed by an increased flow of the metal to India, with the inevitable result that the exchange value of the rupee declined, until in 1895 it was quoted at about 50 per cent of the normal rate. It is maxim of oriental exchange that when it is bought, silver is sold. In other words, when one buys and pays for oriental exports, silver must be sold to liquidate the balance. The Government, as a protective measure, closed the Indian Mints to free coinage and finally established the sterling value of the rupee at 16 pence or 15 rupees to the pound sterling. From that time on London absolutely fixed the price of silver throughout the world.

In order to understand just how London has been able to fix the price of silver without consulting the producers of the metal certain prevailing conditions must be kept in mind:

(a) London has been and is the principal financial center of the world.

(b) It is the capital of the British Empire, whose possessions and the trade incident to them extend around the world.

(c) It is the clearing house through which the world's balance of trade is adjusted, and its financial sway is even greater than the political domination affecting more than 600,000,000 people.

The demand governing the price of silver is that which arises from its use as a money metal. This demand is affected not so much by the volume of current production as by the relative prosperity or adversity of peoples scattered to the remotest sections of the globe. A favorable monsoon in India, a flood or famine in China, are of infinitely greater effect on demand and price of the metal than is the discovery of a new or the failure of an old mining district.

Inasmuch as the volume of trade between China, India, and the balance of the Orient, on the one hand, and the other British possessions, on the other, greatly exceeds their respective trade balances with the rest of the world, and, moreover, as this trade is financed and the balances adjusted between these essentially silver-using countries and those whose currency is based upon the gold standard through the medium of the great Anglo-eastern banks, with headquarters in London, it is apparent why that center has such a predominating influence in the situation.

In ordinary times, since the repeal of the Sherman law and prior to the disturbance of the late war, every ounce of silver produced in the world was sold on the basis of a London quotation, as was also the purchase of every ton of silver ore by custom smelters throughout the United States.

The London quotation is arrived at in the following unique method:

Four silver-brokerage firms in London "fix the market." Representatives of these firms meet every business day. They hold in hand the orders to sell bullion and also the orders to buy silver to meet the exchange balances drawn upon London accounts. The price is adjusted to meet this situation, advancing when the exchange demand exceeds the supply, declining when the reverse is the case. This operation is known to the market as "fixing the price." The result is cabled all over the world, and a miner in Butte selling a load of ore is settled with upon the price so fixed, repeated by wire from New York through the medium of Handy & Harmon, silver brokers, and the Western Union Telegraph Co.

Without questioning the integrity of the participants to the "fixing" of the price, as it is universally acknowledged that a very high degree of honesty has marked this transaction, and conceding further that the exchange requirements in London will, until trade channels follow new courses, be the dominant factor in the situation, still the American producer has felt a dissatisfaction with the prevailing method and has entertained a desire for a change that would afford him opportunity to know the facts that govern the situation that he might exercise some function in connection with the disposal of his product. It may be akin to the desire of a Republican in Mississippi wishing to vote; nevertheless we conceive it to be his right.

I will be pleased to furnish you with greater detail as to the operations of the London silver market should you desire me to do so.

I think it unnecessary to enlarge upon it in this letter.

In addition to the lack of opportunity to participate actively in the silver market, a further cause of dissatisfaction—I am not here discussing the merits of the matter—has been caused by what has been regarded as the unreasonably large profit made by the Government as seigniorage in coining silver for use in India.

A word of explanation is necessary. The silver rupee has been the standard unit of value in Indian currency. Its weight is three-eighths of an ounce eleven-twelfths fine. During the period of violent agitation in the early nineties the price of silver was marked by wide and rapid fluctuations. Following the closure of the Indian mints to the free coinage of silver in 1893 the exchange value of the rupee rose to 1s. 4d., the equivalent in United States currency of 32.4 cents, where it remained until the upset caused by war conditions. In 1899 the British sovereign was declared legal tender for Government taxes at the rate of 15 rupees to the pound sterling.

The Indian rupee equals in weight 180 grains eleven-twelfths fine silver. The British sovereign equals 123.27 grains, of which 112.9975 grains is fine gold. Therefore in Indian currency 2,475 grains of silver is the equivalent of 112.9975 grains of gold. There are 480 grains in a troy ounce. A troy ounce of gold is the equivalent of $20.67 in United States currency. Therefore the value of silver at the above ratio is equal to 94.368 cents per ounce.

During the period from 1900 to 1915, inclusive, the average quoted price of silver by years was 57 cents an ounce.

The number of rupees coined by the Indian mints during the same period was 1,651,583,784, indicating that a profit of $212,150,066.11 was made as seigniorage, collected largely from the American miner.

The profit made under the Indian coinage act was partially deposited in the currency reserve in gold or gold securities, the balance was used for approved purposes. A British authority (White, p, 259) states in December, 1915, nearly £16,000,000 sterling in gold, or gold securities, were held in London, and £10,000,000 in gold or gold securities in India, equivalent to a total of $126,360,000, at a normal rate of $4.86 for the pound sterling. The same author is authority for the statement that in a representative year, such as 1912, when approximately 150,000,000 rupees were coined, a profit of approximately £3,000,000 sterling, or $14,580,000, was made by the mint.

In China the currency is silver without a gold reserve. A number of coins circulate. Among the more important are the British dollar and the Hongkong dollar coined at the Bombay mint. These coins weigh 416 grains, 900 fine. A seigniorage charge of 2 per cent is made by the mint, and the number of dollars coined runs into the hundreds of millions.

I have given this brief outline for the purpose of emphasizing the importance of the Orient, and particularly its two chief countries, from the standpoint of population and the coinage of silver, and without criticism have pointed out some practices in connection with the handling of the London market that have caused the American producer to feel that the market price "fixed" has not been a fair one determined by the free working of the laws of supply and demand, or through the unhampered operation of existing economic factors, but, on the contrary, that by reason of the direct interest which Great Britain, the Indian Government, and the great Anglo-Eastern banks have had in the situation the market has been handled to depress the price to the producer, thus enhancing the margin of profit to the Governments involved. All this has more to do with the past than with the present situation.

So far as action has been taken by Governments, there has been little to encourage silver producers since the cessation of the war.

Summarized, the story is largely a record of debasement or abandonment.

Sweden, Norway, and Denmark have abolished silver coin for all fractions of the krone, substituting an alloy of nickel and copper in lieu thereof.

The program of debasement of silver coinage to an alarming extent has taken place. England leads the procession in this respect also, having debased its silver coinage from 925 to 500 fine; the Netherlands and the Dutch Indies have debased their silver coin from 945 to 720 fine; Canada from 900 to 800 fine; Honduras from 900 to 500; San Salvador from 900 to 500; Singapore or Straits dollar from 900 to 600 first, then to 550; Mexico and Peru have both debased their respective currency to 500 fine.

As a result of the disturbed economic conditions prevailing in Europe, silver has disappeared as a circulating medium in Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Yugoslavia, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Russia, Turkey, and many of the smaller countries.

At the present time an intensive propaganda is being conducted in India for the purpose of popularizing paper issues of the rupee and its fractional denominations. Under these conditions it is quite remarkable that the price of silver has held as firmly as has been the case during the past two years. The significance, however, of the trend toward abandonment and debasement has been to place silver, where now used at all, in the position of a mere token money.

In England I am advised that the two classes of English coin, old silver, readily distinguishable in color from the new and containing 80 per cent more silver, circulate together without discrimination.

In considering the effect of a decline in silver upon the mining industry it should be kept in mind that not only will silver mining suffer, but inasmuch as the greater part of the output is mined in connection with zinc, lead, and copper, and forms an important element of value that helps to carry these branches of mining, the very serious effect of a collapse in the silver market upon the American mining industry can be readily appreciated.

To meet this situation it is believed that cooperative effort between the Government and the producers is essential. As to the form which the ultimate endeavor might take, I am not prepared to now make a suggestion. Recently a committee has been appointed by the American Mining Congress to give consideration to the matter. We have had several informal meetings, and the consensus of opinion seems to be that the first step should be to secure, if possible, the passage of a joint resolution by Congress providing for the appointment of a commission consisting of, say, two Senators, two Representatives, and possibly two representatives of the industry, to study the subject and submit recommendations.

There are a number of definite steps that such a commission might take. Its official character would give it access to information and secure for its representation abroad greater weight than if the work is undertaken without official sanction and backing.

If it is agreeable, I ask that you fix a date as soon after January 1 as may be convenient when two or three members of the committee may go to Washington to discuss the matter with you and some of your colleagues.

Yours very sincerely,

C. F. KELLEY.

Senator THOMAS J. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

RURAL MARKETING AND CREDIT FACILITIES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4280) to provide credit facilities for the agriculture and live-stock industries of the United States; to amend the Federal reserve act; to amend the Federal farm loan act; to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds and other securities; to provide fiscal agents for the United States; and for other purposes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Would the Senator from Alabama like to have a quorum?

Mr. HEFLIN. I would.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	McLean	Smoot
Ball	Hale	McNary	Spencer
Bayard	Harreld	Moses	Stanfield
Borah	Harris	Nelson	Sterling
Brookhart	Harrison	Nicholson	Sutherland
Calder	Heflin	Norbeck	Townsend
Capper	Hitchcock	Norris	Trammell
Colt	Johnson	Oddie	Underwood
Couzens	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Wadsworth
Culberson	Kellogg	Owen	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Kendrick	Pepper	Walsh, Mont.

Fletcher	Lodge	Reed, Pa.	Weller
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Robinson	Williams
George	McKellar	Sheppard	Willis
Gerry	McKinley	Shields

Mr. HALE. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] are detained on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] is detained on official business.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. POMERENE] on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. BROOKHART. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is detained at a hearing before the Committee on Manufactures.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], which proposes to amend the cotton futures law. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, this amendment presents a very important question. The subject was discussed here at some length on a former occasion during the month of August, I believe, and at that time it was decided not to place the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina upon the law. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which has had the amendment before it, was not satisfied with its provisions and did not report it favorably. Upon that committee is the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. The principal business of that Senator is that of a cotton producer. He is wonderfully well informed on this subject; I think that he is the best-informed man on the subject who has been in either branch of Congress since I have been a Member. He is not in favor of this amendment.

I am heartily in favor of doing everything that can be done to give the producer a fair deal, but I am afraid of certain provisions of the pending amendment. I now wish to call attention to one of its features which is objectionable to me; it is the one that adds two grades of cotton to the grades which we now have. We never hear more than six or seven grades of cotton mentioned in the spot markets of the country, though we have 10 grades. We put those additional grades in in order to cover the various shades of grades, but under the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina two new grades are proposed, making 12 grades in all. I was opposed to increasing the number of grades to 10. I wanted the number to remain at nine. As a Member of the other House, 12 or 14 years ago, I was instrumental in reducing the number of grades of cotton on the exchanges from 28 to 9.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. I beg the Senator's pardon, but, if he will allow me, I desire to say that my amendment does not propose to increase the grades; it merely groups the grades. I do not propose to interfere with the 10 grades except to group them.

Mr. HEFLIN. It may be that the Senator does not mean to do it, but I am confident that his amendment does increase the number of grades to 12. I requested the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to look over the amendment and to see how many grades he thought the Senator's amendment created and he came to the conclusion, without our discussing it together, that there were 12 grades provided for in the Senator's amendment.

Mr. DIAL. The amendment provides that one grade may be provided for in two classes because it is kindred cotton. The amendment was prepared by the experts from the Agricultural Department. I am not myself an expert, but I did not intend to increase the number of grades beyond 10, which is the existing number. It only groups the grades into three classes.

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not know that was the Senator's intention, but since he has stated that he did not intend to increase the number of grades, I accept his statement. I am convinced, however, that the amendment as framed would provide for 12 grades, and I am opposed to increasing the number of grades.

I was about to say, Mr. President, that in the other House we fought to reduce, and did reduce, the number of grades of cotton from 28 to 9. I fought very earnestly for that change, and when we got it we scored a victory for honest dealing in cotton so far as the grades were concerned. The use of the 28 grades cost our farmers many millions of dollars. Under the old system all sorts of cotton were tendered, and the more grades there are the more confusing the situation becomes and the easier it is to impose upon the buyer and the producer. When the grades are reduced to a few, say 10, that number covers the whole field and it is harder to manipulate the market when the grades represent the kinds of cotton produced.

I agree with the Senator from South Carolina in many things he has said. The exchanges frequently do not comply with the law as it now stands. I have previously stated that. Their noncompliance with the law, however, is not the fault of the law; the law ought to be enforced. If desirable provisions are now in law, I think we ought to be very careful about eliminating them.

I have also been afraid, Mr. President, that if the Senator's amendment should be adopted it would outlaw the low grades of cotton in the spot markets of the country. I fear that it would put in the hands of the buyers for the spinner the power of going into the market and saying, "We will take so many bales of this grade and so many bales of that, but we can not use the others." What would be the effect of that in the market? What would happen to the producer if the buyer for the spinner were to say, "I will take these four bales, but I can not use the other six bales"? The seller would say, "I have been selling all my cotton to the same buyer; I have sold him all for an all-around price at a certain figure, the whole 10 bales of cotton." If the law provides that certain grades which are designated shall not be tendered on contract, it seems to me that there would be an injustice done to those grades of cotton.

In line with the fight which is now being made by the Senator from South Carolina, I wish to lay down the proposition that there is but very little difference in the tensile strength of the various grades of cotton. That has been tested out by the Agricultural Department. Some cotton which may have been rained on and stained or discolored from the leaves or from some other cause may be picked out, ginned, put into the lint, and it may then be dyed red or brown or any other color, and then no man except an expert could tell whether it was strict middling or low middling cotton when bought. If that be so, then such grades of cotton ought to bring nearly as much as the higher grades. There ought not to be such a large difference in the price paid for the various grades.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I presume the Senator from Alabama is aware of the fact that there are new processes, some of which have been patented, by which stained cotton and other cotton which has been soiled may be cleaned?

Mr. HEFLIN. And all foreign matter removed?

Mr. McKELLAR. The foreign matter may be entirely removed. I myself have seen some specimens of that kind of work. It is splendid work, and I have not a doubt it will cause quite a revolution in the grading of cotton.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is true, and I am glad the Senator from Tennessee has called my attention to the fact that machines are now in use by which the cotton is renovated and cleaned and foreign matter is removed. After that is done and the cotton is dyed, I say again that no one but an expert can tell whether the cotton was low middling or middling fair. Sometimes the middling fair will bring 25 cents, perhaps, and low middling 18 cents. That is an unreasonable difference that ought not to obtain, but the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina does not cure that defect.

I agree with him that frequently the exchanges do not comply with the law, but they ought to be forced to comply with it. I have introduced a joint resolution which, in my opinion, if enacted would cure that defect. It is Senate Joint Resolution 92, introduced by me, and reads as follows:

Resolved, etc., That hereafter whenever the conduct of the cotton exchanges, or any one of them, of the country shall, in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, become detrimental to the interests of the cotton producers of the United States, it shall be his duty to suspend the action of any one or all of said exchanges.

SEC. 2. That whenever as many as two commissioners or secretaries of agriculture and two governors in the cotton-growing States shall complain to the Secretary of Agriculture of the conduct of any cotton exchange, he shall immediately notify such exchange and require the conduct complained of to cease pending the hearing and disposition of the case or cases.

SEC. 3. That the authority and power are hereby conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the provisions of this joint resolution.

Mr. President, I hold that if the exchanges to-day will comply with the law as it is written the situation would be better, and if they do not comply with the existing law the joint resolution to which I have referred would enforce such compliance.

I advocated and had put in the law a provision to the effect that whenever a dispute arose between the buyer and the seller as to the grade offered or tendered either party to the contract could appeal to the Secretary of Agriculture, and then the experts in his department, without knowing either party to the contract, would take those grades and determine what they were and settle the controversy.

I also urged another provision, as did others, which was put into the law. I wish to read that provision to Senators as it is found in the law now on the statute books. It is as follows:

The parties to such contract may agree, at the time of the tender, as to the price of the grade or grades so tendered, and that if they shall not then agree as to such price, then, and in that event, the buyer of said contract shall have the right to demand the specific fulfillment of such contract by the actual delivery of cotton of the basis grade named therein at the price specified for such basis grade in said contract.

There are the two points at issue. We already have the provision in the law that if a dispute should arise between the buyer and the seller, if the buyer says, "That is not the cotton I contracted for; that is not low middling; this is not strict middling; that is not middling fair," and so on through the grades, "and I do not propose to take it;" and the seller says, "They are the grades specified in the contract;" the buyer may say, "I am not going to submit to your judgment. I am going to take the question to the Secretary of Agriculture and have his experts determine which one of us is right." So that matter is also taken care of and the department has settled scores and scores of disputes of that character.

On the other hand, if the buyer does not want the cotton and they have to effect a settlement in money, that situation is provided for in the law. If the buyer says, "I will not take that difference;" and the seller says, "I will not pay you any more;" and the buyer says, "Give me the cotton; I will take the cotton," there is a provision that makes him deliver the cotton specified in the contract. Those were the two points that we had particularly in mind when we framed the present law to take care of the interests of the producers of the cotton and to give the buyer the right to have the contract complied with. I want such a contract that when cotton is dealt in the producer will be called on for the cotton with which to fill the contract.

There are evils in connection with the exchanges; but I fear the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina. I know that he thinks it will accomplish the result desired, and I am sorry that I can not agree with him; but I fear that if ever we put it in the power of any buyer to go into a market and take the cream off of it and allow him to say "I only want the four highest grades, I do not want the others," the low grades of cotton will be thus outlawed, it is going to force the farmer to take a lower price for that cotton, and the tricks of the trade will be resorted to so that the farmer will be robbed right and left, although the low grade of cotton, when cleaned by machines, as suggested by my friend from Tennessee, and dyed, will make just as good cloth as the top grades, for which perhaps $30 or $40 more a bale is paid than for the low grade of cotton. I fear that advantage will be taken of this amendment, if it shall be adopted, to outlaw the low grades and very injuriously affect the business of the cotton producers.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I was particularly struck with the last quotation the Senator read from existing law. If I understand it, that law would give the buyer of cotton a very great advantage. If the seller of the cotton was unable to supply him with the exact grade specified in the contract, and they had a dispute about it, then the purchaser of the cotton, as I heard it read, would be able to say to the seller: "Give me the cotton exactly as it is specified in the contract." Would not the result of that be that the buyer would have complete control of the transaction? The seller would have to agree with him. If they did not agree, he could demand his pound of flesh.

Mr. HEFLIN. No; here is the advantage in that: The buyer says: "The difference between this grade and that grade ought not to be more than a certain number of dollars." The seller says: "Yes; it ought. There ought to be $10 a bale or $15 or $20 difference in the grades." The buyer says: "I will not accept a settlement like that." Now, he has the buyer in his hands if the buyer will take his tender; but the buyer has the right to say to the seller: "I will not do it. You produce the cotton." Then the seller says, "I have not got it"; and the buyer says, "You go out and get it"; and there is where the producer comes in. He furnishes the cotton. Then they have to go out in the spot market and buy cotton with which to fill these contracts.

Mr. NORRIS. That seems to me to be the weakness of that law. I may be entirely wrong about it, of course, but it looks to me as though in the very case the Senator puts the seller is at the mercy of the buyer. As I understand, they make a contract for the delivery of cotton before the cotton is produced. Nobody knows at that time what the cotton is going to be. It may not be a possible thing to supply the cotton named in the contract; but the law provides for different grades, and that if the seller can not supply the grade specified he can supply other grades at a differential in price, it is true; but it seemed to me that the clause which the Senator read from the law would give the purchaser the right to say whenever there was a dispute and they could not agree, "Then give me the exact cotton that is named in the contract."

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, that is absolutely fair.

Mr. NORRIS. Would not that often make it impossible for the producer of cotton to comply with his contract, because he could not supply the exact cotton named in the contract?

Mr. HEFLIN. But he can supply it. They have no right to name grades that he does not produce. The farmer rarely ever sells any cotton on the exchange.

Mr. NORRIS. He would have to go out and buy it somewhere.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is right, and when he does that he is patronizing the producer. He is calling for that which the farmer has to sell, wants to sell, must sell—and the more people we force into the spot market to buy the farmer's cotton the better it is for the cotton farmer.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but he is a producer himself. As I understand the cotton business, there may be times when, on account of bad weather or something like that, it would be an impossibility to get cotton to supply the contracts if a literal interpretation of the contract were insisted upon. Is not that true?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; that never happens.

Mr. NORRIS. I supposed that existed.

Mr. HEFLIN. They always have the grades. Now, what we are trying to get at, and what I had in mind when we framed this law originally, was to make those who deal in cotton on the exchange go out and buy cotton from the producer with which to fill the contract. If the buyer who patronizes the exchange does not get a fair deal he has the right, and it is the only club he has, to tell the exchange: "If you do not settle with me fairly with money, you go out and get the actual cotton named in the contract and tender it to me. I will not accept anything else."

Mr. NORRIS. If that be true, why would we not improve it if we should wipe out all these differentials and let them rely entirely on the contract, and when a man has made a contract to sell cotton of a certain grade, compel him to do that? Instead of having any different grades, let him be compelled under the law to sell the cotton that he has contracted to sell. Would not that relieve it all?

Mr. HEFLIN. That would, in a way.

Mr. NORRIS. Then why not obliterate all these different grades?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; we do not want to do away with the present grades. What the Senator is suggesting is in line with what I have advocated with reference to the establishment of spot exchanges in the South where actual cotton—what we call spot cotton—would be bought and sold and delivered; but these are future contracts, where they deal in futures and the law prescribes the sort of contract they can make. They enter into a contract, and they ought to be made to live up to it. The Senator from South Carolina takes the position—and he is right about that—that frequently they do not comply with the contract. I agree with that part of his speech, but I want us to do something that will make them comply with the contract; and if you do that, here is the law that governs it and takes care of it, if we can make them do it, and they ought to be required to do it. The chairman of this committee knows, however, as I know, that when these fellows up there agree to a certain proposition and say that it is satisfactory, they already know in advance how they can evade it and slip and slide around it, and what we want to do is to put enforcement provisions back of this thing and enforce the law as it is. My resolution will do that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I claim to be somewhat practical in my views and in my actions, and I think on a great question like this we ought to be extremely practical. As the Senator knows, we have frequently made cotton in the South at as low a price as 8 cents. The price of cotton now is about 27 cents.

Mr. HEFLIN. It has sold for 4 cents in the South.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, it has sold for that, but I am talking about ordinary, normal conditions. There have been many crops of cotton made in the South which sold at 8 cents a pound.

Mr. HEFLIN. For years and years 7 and 8 cents was the prevailing price.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. It is now bringing 27 cents a pound, and the chances are that it is going up. Apparently the market seems to have that upward trend. As plain, practical men, ought we not to hesitate about passing any law that would be likely to change a condition under which our farmers are now getting 27 cents and upward for their cotton? I want to say to the Senator that I shall be very loath to vote for any law on the subject at this time because of the splendid position that the cotton industry is now in.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if I may make a suggestion, of course the Senators know that I am not an expert on cotton, and my sympathies are entirely with the man who produces it. I should like to help him; but, if the argument of the Senator from Tennessee is right, then if this bill were pending here when cotton was down to 7 cents, he probably would favor it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know.

Mr. NORRIS. If it were pending when cotton was up, he would be opposed to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should want to consider it very carefully if it were low.

Mr. NORRIS. We ought to do that.

Mr. McKELLAR. But when it is very high I do not know whether we ought to be going around hunting for a way to change the condition, and I am not hunting for it; I am that practical.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to say to the Senator from Alabama that the reason why the contracts do not call for the cotton is because they do not know what quality they will get within 10 grades. For instance, in 1920, out of 128,907,500 bales of cotton contracts sold on the New York and New Orleans exchanges only 267,700 bales of actual cotton were delivered in New York and only 106,600 bales were delivered in New Orleans. That is the reason why I say you would help the farmer, the man who actually produces the cotton, if you would make them go out and get the cotton and comply with the contract.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from South Carolina and I are in hearty agreement on that. I agree with him that frequently they do not comply with the contract; but what I have called to the Senator's attention is that the law is here; the provision is in the present Smith-Lever Act that if there is a dispute as to the grade tendered, either party can come to the Secretary of Agriculture and have the matter settled, as they have done in scores and scores of instances, as I have said; and if they are not in agreement as to the price, the purchaser can say to the seller, as I stated a moment ago, "You give me the cotton. Here are the grades set out. I stand on my contract," and the law says he has to do it. Now, then, the seller says: "I have not got the cotton." The Senator from South Carolina has called attention to that. "But you contracted with me to deliver to me certain cotton. You have no business dealing in cotton unless you can deliver cotton. Why do you contract to deliver me cotton when you have not got it? You go out and get it. I stand on my contract." Then the seller has to go out in the market, and hundreds of others go out in the market, and they commence buying, because he has to get the cotton right now to fill that contract, and this produces competitive buying in the spot market, and that puts up the price and the producer is helped. That is the situation in a nutshell. That is as it should be.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a paper published at Dallas, Tex., in the greatest cotton-producing State in the Union, called the Cotton and Cotton Oil News. It is a paper devoted to the interests of the cotton industry. This editorial suggests that—

> We sincerely hope that no Member of either House or Senate will disturb existing conditions. Let well enough alone.

There is another paragraph here that reads in this way:

> Our advice to Congress, now in session, is to study well all measures aimed at cotton or grain future dealing, because futures in both commodities are so indivisibly connected with and so vital to the spot interest of both that any interference with existing rules may be fraught with grave consequences to the producers of grain and cotton; and that class of our citizens are, as a rule, less able to stand any adverse condition that might arise from injurious legislation.

This paper circulates all over the Cotton Belt, and, as I said, it is devoted to the interests of the cotton industry. It is sounding a note of warning.

Mr. President, I am going to urge the passage of my resolution. I want to cooperate with the Senator from South Carolina. It may be that we can put some of the provisions of his amendment or some of the ideas contained in it in a joint resolution and work out something that will correct the evils now practiced on the exchanges; but I want to repeat that if his amendment should be adopted as it stands it will put a premium on high grades and widen the breach between the high grades and the low grades and give the market manipulators a chance to strike dead the low-grade cottons throughout the Cotton Belt and work a great injury to the cotton producer. I have championed the cause of the cotton producer ever since I have been in public life. In fact, when I came to Congress I determined to make a special study of the cotton industry. I have done it, and I hope I have been of some value to that industry.

I have received scores and scores of letters from farmers, merchants, and bankers saying that the situation had been improved by legislation with which I had to do, and I want to do whatever is best for the producer of cotton, because he is so widely scattered through the cotton-producing section of the United States. It is difficult for him to organize and have unity of purpose and concerted action, as the spinners can have them. The Senator from South Carolina is a cotton spinner and also a cotton producer.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator had any petitions or letters from any of his cotton-producing constituents asking him to favor this amendment? I live in a cotton State. The city where I live is one of the largest cotton markets in the world. I have had no letters from any cotton producer asking me to support this measure, and I am sure that if they thought it was a wise measure they would communicate with me. In answer to the suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska a moment ago, my sympathies are entirely with the producer. I live in a cotton country, and my sympathies are all with those who actually produce cotton, and in my judgment if they thought this amendment would help their interests they would be writing to their Representatives in Congress. For these reasons, I am going to vote against the amendment.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I will say to my friend from Tennessee that I have not had but two or three letters from my State urging the adoption of this amendment.

I want to say this, in conclusion, that the price of cotton is now advancing. It ought to be bringing 30 cents. It will go above 30 cents. The thing that helped cotton to go up in price was the revival of the War Finance Corporation, which enabled many farmers, especially in the cooperative associations, to get money with which to keep their cotton off the market. That is the point always. If the producer is his own master, and can keep his cotton from going upon the market when the price is low and unprofitable, prices are bound to advance.

Why do I say that? Because there are one hundred and fifty and odd million spindles in the world. Those spindles must be fed on cotton. There are hundreds of thousands of people—men and women—operating them. There are millions of money invested in the spinning industry. All of that mighty machinery has to keep running, and it can not run unless they can get the cotton that the producer makes, and if you enable the producer to sell his cotton sparingly, so as to keep the market keen and hungry, meeting the demands of the spinner as they arise, cotton will always bring a good price.

Mr. President, I am glad of the part I took in reviving the War Finance Corporation. After we revived it some of the witnesses who testified before our Committee on Agriculture, in response to questions propounded to them by me, showed that when we commenced sending money out into the States through the War Finance Corporation, the Federal reserve banks immediately commenced to loosen up and rediscount paper at the member banks of the Federal reserve system. So it was that condition which caused cotton to advance—the farmer's ability to get hold of a little money to enable him to hold his cotton off the market until the price improved.

The cooperative associations have accomplished much in joining together and getting these funds, and keeping their cotton from being thrown upon the market without regard to the price. That has helped to put the price of cotton up.

Mr. President, with cotton around 27 cents to-day and with a threatened cotton famine standing right out in front of us, cotton is bound to go to 30 cents and higher. Not only are the high grades of cotton up now, but the average price of cotton has improved somewhat, and if we will help the producer of cotton to keep his cotton off the market when the price is low and unprofitable, we will have solved the problem that vexes him to-day.

I am hoping that we can amend the legislation that is pending, the bill which has been reported and the Lenroot-Anderson bill, so as to make it workable, and fix it so that the Federal Reserve Board shall not say whether cotton is eligible at the bank or not, that that board shall not have the discretionary power to say whether wheat or corn or cattle can be used as the basis for a loan, but that the law itself shall say it and give specific directions so that reasonable loans can be had. I do not want the cotton producers of my section of the country to be left any more in the hands of the discretionary power of this board and have that board used as the instrument of Wall Street to beat down the price in order that they may make a killing on speculation from the bear side of the market.

I have witnessed that. I saw the farmers of my State literally slaughtered under that grinding process. In 1920 it robbed the cotton farmers of my State of $103,000,000.

I saw the South lose $1,625,000,000 in 1920 under that process; and I am not going to remain silent in the Senate and permit any farm credits bill to pass if I can help it that does not specifically set out the authority to take care of those people. It is an outrage that a great free Government like ours will permit its instrumentalities to be so used that one class of people are stricken down and robbed to greatly enrich another class of people.

I want to say this in conclusion: The Senator's amendment can be offered in another form as an amendment to the present law, the Smith-Lever Act, as it now exists, and thoroughly considered again by some committee, and we can see if some agreement can not be reached upon it. I would not like to see this amendment hitched onto a farm credit bill. I have stated that the present law is pretty good, if they will comply with it, and the power mentioned in my resolution authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to close these exchanges if they do not comply with the law would give us a very satisfactory situation.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, yesterday the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] seemed to find fault with me because I had just offered this amendment. I was called out of the city a few days ago on a sad mission, and I returned yesterday morning at 11 o'clock. At 12 o'clock I was in my seat with my amendment ready to offer, and I offered it as soon as I could get the floor.

I am glad to say that the differences between the southern Senators in this matter are growing less and I hope that we will be able to agree ere long. There are just a few points I want to clear up. The Senator from Louisiana complains that I am trying to rush this amendment through. My amendment was offered a year or two ago in the form of a bill, and I went before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and made a talk, and when I got through the chairman, the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], a fair man, an able man, a friend of the people, said he thought there was great merit in my bill, and that he was ready to report it. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] said he wanted to be heard. I told him I had no objection to his being heard, in fact, that I had no right to object to his being heard, but I had nothing more to say, and if he wanted to be heard, to be heard.

That was along about May, according to my recollection. On June 11, 1921, the Senator from Louisiana sent me a telegram. I was pressing for a hearing all the time before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. He said in this wire:

Senator DIAL,
Washington, D. C.:

Please do not press action on your cotton-futures amendment until I return on the 19th. Friends insist that your amendment will destroy the exchanges, and I agree with them. Therefore it should receive closest consideration. Am detained here by very important business.

Of course, I postponed the matter until the Senator from Louisiana got back. I also received a letter from the Senator from Louisiana, dated July 7, 1921, in which he asked me again not to press the amendment, and in which he said, among other things:

I am convinced that if your amendment should be adopted it would practically destroy the exchanges.

It seemed he was not so anxious about the farmers at that time. It is immaterial to me whether it will destroy the exchanges or not. I am trying to get a fair law passed.

There is no argument made now against my amendment, and there never has been. I read the speeches of the Senator from Louisiana at the time Senator Comer offered his amendment, and, with all due respect, the Senator from Louisiana did not discuss the merits of the proposition at that time, and he never yet has discussed them.

I defy any man in the United States, inside or outside of Congress, to debate the merits of this proposition and find any defect in the amendment which I have proposed. There is nothing similar to it on the statute books or in the customs of the world in trading.

My amendment would not interfere with the number of grades of cotton tenderable. I can not make grades. Grades are grown. Nature fixes grades of cotton, and the law has recognized those grades, and the law has recognized 10 grades tenderable on the contracts. I do not interfere with that at all, except that I group them in classes and provide that at the time people who have any cotton sell contracts they must specify the kind of cotton they propose to sell. It is in line with what the distinguished senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] said here some time ago, that he saw no reason why the members of the exchanges should not specify what they sold and deliver what they specified. That is all I ask.

Because cotton fluctuates up and down is no reason why we should not have a correct law. Cotton is now bringing only 27 or 28 cents. I hope and believe it will go higher, but that does not influence me at all. This proposition was pending here when cotton brought about 11 cents a pound. That has been the argument of the exchanges in their propaganda, and yet some Senators say, "Oh, let us soft pedal the proposition; we will interfere with the rising price," or something of that sort. Pass an honest law, and the law of supply and demand will take care of the proposition.

The Senator from Louisiana complains that more cotton is not delivered on the contracts. The reason it is not delivered on the contracts is because the owners of the contracts do not know within 10 grades what they will get, and no mill can use all of those grades of cotton.

Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana yesterday spoke about mills buying their cotton, and said they would go to some actual broker and make contracts for cotton. That is true. I have not been in harmony with the methods of some of the mills, and probably all of them, for a long time in buying cotton. I would like to have them buy on the future market if they are going to buy ahead at all, and then be prepared to demand delivery of their cotton. Hence, the contract would bring a higher price and that would help the farmer.

Now, there are about four principal spot brokers in cotton in the United States. It is all supposed to be sold on future contracts. But now the mills go to these spot dealers, about four of whom control the whole market, and who are about as powerful as the Packer Trust, or the Steel Trust, or the Oil Trust, or any other trust in this country. Perhaps all Senators know who they are.

A mill will go to them and contract for a large quantity of cotton to be delivered in a future month, at so many points of the exchange price. Then these brokers, with these great powers of contract in their hands, will sell the contracts, will sell the future market, will depress the future market, and at the same time go out and pick up the cotton from the actual farmers, because they have a place to put it. That is the way it is worked.

They sell down the contract. The mill has already made a trade with them at so many points. To-day, while the price is about 27½ cents, I am told that good grade cotton in the South is selling 2 or 3 cents a pound higher than that. The contract does not represent the true value.

I was told the other day of a transaction at 230 points above the current month's market. So it is simply spurious, it is fictitious, it is artificial, and this method would depress and oppress and almost confiscate any business in the world. If the Creator had not favored us with the climate and the soil and the rainfall that He has, and with the best people on earth, we could not have existed.

So, Mr. President, I hope the Senate will vote for the amendment. Senators need not be afraid about changing the off-grade cotton. The amendment does not interfere with that at all except that it groups it and tries to make the contracts specific within certain classes of the cotton. They ought to specify the identical grades of cotton.

I hope the Senate will put the amendment on the bill. It is not a question of looking wrong or having a ragged bill. Consider the poor people of the South struggling over this situation. It is immaterial to them whether the bill is symmetrical or not. They are the ones who ought to be given help.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 1 o'clock p. m.). The time for debate has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL].

Mr. DIAL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). Has the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the Chair). That Senator has not voted.

Mr. OWEN. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] and vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his named was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. POMERENE], who is absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKINLEY. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. GLASS. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], but having his permission to vote as I may prefer on this question I vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following general pairs:

The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]; and

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Borah	George	McCumber	Underwood
Brookhart	Glass	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Johnson	Overman	Williams
Fernald	Jones, N. Mex.	Owen
Fletcher	King	Poindexter

Cameron	Gerry	Page
Caraway	Gooding	Pittman
Colt	Harreld	Pomerene

So Mr. DIAL's amendment was rejected.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 41, following section 401, add the following two sections:

SEC. 402. That section 11 of the Federal farm loan act as amended April 20, 1920, be amended by adding the following:

"Fifth. To cooperate with other farm loan associations and to form among themselves State or national unions or associations, or both, for the purpose of lawfully advancing the general welfare of all farm loan associations as they may deem best, and to contribute toward the support and maintenance of such unions or associations from the general funds of each association or by voluntary contribution of the members thereof as each association may determine for itself through its board of directors not to exceed $25 annually."

SEC. 403. That the last paragraph of the first section of amended section 32 of the Federal farm loan act, approved January 18, 1918, be further amended to read as follows:

"That the temporary organization of any Federal land bank, as provided in section 4 of said Federal farm loan act, shall be continued until the subscriptions to stock in such bank by national farm loan associations shall equal the amount of stock held in such bank by the Government of the United States. That whenever the total subscriptions to the stock of any Federal land bank made by national farm loan associations shall exceed the amount of the stock held in such bank by the United States Government, it shall be the duty of the Farm Loan Board to proceed with and perfect the permanent organization of said bank in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of the farm loan act as approved July 17, 1916."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, on April 12, 1921, the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] introduced in the Senate the bill (S. 273) to amend section 11 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended April 20, 1920, and section 32, as amended January 18, 1918. The bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. There were hearings on the bill and some considerable attention was given to it, but the committee never acted upon it. I was always cordially and earnestly in favor of it, and have been anxious to have the legislation put upon the statute books as proposed by the bill introduced by the Senator from Montana, as I have stated. I have assumed, with his consent, to appropriate the language of his bill in offering the amendment which has just been stated. He agrees with me that it is entirely appropriate in connection with legislation where we are attempting in the last section to amend the farm loan act, and I think it is important that it should be made a part of the bill and become the law.

The reason for this proposal is, in the first place, that the present situation is not at all satisfactory to the farmers of the country, and in the next place it is unfair and unjust to the stockholders of the Federal land banks. The act of

January 18, 1918, amending the farm loan act, provides in its last clause:

The temporary organization of any Federal land bank as provided in section 4 of said Federal farm loan act shall be continued so long as any farm loan bonds purchased from it under the provisions of this amendment shall be held by the Treasury, and until the subscriptions to stock in such bank by national farm-loan associations shall equal the amount of stock held in such bank by the Government of the United States.

In pursuance of that amendment of the farm loan act, the Secretary of the Treasury purchased $200,000,000 of farm-loan bonds. As we all know, those bonds run for a period of about 30 years; so that so long as the Treasury holds any of those bonds the temporary organization of the Federal land banks must continue. The "temporary organization" means that provided in the farm loan act, which authorizes the Farm Loan Board to name five directors for the Federal land banks; so that every Federal land bank to-day is operating under the same temporary organization provided for in the original act which was passed in 1916, and the five directors in each of the Federal land banks are appointed by the Farm Loan Board. The amendment to the law perpetuates that temporary organization and keeps it in effect so long as the Treasury holds any of the bonds which have been purchased under the provision referred to. That means that the Farm Loan Board names five directors in the Federal land banks and that such organization may continue for a period of something like 30 years; so long as the Treasury holds any of the bonds.

The system has been operating successfully from the beginning, except that when mortgage companies instituted suit attacking the constitutionality of the act, which suit was pending in the United States Circuit Court and then in the Supreme Court of the United States for a period of something like 18 months, during which time the system was paralyzed. The Supreme Court, however, rendered its decision in February, 1921, sustaining the constitutionality of the farm loan act in its entirety. After that time there was apparently considerable delay, and, in my judgment, unnecessary delay, for it was not until June that funds were provided for farmers who had put in their applications prior thereto and were in great need of accommodations. Notwithstanding the decision was rendered in February, 1921, it was not until June of that year that funds were provided as a result of the offering of farm-loan bonds. Since then the offerings have been more frequent, and in the last sale which took place $75,000,000 worth of bonds were sold in two hours at a price above par, at 4½ per cent. So some $700,000,000 has been found for the farmers of this country at 5 and 5½ per cent under that system.

During the course of the development of the system as originally contemplated by the framers of the act, the stock which the Government originally furnished the banks to begin with has practically all been paid back to the Government. In four of the largest of these banks the Government does not own more than a nominal amount, if any, of the stock, the stock all practically being owned by the national farm-loan associations. Eighty-seven per cent of the stock now held by all the 12 Federal land banks is owned by national farm-loan associations. Very soon in the natural course of events, within a year or less, the Government will not own one dollar of stock in any of these banks, but all the stock will be owned by the national farm-loan associations.

Did Senators ever hear of a situation where the stockholders of an institution, a corporation existing and doing business, had no voice whatever in the management or conduct of that business? In this case the national farm-loan associations are not given a voice in the selection of a single director in a single Federal land bank, although they own the stock in those banks.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, what the Senator from Florida says with regard to the ownership of the stock in these banks, of course, is true; but there is another consideration of very great importance. The Senator has just called attention to the fact that over $700,000,000 worth of farm-loan bonds are outstanding. I suggest to the Senator that the United States is morally responsible for that enormous indebtedness, and that for that reason the power of the Government in connection with the Federal land banks should not be lost sight of, although a representation, and an adequate representation, of those who are participating might well be provided for.

I merely wished to make that suggestion to the Senator from Florida so that the real responsibility of the Government in the premises might not be overlooked. In modifying the law in reference to the temporary organization, I think it ought to be done with that in view. I merely rose to make that suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. I fully appreciate what the Senator from Oklahoma has said, but the framers of the act had that all in mind when it was under consideration and passed. Originally the framers of the act saw exactly what is happening and what they hoped would happen, namely, that as the system developed the time would come when the stock of the banks would be owned entirely by the national farm-loan associations. They knew perfectly well also that whereas there was no legal obligation on the part of the Government respecting farm-loan bonds, there was a consideration to be kept in mind, a duty and responsibility, growing out of the fact that a bureau of the Government had absolute supervision over the entire system.

The Farm Loan Board is a bureau of the Treasury Department; it is politically organized; that is, the members of the Farm Loan Board are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. That board has supervision over all of the land banks, over all the farm loan associations, over the issue of bonds, and has direction generally as to the entire system. There will be no interference with that arrangement if the amendment which I have proposed shall be adopted.

In the next place, the framers of the act realized this quasi responsibility, and that the bonds would be regarded as being issued under the supervision of governmental authority, and that, therefore, the Government would be morally bound to see that the laws were carried out and that the system should function in accordance with law and as it should function. Therefore, it was provided that three of the directors of every Federal land bank should be named by the Farm Loan Board. That provision is made in the original act, and the amendment proposed by me will not change it. Always, in every instance throughout the country as to every Federal land bank, the Farm Loan Board is authorized and empowered and directed to name three directors. The amendment proposes no change in that law at all.

The suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma has been kept in mind at all times. It was in mind when the law was framed, and the proposed amendment in no way will interfere with it. The Farm Loan Board will name three directors on the board of directors of every Federal land bank throughout the country continuously and permanently and forever, as the law now stands, and that is not changed if this amendment I propose is agreed to. That was put in the original act, but when in 1918 the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to buy $200,000,000 of these bonds a provision was inserted to the effect that so long as the Treasury held any of such bonds that "temporary organization," under which the Federal Farm Loan Board names all of the directors in every land bank, should continue. That is the situation which we wish to correct. We wish to get rid of this temporary organization and put in force the permanent organization plan as provided in the original act, by which the directors are to be nine, six of whom the national farm loan associations shall elect.

Mr. President, it is an unheard-of proposition, that the stockholders of a corporation, owning all the stock of the corporation or even a majority of the stock of the corporation, shall have no voice in the selection of the directors of that corporation. It never was heard of in any country or any government or in connection with any institution of which I have ever read; and all we are asking now is that the stockholders of the Federal land banks, namely, the national farm loan associations, shall have the right to select six of the directors of the Federal land banks, leaving the Farm Loan Board full power to name three of the directors.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It occurs to me that the suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma does not affect the amendment which the Senator from Florida is now proposing. The amendment which the Senator from Florida now proposes is to relieve the banking situation of the country of a condition which was brought about on account of the Government's holding of farm-loan bonds. The temporary organization of the land banks was to continue for the purpose of securing the investment of the Government in such bonds, but was not to be a permanent arrangement to protect the bondholders generally of the corporation. The Senator is now of the opinion that there is no longer any necessity for retaining in the Farm Loan Board the absolute control of the land banks for the sole purpose of securing the Government investment in bonds. Am I right about that?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator is absolutely correct as to that. There is no need at all of a continuance of complete governmental control of these banks. I do not know how many of the bonds which the Treasury originally acquired have been taken up by the Farm Loan Board; but I know that they have taken up some of them, because in the case of the last three sales of bonds, amounting to $75,000,000 each—and I am certain as to two of the sales, because I have a letter to that effect from the chairman of the Farm Loan Board—the subscriptions were far in excess of the offering, and those subscriptions have been utilized and applied to the purchase of bonds held by the Treasury. I am sure that some of those bonds—how many I do not know—have been taken up already, having been acquired through the sale of bonds offered by the Farm Loan Board. I know also that they are 5 per cent bonds, and the Farm Loan Board is to-day selling those bonds at 4½ per cent at a premium, so that there is no possible risk on the part of the Government; and I do not see why the Farm Loan Board does not take them all up at 4½ per cent, instead of paying the Government 5 per cent.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. My understanding is that the Farm Loan Board have actually taken up nearly one-half the holdings of the Government of the United States.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is quite true.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. The point made by the Senator from Oklahoma was that they are instrumentalities of the Government, and that there is a moral obligation, possibly, to protect these bonds under all circumstances. That was the point he made if I understood him.

Mr. FLETCHER. His suggestion extended beyond the suggestion of the Senator from New Mexico, but it included that, I think.

Mr. McLEAN. As a matter of fact, the Government to-day owns a hundred million of those bonds. They are now in the Treasury.

Mr. FLETCHER. And they can demand payment at any time they like. I think the act provides for that.

Mr. McLEAN. In addition to that, it owns four millions of the capital stock of these banks to-day.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. McLEAN. Not only that, but these obligations are joint and several obligations. Every bank in the system is responsible for the obligations of every other bank; so that you can see the necessity of very careful management of all these banks.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Connecticut is quite right in his contention that the Government should have an interest in the management of these banks; but, as the Senator from Florida has well stated, that is provided for in the permanent provisions of the act.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is correct.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And this absolute control of these banks is only because of the circumstance that the Government of the United States owns some of the bonds, or has purchased some of the bonds. It does seem to me, inasmuch as these banks have taken up substantially all of the stock of the banks—80 per cent of it—and the purchasers of the bonds will always be safeguarded by three of the directors on these farm-loan banks, that was intended by the framers of the bill and by the Congress which enacted it to be sufficient guaranty to the bondholders. Here, however, is a mere changing situation. It is only by the circumstance that the Government has purchased some of these bonds that it retains complete control of the board of directors of the banks themselves, and the reason for that act seems to me no longer to obtain.

Mr. McLEAN. Whatever might have been the view of the framers of the act, the fact remains that the temporary management has been exceedingly satisfactory, and it has been largely due to the fact that the directors have been wisely chosen that the system has been such a success. It is my firm opinion that the board should continue to appoint a majority of the directors having the management of these institutions. If you have six of these directors representing the association and only three appointed by the Federal Farm Loan Board, they are in the minority and absolutely unable to control its policy. The fact that these bonds are selling above par is due to the administration of the system, which has been satisfactory to everyone, and it seems to me a most unfortunate time now to change the management. Why not let well enough alone?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the purchasers of these bonds in the first instance, Series A, No. 1, bought the bonds knowing what the law was. The law was that there should be nine directors of every one of these Federal land banks, that the Farm Loan Board should name three of them and that the national farm loan associations should select six of them. That was the law, and everybody bought the bonds knowing that that was the law. It was not until 1918 that this amendment was made making the temporary organization permanent, at the time when the Government acquired $200,000,000 of the bonds. The "temporary organization" meant that the Farm Loan Board should appoint five directors to have charge of the affairs of the banks, respectively, under the supervision of the board.

Mr. McLEAN. And it was a very wise amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not disposed now to make any complaint about the management of the banks. We can go into that at some other time if necessary; but there has not been altogether full and complete satisfaction and assurance that these farmers were getting what they were entitled to under the present management. There have been delays all over the country, sometimes of six months to a year when waiting on appraisals and waiting on attention to the applications. Farmers have not been always able to get the accommodation to which they were entitled. The Farm Loan Board said first they thought the public would not absorb the bonds faster than they were issuing them. They were mistaken in that, because they found subsequently the public was ready and eager to take them just as fast as they put them out. They offered that as a reason for not having sufficient funds to cover the meritorious eligible applications; and then a little later they said: "We have not force enough to attend to the business fast enough to keep up with it." In reply to that the farmers could well say: "Why do you not supply the force? This stock is earning dividends everywhere. There is plenty of money to pay the people—to supply the necessary force to transact this business promptly."

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. It is very likely that the issue of bonds will very soon exceed a billion dollars, and the amount will constantly increase. There is a widespread impression that the Government is morally bound to protect these obligations. Does not the Senator think that the board ought always to select a majority of the board of directors?

Mr. FLETCHER. I most emphatically do not. I say the people who own the stock in these banks ought to have at least a majority of the directors of those banks. The Government has three of them always there, selected by the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. FLETCHER. I can not yield just now. I will in a moment. Let me answer this question first, without trying to answer two or three at once. The Government has three of these directors there all the time. The Government has absolute supervision over the whole system through the Farm Loan Board, overseeing all of the directors. No matter who has a majority of the directors of these banks, there is the Farm Loan Board having supervision over the whole field, the whole subject, the whole system, every detail of it. Every national farm-loan association has to be chartered by it. It can deny charters. It can refuse to issue bonds.

No bonds can be issued by any Federal land bank until the Farm Loan Board approves the issue. So they have absolute supervision over the whole system, anyhow; and I say it is an outrageous proposition to claim that the Government could further insist that they must not only have general and complete supervision and control over the whole system but they must dominate and control the detailed operations of every Federal land bank in the system. It is a monstrous proposition.

The Senator from Connecticut on yesterday, together with the Senator from Virginia, when I offered as an amendment to this very bill a proposal to include farm loan bonds along with United States bonds as a proper investment for 25 per cent of the capital of these corporations organized under the provisions of this bill before they could begin business, made light of the idea and stated that the next step would be to allow Pennsylvania Railroad bonds or some other industrial or private bonds to be included in that investment. They denied that these were Government bonds. They denied that there was any Government responsibility respecting these bonds.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield at present.

Mr. FLETCHER. In one breath it is said that the Government is morally responsible and that these bonds are instrumentalities of the Government and in the next breath it is asserted that they are private affairs and on a par with industrial, railroad, or such other securities.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida will compose himself sufficiently to permit me to interject, that criticism does not apply to me at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Florida is entirely composed.

Mr. GLASS. I did deny that these banks were Government institutions, and I do deny that they are Government institutions, and I deny the proposition that their bonds are instrumentalities of this Government.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then the Senator takes issue with the Senator from Connecticut. That was his statement.

Mr. GLASS. Suppose I do take issue with the Senator from Connecticut? What I am saying is that if the Senator from Florida will compose himself sufficiently I will assure him that I am not antagonistic to his proposition now.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. GLASS. But why does the Senator from Florida ascribe to me opposition to his proposed amendment?

I think his position is absolutely logical. I do not think any other position is defensible; but if the Senator wants my judgment, I will give it to him, and say that I do not think these banks will be nearly so efficiently managed by their owners as they have been managed by picked agents of the Government who understand all of the minutiæ and administration of the banking business. However, I say that these banks do belong to their stockholders. If they shall insist upon it, their stockholders are entitled to manage their own property; but if you ask me if I think they are going to manage them as efficiently as they have been managed in the past, I do not. I know it is unpleasant to tell farmers that they are not bankers. I do not know whether I should be courageous enough to go among them and tell them that or not; but I say here, in the discussion of this question, that they are not bankers and they can not manage banks as bankers can.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in the first place, there is no reason why the farmers can not select bankers as directors of this board if they want to do it. There is no obligation that all of these six directors to be chosen by the national farm-loan associations shall be farmers. There is no requirement of that sort. They may select anyone—lawyers, bankers, business men—but I am far from assuming that the successful farmers of this country, interested in this great institution for the benefit of agriculture, have not intelligence enough to elect a board of directors for these banks. I will never concede that. They have sense enough to elect Members to this body. They are competent to elect directors of banks created and established for their benefit, in which they own the stock and in the proper conduct of the affairs of which they are vitally concerned.

Mr. GLASS. They apparently have had sense enough to elect United States Senators who have not, upon the test, made very good Senators.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator from Virginia, if he will excuse me just one minute, that my reference to him grew out of the fact that I supposed he was in harmony with the Senator from Connecticut about these farm-loan bonds being instrumentalities of the Government.

Mr. McLEAN. That is what the law says.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, the law does not say that. The law says, if the Senator will permit me, that these banks shall be instrumentalities of the Government, agencies of the Government, just as a national bank is an agency of the Government; but the Senator does not contend that the Government is in anywise, either legally or morally, responsible for the stock of a national bank, does he?

Mr. McLEAN. If I said bonds, I meant banks. I did not say "legally" obligated. I said there was a moral obligation there, and you will find that if these bonds are ever defaulted the Government will come to the rescue.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I do not think the Government is under any legal or moral responsibility whatsoever to come to the rescue of these banks. It has become fashionable when nobody has a legal claim that he can establish against the Government to talk about the moral responsibility.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is now speaking of the stock, is he not? The Federal Government, of course, has a moral responsibility in the case of the bonds.

Mr. GLASS. I do not think the Federal Government is at all responsible for the bonds. They are the bonds of a private corporation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The bonds are fiscal instruments of the Government, and are made to escape taxation for that reason.

Mr. GLASS. Is the Federal Government responsible for the indebtedness of any national bank? National banks are instrumentalities and agencies of the Government. Senators who are members of the Banking and Currency Committee know full well, because it has been there confessed time and time again that this provision of the bill was simply put in to make the bill itself constitutional. Strike that out and the act itself will be declared an unconstitutional enactment by the Supreme Court.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I happen to know why the provision was put in. I made the suggestion myself, and I made it upon the force and strength of the great decision in the case of McCulloch against Maryland——

Mr. GLASS. Which decided everything.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In which John Marshall said that a fiscal agency of one of our dual forms of government could not be taxed by the other, and this provision was not put in to make the bill constitutional. It was put in to make the bonds exempt from taxation by the States and the municipalities of this country.

Mr. GLASS. That provision does not make the bonds exempt. A specific provision of the act exempts the bonds, and this provision was put in to make the exemption constitutional; that is all. It was never intended that the United States Government should be pecuniarily responsible for the bonds of these private corporations.

Mr. FLETCHER. That was the main feature of the law that these private money lenders and bankers attacked—that is, the provision for tax exemption—and its constitutionality was brought into question.

Mr. GLASS. Does the Senator from Florida contend that the United States is morally responsible for the bonds issued by the joint stock land banks?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think there is a legal or moral responsibility.

Mr. GLASS. Certainly not.

Mr. FLETCHER. But I do say that inasmuch as the Government supervises and controls the whole system through a bureau, without raising the question of responsibility, they ought to stand back of the system.

Mr. GLASS. Does not the Government supervise and control the entire national banking system of the United States by a czar here in Washington? Is it in any sense, either legally or morally, responsible for the obligations of the national banks?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Government generally exercises diligence and makes every possible effort to see that the depositors in those banks are taken care of. They watch that pretty closely.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes; but from time to time a national bank fails. Does the Senator know of one single, solitary instance in which it has been seriously contended that the Government has any responsibility whatsoever for the indebtedness of such a bank?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I think the Government is not responsible in such a case as that. But I want to complete this statement. When I referred to the statement of the Senator from Virginia I had in mind his observation yesterday, when I proposed that amendment allowing the investment of the capital of these corporations provided for in this bill in farm loan bonds, as well as Government bonds. The Senator made some reference to the proposition as being equivalent to a proposal to make railroad bonds eligible as investments for the capital of such corporations, to be deposited with the Federal reserve bank before they could do business and in the nature of reserves.

Mr. GLASS. I did. I was denying on yesterday, and I am denying now, that these banks are Government institutions.

Mr. FLETCHER. But they stand altogether on a different basis——

Mr. GLASS. I was opposed to the Senator's amendment, of which he is now speaking.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the stock of these banks is one thing, and the bonds are another thing. There is not a man in America who bought those bonds who did not believe, and who was not justified in believing, that the Federal Government was behind them. The Senator from Virginia says, very truthfully, of couse, that the Federal Government never made good any losses of a national bank to its depositors, but the Federal Government made good the bonds, which were the basis of the circulating notes of the national banks, and was behind those bonds, and therefore indirectly behind the circulating currency based upon the bonds. When the question came up in the committee the chairman of the committee talked to me about it, and asked me how we could secure the exemption of these bonds from State and municipal taxation. I called his attention to the great case of McCulloch against Maryland, and told him that John Marshall had based his decision in that case upon an utterance to the effect that they were fiscal agencies of the Federal Government, and therefore the State of Maryland could not tax the United States Bank, as it was then called, and that if Congress pronounced them to be a fiscal agency of the Federal Government, surely no court would go behind its pronouncement. That is the history of the transaction.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I doubt very much whether it is not believed generally by the people of the United States that the Government is responsible for the issue of the bonds by the joint-stock land banks. I agree with the Senator from Virginia that the Government is not responsible, but when I see these joint-stock land banks advertising in all of the great papers of this country, virtually telling the American people that the Government of the United States is responsible for the issue of those bonds, I know that if any failure comes the losers would immediately say that the Government took no action at all to deny the advertisements in these great papers.

Mr. FLETCHER. They have no right to advertise in that way.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that, and I say now, as I said here a few years ago, that I think it ought to be stopped. I think the Government of the United States ought to tell those joint-stock land banks that they can not advertise as they have done in the past.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think if that sort of advertisement is brought to the attention of the Farm Loan Board, the Farm Loan Board will stop it, because they have control over the matter of the security back of and the issuing of those bonds.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I venture to say that the Federal Trade Commission would have jurisdiction in that case.

Mr. SMOOT. I have in my office advertisements from all parts of the country along that line.

Mr. GLASS. May I ask, right at this point, if the contention here that these bonds are instrumentalities of the Federal Government, and that the Federal Government is morally bound to redeem them, is correct, why may not these banks advertise the fact? Senators want to prosecute them for advertising the very fact they assert is a fact and which I assert is not a fact.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. GLASS. I know, but the Senator from Florida does not agree with the Senator from Virginia, and he is proposing now to prosecute these banks for doing what he says they have a right to do.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have agreed with the Senator that there is no obligation on the part of the Government in respect to these joint-stock land bank bonds.

Mr. GLASS. And in respect to the others?

Mr. FLETCHER. And in respect to the others.

Mr. GLASS. If I may intervene right there, the Senator from Mississippi, who, I am sorry to say, has left the floor, referred to the fact that the Government is responsible for the bonds of national banks. I call his attention to the fact that since the adoption of the Federal reserve system the national banks no longer have to buy United States bonds, and he can not apply his argument to national banks which have been organized since the passage of the Federal reserve act.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator ought to include in that that the bonds he referred to were not the bonds of the national banks at all.

Mr. GLASS. They were bonds of the United States Government.

Mr. NORRIS. They were bonds of the United States, hence there can be no application of that argument to them.

Mr. GLASS. The requirement that national banks should buy them as a basis of their circulation was contended by the national banks to be a hardship rather than an advantage. So we have abolished that system entirely, under the Federal reserve act, and since the adoption of the Federal reserve act, in 1913, no national bank which has been organized has been required to supply itself with United States bonds. Therefore the argument falls.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have never contended that either the Federal land bank bonds or the joint-stock land bank bonds were obligations of the Government.

Mr. GLASS. Then there is no difference between the Senator and me.

Mr. FLETCHER. None at all. I was pointing out that the objection was raised yesterday to my amendment to include farm loan bonds as a part of the investment of the capital of these corporations to be organized under this bill, which they are required to deposit with the Federal reserve bank, and the Senator from Connecticut joined with the Senator from Virginia and objected, and the Senator from Virginia said that you might as well propose Pennsylvania Railroad bonds. I do say they stand on a different footing from bonds issued by a private concern, a railroad or any other private enterprise, because there is a certain responsibility here on the part of the Government growing out of the fact that the law gives a bureau of the Treasury power to supervise and control this entire system, and out of the fact that the Government, through the Farm Loan Board, names three directors of every one of these Federal land banks, permanently and continuously.

There is a certain consideration to be given to that situation, and I am not objecting to it. I am willing to continue that, but I am not willing to perpetuate a board of five directors in each of these Federal land banks, every one of whom is named by the Farm Loan Board, while no national farm loan association, although they own the stock of these banks, has a voice in the selection of a single director in a single bank. That is a situation that is intolerable.

I have on my desk over a hundred letters, from every State in the Union, from various secretaries and treasurers of farm loan associations, complaining about that situation and insisting that the farm loan associations owning the stock of these banks ought to be permitted to exercise the functions prescribed in the original act, and they should. That is what we are trying to accomplish, and that is what we are asking—that we go back to the original act providing that three directors shall be named by the Farm Loan Board and six directors be elected by the national farm loan associations whenever they own a majority of the stock in these banks, and that today embraces all the 12 land banks.

I venture to say that three directors who would undoubtedly be named by the farm loan associations would be those very capable men, those trained and experienced men, who have thus far been managing these banks. They will undoubtedly be continued in those positions. The president, the vice president, and the secretary or treasurer, three of whom at least have had to do with the management of these banks, will undoubtedly be continued as directors by the Farm Loan Board wherever they are giving satisfaction. Nobody can complain about it or would complain about it. We rather wish that may be done. As far as I am concerned, I think it ought to be done. It does seem to me that if you have three capable, experienced men in every one of these banks—the president of it and the other two strong men—they ought to be able to convince any six new men you might select as members of that board that they are discharging their duties faithfully and well, and they ought to be able to control that board as to its policies and as to its operations.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator what benefits he thinks would accrue to the stockholders from the control of the banks by the stockholders?

Mr. FLETCHER. In the first place, we get rid of this dissatisfaction; we get rid of this feeling that the stockholders are not being fairly and justly dealt with. That would be a helpful thing—a demonstration that you want to be fair and just in the conduct of this great enterprise.

In the next place, while I would not venture to go into all the details of the conduct of the business of these banks, I can see a good many ways where the stockholders might be benefited if they had a voice on the board of directors. I might mention at the moment there is the matter of dividends. The stockholders are interested in the dividends. If these banks hold back the dividends and do not pay them out, that is a question the directors would have some voice in. I am advised these dividends have been held back in some instances.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator state where that is being done? My information is just to the contrary.

Mr. FLETCHER. I can give the Senator the details of that from letters.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will not the Senator do it now?

Mr. FLETCHER. It would take a little examination, and I have not my files all here now. I have referred to letters, and I have a hundred or more of them here. Some of them mention that the dividends are not being paid in the way to give the benefits to the people who are entitled to them.

Then this situation has arisen: Here is a national farm-loan association. One of the members of that association has failed to keep up his interest payments. Out goes the word from the Federal land bank, "We will receive no more applications from that association until that default is made good." Notwithstanding the fact that the Federal reserve bank has in its hands in the form of dividends on the stock that should go to the national farm-loan association far in excess of the amount of that default in interest, they stop the business of the farm-loan association because one member is in default, although his obligation is indorsed by the whole association and is a perfectly safe asset. He may have defaulted a few months in his interest, but there is no danger of any loss, because the farm-loan association of which he is a member is obliged to make it good if he does not. In addition to that there are dividends held by the farm-loan bank to which that association is entitled exceeding the amount of the default, and still they say, "We will entertain no more applications from that association until that default is made good."

That is just an illustration. If the farm-loan associations were represented on the board of directors they would have something to say about that situation. That is an answer to the question as to kind of benefit the stockholders might get if they were represented on the board of directors.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator takes the position that if the farmers were represented and had control of the board of directors, the board of directors would not enforce the collection of interest.

Mr. FLETCHER. Not at all; but they would not paralyze the association until it was necessary to do it in order to secure the payment that was due and as to which there was no danger of loss.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator if when the individual is at fault the association is not responsible?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; that is what I said.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Suppose it fails to pay, what would be done? The bank has to pay the interest on the bonds.

Mr. FLETCHER. The association would pay.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator was citing a case in which the association does not pay.

Mr. FLETCHER. The association in that instance was not called on to pay, as I recollect. It was simply notified that they would receive no more applications from that association; but even if the association were called on to pay and did not pay, if the bank had dividends in its possession belonging to the association far in excess of the amount due, why should the business be stopped?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator think the bank should take that money and apply it upon that loan?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; they have the right under the law to do that very thing.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. To credit that individual with his interest?

Mr. FLETCHER. They can charge that dividend up to any default by the association. They can protect the bank fully under the law without destroying the association.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But the Senator thinks they should not enforce collection from the association?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think they should, but I think they ought to be reasonable about it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Was it not the very fundamental basis of the act when we passed it that the strength of it was that if the individual defaulted the association would pay?

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is what makes the bonds good.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no risk or danger anywhere; but to take an arbitrary position with respect to the transaction of the business of the bank, just because they have the power to do it and are able to do it, is a thing they ought not to be permitted to do, and they would not be permitted to do it and they would not attempt to do it if the farm loan associations were represented properly on the board of directors. I do not think that is general, but it has happened.

Other times there are delays, tremendous delays. I have complaints upon my desk showing that unquestionably that is true in various parts of the country. It was particularly true a year ago where farmers made applications, and the applications were passed upon and there was no question about the security, but they were simply notified by the bank: "We do not know when we will get to your application. It may be three months or it may be six months. As soon as we can we will take it up." That is not the proper way to treat the people who are entitled to the facilities and the benefits from the system, and they would not treat them that way if they had a voice on the board of directors which runs the affairs of the bank.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to say to the Senator that the complaint he makes does not apply at least to the eighth district, which bank is located in Omaha. In that district no such complaints are made, and the associations are overwhelmingly in favor of leaving the law as it is at present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Without any representation on the board of directors?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes. The association in the eighth district is very highly satisfactory. The only interest the members have in the operation of the bank is the paying of the dividends upon the stock. They have received in one year 6 per cent, 6 per cent in another year, 8 per cent, 10 per cent, and now a dividend of 15 per cent. They have had a splendid investment in the stock in the operations of the bank.

Mr. FLETCHER. Well, they ought to have.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The associations are composed of the people who have the loans. They are not interested in the making of the loans.

Mr. FLETCHER. They ought to be receiving new members all the time. They do not wind up their business in that way. They require 10 farmers or more to meet and qualify and organize the association. As soon as they are supplied with loans that is not the end of the association. They are supposed to take in other members, and it is supposed to be a going concern.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I realize that it is supposed to be a going concern, but the statistics show that only one-tenth of the members attend the meetings. They are satisfied when they have made their loans. All the associations are run by the secretary-treasurer.

Mr. FLETCHER. Right on that point I will ask the Senator if he knows of any corporation, any great life-insurance corporation, any railroad corporation, any banking corporation, any corporation at all where the stockholders meet and act regularly upon the business of the corporation. He knows perfectly well that they elect a board of directors and depend upon their directors to run the affairs of the corporation. At the annual meetings the stockholders rarely attend in person. They are generally represented by proxies.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am now talking about the annual meeting of the stockholders where the directors are supposed to be elected. The statistics show that only one-tenth of the members attend. Why? It is because they are satisfied with the way things are going and are satisfied with the dividends. They have their loans and have not any further interest in the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator underestimates the interest which the members of the associations take generally in their organizations. I can see perfectly well how there is no occasion for the members to go great distances to attend a meeting of the National Farm Loan Association when they have elected directors and a secretary-treasurer to look after it.

There is another rule of the Farm Loan Board which has been laid down and for which I can find no authority in the law. That is, that members are not allowed to vote by proxy at the meetings. Under the national banking act they are expressly given the right to vote by proxy. Under the various other organizations it is my understanding they can vote by proxy.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is not that due to the fact that the law does not allow a man to sell or hypothecate his stock? He can not assign it, but must hold it in person.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think that has anything to do with it. Why can not the members of the farm loan associations, scattered over a great area, long distances from headquarters, say, "Here, Mr. Secretary-Treasurer," or anyone else, eliminating the officers and designating some one else, "go and attend that meeting. Here is my proxy. Represent me at that meeting"? Why can they not be allowed to do that? There is no law against it, nor is there any law upon which a regulation of that kind can be based. Why should the Farm Loan Board lay down the rule that proxies are not allowed in the meetings and that the members must personally attend the meetings in order that the business may be transacted?

That is just one more thing which is an illustration of the domination of the whole system by a politically appointed board here in Washington. I think it is not a satisfactory situation, and I can see perfectly well how the farmers all over the country should feel as they do about it. I have not had the time to examine all these letters. I have checked over the general effect of them. I do not question the Senator's word as to what has taken place in Nebraska.

They are having a very successful organization there and doing good business, but I remember some time ago when the matter was up the Senator said everything was perfectly satisfactory out there and I produced a letter from one of the secretary-treasurers representing a farm loan association which was a member of that bank, and at the time that letter did not agree with the Senator's view. Now here is the letter which I just happened to run across from Farnam, Nebr., from the secretary-treasurer of the Farnam National Farm Loan Association. He writes me as follows:

If there is anything the farmers do want, it is freedom from political control, and this is especially true of this loan system. It is becoming more popular every day as they get to see the advantages of it, and it seems a shame it can not be left unchanged.

That is, he opposes any change in the original act, and this amendment simply proposes to take us back to the original law.

I have no doubt I could show plenty of similar letters.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the Senator if the primary object and purpose of the law was not to afford money to the farmer, upon the terms laid down in the law, at the lowest possible rate?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; I think so.

Mr. LENROOT. That was the primary purpose and object of the law?

Mr. FLETCHER. And on terms adapted to the needs of agriculture.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, ought not the test of the action upon this amendment to be just this: Will the farm loan bonds, if the management be under the local association, be as attractive an investment and will they carry as low a rate of interest as they are carrying under the present system?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think so.

Mr. LENROOT. If any Senator believes otherwise in the interest of the farmer, is it not his duty to vote to continue the present system?

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course each Senator can pass on that to suit his own conscience and judgment. My judgment is that the bonds would be every bit as good in the market and the whole system would be just as thorough and just as good when the national farm loan associations have the voice that the law originally prescribed they should have, namely, to elect six of the directors of the bank, leaving the farm loan association to name three, as obtain under the temporary organization when the Farm Loan Board appointed a board of five directors as now. The intimation is the national farm loan associations are borrowers, and the borrowers ought not to elect directors in these banks. I submit that these borrowers have their homes and everything they possess at stake. They are vitally interested in seeing that the bonds are fully secured, the affairs conducted in an honest and efficient manner, and that the system be a pronounced success in every detail. There is no comparison between their interest and their responsibility and the interest or obligation of five political appointees named by a bureau in Washington.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think the answer to the question addressed to the Senator from Florida by the Senator from Wisconsin is tested by the rate of interest which the original issues bore prior to 1918.

Mr. FLETCHER. I had referred to those.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Those were issued under the law then existing, which contemplated that as soon as $100,000 capital was subscribed by the association, the association should control two-thirds of the directors. I do not remember that there was any difficulty about negotiating the bonds nor that they were obliged to pay any exorbitant rate of interest upon them.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bonds sold readily. I said a few moments ago they were sold when the purchasers knew precisely what the law provided respecting the permanent organization of the banks, which, if the law had been put into operation, would have given long ago six directors chosen by the National Farm Loan Association and others by the Farm Loan Board in each Federal land bank.

Mr. NORRIS. Speaking from recollection only, I think the rate of interest on those bonds was a little less than it has been under the new management. There may be other causes, of course, but my recollection is that they were 4 per cent bonds straight. I may be wrong.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think there is no sort of foundation for any notion that the bonds would not have the confidence of the public and be just as salable on the market at as low a rate of interest under the management prescribed by that act as under this temporary management, and my judgment is they ought to be better. They ought to be safer. The temporary management is a part of the purely political management of the entire system.

No political appointees can be as vitally concerned and have as much at stake as the men who are directly related to the business involved, and all they have depends practically on the success of the whole enterprise.

Mr. McLEAN. Only yesterday a gentleman spoke to me about that very point. He said, "I intended to buy some of those bonds, but if the control is going to be taken out of its present hands I shall not buy them."

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, he may have had some purpose in making that statement. There will be no lack of buyers.

Mr. McLEAN. Investors are pretty sensitive. That is why I am opposed to the amendment. I do not see any need for it. The Senator from Florida knows that the member of the Federal Farm Loan Board who appeared before the committee testified that the minute a member of an association obtained his loan he lost all interest in the association and that he could not be induced to take any further interest in it. I think that is true to a large extent. Out of the membership of farm loan associations throughout the United States the Senator from Florida may have received 100 letters.

Mr. FLETCHER. Such letters are coming in every day, a dozen or more of them a day.

Mr. McLEAN. I know that some gentlemen who represent the agricultural interests of the country seem to be intensely interested in this matter. That is their business. They are good men; they draw large salaries, and when they get one bill through in the interest of the farmer they must have another pending at once or they will be out of a job. I do not criticize them; they mean well, and many of them are fine men; but they have got to have something to propose all the while. So as soon as we pass one bill on comes another. It is very easy for those men, representing various associations, to accumulate a large number of letters such as the Senator from Florida has received. I do not know that the men to whom I have referred are responsible for them, but it is easily done.

Now I wish to say to the Senator from Florida that the member of the Federal Farm Loan Board who appeared before the committee testified that he did not believe we could get the associations to take the interest which they ought to take in order to appoint directors; that the selection would be left to some politician in the district, who would work the thing up; that the real farmers did not care anything about it; and I think he was right in reference to that.

Mr. FLETCHER. In reference to the observations of the Senator from Connecticut, I desire to say that no farm bureau is back of these letters. I have been receiving inquiries from various farm-loan associations in different parts of the country with regard to legislation which is pending here. Of course, they are interested in that subject. The letters came in such quantities that I could not answer in detail every single letter which came to me, so I prepared a kind of circular letter which was an answer, as I saw it, to inquiries as they were put to me. I manifolded it, and I sent it out. Other letters and suggestions have come in response to my letter. That, however, has nothing whatever to do with the matter. The Senator from Connecticut can ascertain, if he desires to do so, or I can furnish him proof, that the national farm-loan associations desire representation on the boards of directors of the Federal land banks.

Mr. McLEAN. Right there I will say to the Senator from Florida that I think the wise solution of this problem would be to give the associations two directors and let three of them remain appointees of the Federal Farm Loan Board. I think the majority should be appointed by the board; but I am perfectly willing that the farmers, if they desire representation, should have it. The Senator's amendment, however, goes too far; it proposes to give six directors to the associations and that only three shall be retained by the board.

Mr. FLETCHER. Going back a little further than the present situation, I desire to say that when the act was originally framed it was provided that the permanent organization should consist of nine directors for the Federal land banks, three to be named by the Farm Loan Board and six to be selected by the national farm loan associations. I do not see why that is not the right number. I know that during the pressure following the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States the Farm Loan Board complained about the inadequacy of their force in disposing of the business that had been put up to them. I think the Federal land banks need nine directors instead of five, and I think they ought to have nine directors.

Then, as to the control, even when the system was in its infancy the original act provided that whenever $100,000 worth of the stock in any one of the Federal land banks should be owned by national farm loan associations the permanent organization should then immediately take place and those associations should then select six directors. The amendment provides that when a majority of the stock is held by the national farm loan associations the permanent organization shall take place. It modifies the original act to that extent.

Mr. McLEAN. A change has not been made, because experience has shown that the temporary management has been so good and so satisfactory that the probabilities are if we undertake to improve upon it we shall make a mistake.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I do not think that follows at all. One reason, at least to my mind—and I am going to defer to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] as to that—is that there is not a single land bank of which the national farm loan associations do not own a majority of the stock.

However, Mr. President, I have dwelt longer than I intended on this subject. I know the Senator from Montana has examined it very thoroughly; it is his original proposal; and I am not going to take up much further time. The fact is that the interruptions have rather interfered with the logical order of the remarks which I intended to make and have consumed more time than I feel was warranted.

I might, however, allude to just one other thought with reference to the farm loan associations as to which I have not yet said anything. I refer to the first section of the proposed amendment which provides that the National Farm Loan Associations shall be permitted to use not exceeding $25 a year of their funds in furthering their own welfare by establishing unions or assemblies or holding meetings or conventions or doing whatever they may see fit to do in looking after their interests. They need to look after those interests. They are a long way from Washington. Proposals are being made at various times affecting the farm loan act and the system generally. They need somebody to keep them informed about what is going on here and to advise them with reference to these various moves. There is a proposal now being presented which, if agreed to, would destroy the tax-exempt feature of their bonds. Situated as they are in remote portions of the country, they are not prepared to oppose that sort of movement, and yet the movement is inspired from purely selfish motives, in my judgment. It is a matter of vital importance to the National Farm Loan Associations. The provision in the first paragraph of the amendment would enable them to make this expenditure for the purposes indicated. I think they, perhaps, have the right to do it now; but their right to do it has been questioned by the Farm Loan Board. I think the Farm Loan Board made a mistake; that they ought to welcome the cooperation and enthusiastic interest of every farm loan association in this country; but their effort seems to be to shackle the farm loan associations. The farm loan associations embody the cooperative principle of the act; the whole system is founded upon the National Farm Loan Associations. They represent the purely cooperative spirit behind the legislation, and they ought not to be destroyed; they ought to be stimulated; they ought to be encouraged; they ought to be helped everywhere.

Not only was it my contemplation that they should constitute the basis of the system in connection with their financial operations but that they might be the nucleus around which cooperative organizations generally might be formed by those engaged in agriculture, organizations looking to cooperative marketing, cooperative distribution, civic improvement, and various other movements affecting the welfare of the people of the country, tending to make life more attractive in the rural sections, and promoting their advantage and benefit in wide fields which concern their daily life.

The national farm-loan associations are important. They themselves ought to be able to cooperate and organize in a way that would protect their interests, and in that way protect the welfare of the various communities in which they exist.

Mr. President, I will not take any further time. As I have said, I know the Senator from Montana is familiar with this question, and I hope he will discuss it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida consists of two distinct paragraphs, apparently unrelated to each other, and yet, as the discussion develops, it will be perceived that there is a principle common to both of them. The first paragraph provides that farm-loan associations may devote of their general funds a sum not to exceed $25 annually to meet the expenses of membership in a national association of farm-loan associations.

When this law was in its infancy and the bill was before Congress for enactment, those who were its friends felt that it was the most important experiment in cooperation. It was believed the cooperative principle was the correct principle upon which a Federal farm-loan law should be enacted. It was believed that the farm-loan associations would be cooperative in character and that the land banks would be cooperative banks, owned by the local associations representing their farmer members. No one can doubt that that was the purpose of the framers of the law; and that eventually the operations of the land banks, as well as of the associations themselves, would be controlled by the farmer stockholders. That there would be common interests between the various land banks and between the various members of the association, of course, is entirely obvious. They are interested necessarily in the law itself, in the administration of the law, and, more particularly, in the numerous amendments which from time to time Congress is asked to enact to the law.

Having this matter in mind, a number of the associations and persons more or less directly interested in their welfare organized what was known as the National Union of Farm Loan Associations, with headquarters in the city of Washington. It was an organization through which the wishes and desires of the members of the local associations could find expression.

It was an organization through which the Congress could learn what the various members were thinking of in connection with this legislation and with the enforcement of it. Quite a number of these local associations were desirous of becoming members of the union, which required the payment of annual dues to the amount of $10 per year. They were desirous of becoming members of the association and of contributing to its treasury, for the purposes indicated, that small sum of money. The Farm Loan Board, however, frowned upon this organization and lent it no encouragement. They even went so far as to send out a notice, circular in nature, carrying plainly an intimation that the devotion of even such a small sum as $10 per year toward the expenses of this organization would be regarded by the Farm Loan Board as a misapplication of the funds of the association which would subject the officers authorizing it to prosecution criminally for embezzlement or some related offense.

The pertinent provision of the law is found in section 7 and reads as follows:

> The reasonable expenses of the secretary-treasurer, the loan committee, and other officers and agents of national farm-loan associations, and the salary of the secretary-treasurer shall be paid from the general funds of the association, and the board of directors is authorized to set aside such sums as it shall deem requisite for that purpose and for other expenses of said association.

It would, I think, require no very liberal construction of the statute to which I have referred to justify the making of these payments, notwithstanding the Farm Loan Board felt impelled to take the course which I have indicated; and consequently express authority for making these expenditures is asked by the first paragraph of the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. President, that simply indicates the disposition concerning this matter which is also made manifest in the other paragraph of the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, to which I shall presently address myself. The idea is that these people ought not to be permitted to handle this business for themselves; that the whole institution, instead of being cooperative in its character, as was contemplated at the time the law was passed, should be paternalistic in character; and that their interests should be taken care of by the Farm Loan Board here in the city of Washington, who could manage their business for them very much better than they could themselves. They wanted to get together in the form of a national association so that they could confer together conveniently and effectively, but the Farm Loan Board apparently thought that was a very unwise thing to do, and consequently, as I say, put its ban upon the expenditure.

I do not think that feature of the matter needs any further consideration. I entertain no doubt that the Congress will be very glad to allow this trifling expenditure for the purpose indicated.

The other matter, however, is one of some very considerable consequence. As I have indicated, the law was enacted as an expression of the cooperative principle. If it had not been thought that that was a wise principle upon which to enact the legislation and to found these institutions, we would have adopted some other plan. It will be recalled very well that at that time it was proposed that the Government itself should loan the money directly to the farmers or through some such intermediate agency as the bank, the thing having no cooperative features whatever; but no one really gave very great support to that idea. The cooperative principle was regarded by all as the correct principle upon which the institutions were to be founded. Accordingly the law provided that each one of the local associations should be obliged to subscribe for stock in the land banks to the extent of 5 per cent of their capital stock, respectively. The Government set the institutions going by providing the initial capital, required by the law to be not less than $750,000, the provision of the act with respect to that being as follows:

That every Federal land bank shall have, before beginning business, a subscribed capital of not less than $750,000. The Federal Farm Loan Board is authorized to prescribe the times and conditions of the payment of subscriptions to capital stock.

* * * * * * *

Stock owned by the Government of the United States in Federal land banks shall receive no dividends—

And so forth.

In view of that situation, the Government of the United States, providing the initial capital, it was provided, and very properly provided, that the Government of the United States, having provided the capital under which the banks were to operate, should have control of the board of directors; and so it was provided as follows:

Each Federal land bank shall be temporarily managed by five directors appointed by the Federal Farm Loan Board. Said directors shall be citizens of the United States and residents of the district.

They conducted the business of the bank when it began its operations, but it was further provided as follows by the same section—section 4:

After the subscriptions to stock in any Federal land bank by national farm loan associations hereinafter authorized shall have reached the sum of $100,000 the officers and directors of said land bank shall be chosen as herein provided and shall, upon becoming duly qualified, take over the management of said land bank from the temporary officers selected under this section.

How were those officers to be selected? The next paragraph prescribes:

The board of directors of every Federal land bank shall be selected as hereinafter specified and shall consist of nine members, each holding office for three years. Six of said directors shall be known as local directors, and shall be chosen by and be representative of national farm loan associations; and the remaining three directors shall be known as district directors, and shall be appointed by the Federal Farm Loan Board and represent the public interest.

Bear in mind, the Government of the United States provides $750,000 of the capital, and when the capital thus subscribed by the Government is retired to the extent of only $100,000 the temporary arrangement is to cease, and the control is, as indicated, to pass to the subscribing associations. Under that law all of the bonds of these associations were issued until we got into the war, when the bond market was in such a situation, in view of the fact that the Government was putting out its Liberty bond issues and that kind of thing, that it was deemed inadvisable to offer in the market these farm loan bonds, and a law was passed authorizing the Government of the United States to subscribe for the bonds of the farm loan banks to the extent of $250,000,000. That was the act of January 18, 1918, the pertinent provision reading as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized, in his discretion, upon the request of the Federal Farm Loan Board, from time to time during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1918, and June 30, 1919, respectively, to purchase at par and accrued interest with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, from any Federal land bank, farm loan bonds issued by such bank.

Such purchases shall not exceed the sum of $100,000,000 in either of such fiscal years. Any Federal land bank may at any time repurchase at par and accrued interest for the purpose of redemption or resale any bonds so purchased from it and held in the Treasury.

The bonds of any Federal land bank so purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury, and held in the Treasury under the provisions of this amendment one year after the termination of the pending war, shall, upon 30 days' notice from the Secretary of the Treasury, be redeemed or repurchased by such bank at par and accrued interest.

Now:

The temporary organization of any Federal land bank as provided in section 4 of said Federal farm loan act shall be continued so long as any farm loan bonds purchased from it under the provisions of this amendment shall be held by the Treasury, and until the subscriptions to stock in such bank by national farm loan associations shall equal the amount of stock held in such bank by the Government of the United States.

Accordingly, by virtue of the provisions of this act, the temporary organization of these land banks was continued so long as the Government should hold any of these bonds. The land banks were given the opportunity to call in these bonds; but so long as the land banks are controlled by six directors appointed by the Farm Loan Board these bonds will not be repurchased, nor will they be called in until, of course, the Farm Loan Board gets ready to have them called in. Now, it is perfectly well understood that the Farm Loan Board does not want the control of these land banks to pass into the hands of the associations. It wants to control these land banks itself, to select six of the directors of the banks, who, of course, will be obliged to conform their policy to the policy of the Farm Loan Board.

It is also here provided, as will be observed, that the control of the Farm Loan Board shall continue not only until these bonds thus held in the Treasury are disposed of, but also as long as the Government of the United States remains the owner of as much as one-half of the stock of the land banks. Observe the original law provided that the control should pass into the hands of the associations when the amount of the stock owned by the associations was $100,000. If the stock was $750,000, by this amendment the temporary organization would continue until the associations held not only $100,000 but one-half of $750,000, namely, $375,000; and that feature, Mr. President, is continued in the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida. That is to say, by the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida the law is made more unfavorable to the associations than was the original law itself under which the original bonds were issued.

Something was said about whether these bonds could be sold at as low a rate of interest if the law were changed. Why, Mr. President, as has been disclosed here in the course of the debate, the original bonds issued by these farm loan banks under this law which gave the associations control of the affairs of the banks when they were the owners of only $100,000 of the capital sold readily upon the market, and at rates of interest that were entirely satisfactory and as low as they ever have been sold; but it is not proposed to go back to that. It is not proposed to go back and to pass control of these banks to the associations until at least $375,000 of the capital is subscribed by these associations. What is the situation with respect to this stock? The last report of the Farm Loan Board which is available to me is that returned to the Congress under date of January 7, 1922, by the Secretary of the Treasury. It is there disclosed that the Government of the United States originally subscribed for stock in these land banks to the amount of $8,892,130, and that there has been retired of that stock $2,293,360, leaving the Government of the United States now the owner of $6,598,770 of that stock, the retirement having taken place under this provision of the law, namely:

After the subscriptions to capital stock by national farm loan associations shall amount to $750,000 in any Federal land bank said bank shall apply semiannually to the payment and retirement of the shares of stock which were issued to represent the subscriptions to the original capital 25 per cent of all sums thereafter subscribed to capital stock until all such original capital stock is retired at par.

That is to say, Mr. President, it was contemplated in the original act that the associations should eventually absorb the stock originally contributed by the Government. How much of this have the associations contributed? The same report shows, as I have indicated, that the Government now owns of the stock of these land banks $6,598,770 and that the national farm loan associations own $21,109,215, and it is proposed to continue this arrangement, under which the owners of six millions of stock have six representatives upon the board of directors and the owners of twenty-one millions of stock have but three.

It is said that that is a good arrangement; that is to say, the Government of the United States ought to remain in the control of these banks; that we ought to abandon altogether the cooperative principle; that it is not sound; that we can not trust to the operation of the cooperative principle, and that we ought to adopt the paternalistic idea of the Government running and controlling these banks through its control of two-thirds of the directors of the banks.

I know there are many people who do not believe that the people of the United States are wise enough to govern themselves. There is a school of statesmen in this country who are convinced that our system of government is not founded upon sound principles, that the people generally are unaware of what is for their best interests, and that there is some class of people in the country who, by reason of education and general intelligence, ought to be intrusted with the management of their affairs. I do not believe that is a sound principle.

It is said that the farmers are not bankers. Of course that is true, and I do not suppose there is one in a thousand of the farmers who belong to these farm loan associations who believes that he is competent to run the business of a Federal land bank; but I doubt if you can find one of them who is not perfectly confident, as I am confident, that he is perfectly able to select some man who is competent to run them. As has been indicated, that is the principle upon which our whole Government is based.

The State governments have become great big business institutions. A man is obliged to consult his own individual financial interests every time he casts a vote for the governor of his State, or for the State officers, or for members of the legislature of his State. Why should he not be as competent to select a man as director of a Federal land bank? I simply want to add this statement, that there is no man, I believe, who is so well competent to take care of his own business as the man who has his money invested in that business.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am very much interested in the viewpoint of the Senator, but I inquire for information, first, is it not a fact that the strength of the land banks has rested largely upon the conception of the people that they were controlled by the Treasury Department, through proper agencies, and by reason of the selection of men of profound knowledge upon fiscal and banking affairs?

Another question; if that view is conceded, if a different policy is executed, and the views of the Senator prevail, and the banks are put largely, if not wholly, under the control of the owners of the stock, will there not be a diminution of the confidence of the people in the business integrity and stability of these institutions?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I can only answer, as Patrick Henry said, in the light of experience. Our experience in the matter, when it was not doubted that they were going to have control of the banks in accordance with the provisions of this law, when they became the owners of only $100,000 of capital, clearly demonstrates, to my mind, that that view is not correct and that there was no apprehension in the public mind of the solvency of these institutions or of the manner in which they would be conducted. It will be borne in mind, in the first place, that the Farm Loan Board was constituted by the act as a general supervising agency over the whole thing, every member of which is appointed in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution—by the President, and confirmed by the Senate. They are the supervising agency.

Quite naturally and quite reasonably, the directors of the banks, the managers of the banks, will consult with the board, and generally, if they can, conform their policy to the policy of the Farm Loan Board. In the second place, one-third of the members of the board of directors of the bank, even when the Government of the United States does not own a dollar of the stock in it, are appointed by the Farm Loan Board, the other six members being appointed by the associations, and it was believed at the time the act was passed that that would be assurance enough to the investor that the Government of the United States would exercise a careful supervision and control over the operations of the banks.

Mr. President, that leads me to the subject of the moral obligation of the Government of the United States in this matter. Of course, no one contends that there is any legal obligation upon the United States, so far as the bonds of these land banks are concerned, but it is said that in some way or other there is a moral obligation upon the Government of the United States. Upon what basis is there a moral obligation upon the United States? These bonds are the bonds of the land banks, the stock of which is entirely owned by these local private associations who will eventually control the corporation and its destiny, the capital originally contributed by the United States, and eventually displaced by the subscriptions of the various associations.

The Government of the United States, at the time this law was enacted, expressly declared its purpose, by the very form of these instruments, not to make them the obligations of the Government of the United States. Every man who bought the obligations knows, if he knows anything, that they are not obligations of the United States and do not on their face purport to be obligations of the United States any more than national-bank currency is an obligation of the United States.

Under those circumstances, where does the obligation of the United States, from a moral standpoint, come in? As has been indicated, they stand exactly upon the same footing as the notes of a national bank. The Government of the United States assumes no obligation whatever in respect to the currency thus issued by the national banks under the original national bank act.

They are secured by bonds deposited with the Comptroller of the Currency, but if those bonds shall be depressed in value so that they will not realize the face of the currency, that is the loss of the man who takes the national-bank bill. The Government of the United States assumes no liability in the matter at all. But if the Government of the United States should pass a law by which it should assume the right to appoint six directors of a national bank out of nine, and thus control the bank, it might very reasonably be said that the Government of the United States is under a moral obligation in connection with it.

So, Mr. President, in this matter, when the occasion for the law of 1918 has entirely passed and the Government of the United States still insists upon controlling these banks, whether their control is satisfactory to the members of the association or not, it may very justly be said that the Government of the United States becomes morally obligated for the payment of the bonds issued by that bank.

It is said also in this connection that the present management has been excellent; that it is entirely satisfactory to the great majority of the associations who are members of it. That, happily, is true. They have been very admirably conducted. They have been conducted by directors chosen from the various districts within which the banks do business. But what reason is there for supposing that if the members of the associations were permitted to select the directors, instead of their being appointed by the Farm Loan Board, they would not elect the very directors who have been appointed and who have so successfully conducted and managed the business of the bank?

It is a common thing for stockholders in a corporation which has been successfully managed to reelect the directors year after year. Ordinarily, the stockholder is interested only in getting his dividends. If he gets his dividends he is satisfied with the management, and he reelects the directors. Take the Omaha district. I think it not at all unlikely that if the stockholders in the Omaha Land Bank were permitted to vote for directors in that bank in all probability they would reelect most of the men who have served so admirably under appointment by the Federal Farm Loan Board.

The fact that the thing has worked successfully under the appointments made by the Farm Loan Board does not by any means demonstrate that it would not have worked successfully under the original law.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McLEAN. I have just been informed that the committee of the House, which has had this bill under consideration for three weeks or more, and considered this proposition very carefully, has received communications from 1,400 of the farm-loan associations objecting to the proposed change.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What does that signify?

Mr. McLEAN. It signifies that they are intelligent men, exceedingly well satisfied with the situation as it is, and very apprehensive that the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida is objectionable and unwise.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Does the Senator know how many farm-loan associations there are?

Mr. McLEAN. There are about 4,100.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then may I interrupt the Senator from Montana, to say that I will venture that not a single one of the people who wrote had the measure before them to pass upon at all?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; they did not know anything about it.

Mr. FLETCHER. What they probably did was to write in favor of another plan, and not this one.

Mr. McLEAN. That is not my information.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have never sent out this plan to anybody.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What they had in all probability was the idea that the present arrangement has been successful, and they are entirely satisfied with it.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the Senator, because he probably knows and I think it would throw some light on the question, whether the bill which the Senator from Montana introduced in the Senate, and which is embodied in the amendment that is now pending, has been introduced in the House?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has given the history of it. I have no knowledge that it ever was introduced in the House. I introduced it in the Senate nearly two years ago. I sought to get a hearing on it. It was referred to a subcommittee and something like a year ago I appeared before the subcommittee, but so far as my information goes no report has ever been made.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator misapprehends the object of my inquiry, which was to ascertain whether the replies of which the Senator from Connecticut spoke refer to this particular measure? If it has not been introduced in the House it could not have been this measure about which they were writing.

Mr. McLEAN. The proposition has been agitated for two years or more and members of the association thoroughly understand it, and there are some of them who are in favor of it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I question the right of the Senator from Connecticut to speak for the associations.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator may do that, but——

Mr. NORRIS. I am rather inclined to believe that the inquiries which came to the House committee had reference to a bill that was pending there which sought to make a change of a different kind from this. The same thing was referred to here in the letter which was read in part by the Senator from Florida emanating from Farnam, Nebr. The writer asked the Senator from Florida to prevent the change, if possible, but he had reference to an entirely different proposition from the one which is pending here. That was a proposition that I know was pending in the House.

Mr. FLETCHER. He had reference to what is known as the Strong bill in the House, which proposes that the farm-land banks name three directors, the national association name three, and they agree upon a seventh, and if they are not able to agree, the farm-land commissioner shall name the seventh.

Mr. NORRIS. That is a matter that has been agitated, and I wondered whether it was not the one to which these replies referred?

Mr. McLEAN. The thing that has been agitated is the question of control of the system.

Mr. NORRIS. That gives control of the system.

Mr. McLEAN. The question has been agitated. The Senator from Montana may question my right to express the views of the association. I was merely repeating the view of a Member of the House committee who communicated it to me, which was that they did understand the situation and that they are opposed to any change.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That needs a little explanation.

Mr. McLEAN. That may be, I think it would be proper that the association should choose a minority of the directors.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Did the Senator vote for the bill as it originally stood?

Mr. McLEAN. Oh, yes; I voted for the bill and heartily advocated it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator then must have changed his mind about it.

Mr. McLEAN. I do change my mind frequently. As I said the other day, some men learn from their own experiences and nothing else, and some learn from the experience of others.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What experience has the Senator had that led him to believe it was unwise to carry out the original plan?

Mr. McLEAN. The operation of the system has been so successful and satisfactory to everyone that I believe as long as the Government extends the nontaxable privilege to the bonds, and as long as there is a general understanding that there is an obligation on the part of the Government to save them from depreciation or loss, it is the duty of the Government and in the interest of the farmer to have the system conducted under the present management, or at least permit the Government to be represented by a majority of the directors.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not want to enter into a discussion with the Senator on that subject. I merely want to conclude by saying that if we are to adopt the policy advocated by those who are opposed to the amendment, what we ought to do is to modify and amend the original law to conform to it and to provide that hereafter the directors of the Federal land bank shall consist of nine members, six of whom are to be appointed by the Farm Loan Board, and not resort to the subterfuge—and that is all it is—of continuing in force the law of 1918 to the effect that so long as the Government of the United States shall hold any of these bonds the temporary organization shall be continued.

Mr. McLEAN. If we amend the law, let us not go to extremes that are indefensible.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I agree with the Senator about that.

Mr. McLEAN. That is what the amendment would do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is simply a question as to whether this is an extreme or not when we make it even better, so far as the view of the Senator is concerned, than the original law itself.

Mr. McLEAN. The joint-stock land-bank bonds, I understand, are selling below par. They have the same tax exemption. These banks are under private management.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is, I understand the Senator to say now, that the farm-loan banks, controlled by directors appointed by the Farm Loan Board here in Washington, are conducted more successfully than the joint-stock banks, the directors of which are elected by the stockholders of the banks.

Mr. McLEAN. I know that the bonds are selling for less, and we might have the same result with regard to these instruments if we changed the management, and I think the investors in the country would agree with me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Conditions under which the bonds of the joint-stock banks were issued are quite different from conditions under which the bonds of the land banks are issued, and it might easily be that the latter would command a better price in the market without any reference whatever to the relative efficiency of the management.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I interrupt the Senator to suggest that the joint-stock land banks are conducted for profit by individuals, where the Federal land banks are founded upon the cooperative principle, which is absolutely based upon the national farm loan associations exercising their proper functions, and that is the reason why the Federal land banks can offer their securities and get a better price for them than the others.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In line with that and in conclusion I want to say that no purchaser of bonds that have been issued since 1918 can imagine for a moment that the law of 1918 is going to be the permanent policy of the Government of the United States with reference to these matters. It is on its face a temporary expedient. The Government of the United States during the war bought these bonds. Everybody knows now that the bonds are selling for par, and the Government may dispose of them at any time without the loss of a dollar; and yet, notwithstanding that fact and notwithstanding the fact that the purchasers of the bonds recognize that at any time the control of those banks may go into the hands of the associations, the bonds are commanding a premium upon the market at the present time.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, it must be apparent to every purchaser of bonds that if the law stands unchanged, that long before the bonds are due and before they are paid the control of the association will be in the hands of the people who own them.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Undoubtedly.

Mr. NORRIS. So that it can not be that they buy the bonds because of the fact that the Government has temporary control of them.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think that reasoning can not possibly be maintained in the light of the law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana permit an inquiry?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator in favor of issuing tax-exempt securities by the Federal Government or by such agencies as the Federal land banks?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I voted for the law and I defended upon the floor of the Senate the provision exempting from taxation the bonds issued by the banks. I have not changed my mind about the wisdom of that policy.

Mr. KING. Obviously the bonds and debentures issued by land banks find their ready market largely because of the tax-exempt provision. Now, if the views of the Senator prevail and the authority of the Federal Government is diminished over the banks, as it would be diminished if all the directors were selected by the stockholders, does not the Senator think that a demand would be made or that the demand would be strengthened that the law be amended so that no tax-exempt securities may be issued by Federal land banks?

It seems to me that one of the reasons for the tax-exempt securities prompts the Government to have control over the banks or at least people will associate the two together, and if we deny to the Federal Government the almost complete control which it has exercised in the past, then there will be an increase in the tide which is moving forward now in favor of removing the tax-exempt provision from the law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would not think that apprehension would have very much foundation, in view of the fact that the tax-exempt feature was there in the beginning. It was a part of the original system under which it was clearly contemplated that very speedily the control should pass into the hands of the association stockholders. The law with that feature in it was so popular at the time and has grown so much in public favor since that time that I can not believe that to recur to the original principle would in any wise strengthen or intensify whatever sentiment there is in the country in favor of the tax-exemption feature of the bonds.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Frelinghuysen	Kendrick	Nicholson
Brookhart	George	Keyes	Norbeck
Bursum	Gerry	King	Norris
Calder	Glass	Ladd	Oddie
Cameron	Hale	La Follette	Owen
Capper	Harreld	Lenroot	Pepper
Couzens	Harris	Lodge	Phipps
Culberson	Harrison	McKellar	Pittman
Curtis	Heflin	McKinley	Poindexter
Dial	Hitchcock	McLean	Ransdell
Elkins	Johnson	McNary	Reed, Pa.
Fernald	Jones, N. Mex.	Moses	Robinson
Fletcher	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Sheppard
France	Kellogg	New	Shields

Simmons	Sterling	Wadsworth	Weller
Smoot	Sutherland	Walsh, Mass.	Willis
Spencer	Swanson	Walsh, Mont.
Stanfield	Townsend	Warren
Stanley	Trammell	Watson

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is absent on account of attendance on a committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in order to get the figures accurate, if possible, some statements having been made with regard to the present holdings of stock in the Federal land banks, I wish to read the following extract from hearings before the Committee on Banking and Currency on December 21, 1922:

The borrowers, through farm loan associations, now own and hold $30,866,995 of the capital stock of the Federal land banks. The Government's subscription has been reduced to $4,264,880. The balance of the Government stock will soon be retired and the borrowers will own all of the stock.

The respective stockholdings of the Government and the national farm loan associations in several of the banks are as follows:

Federal land bank.	Stock held by Government.	Stock held by national farm loan associations.
St. Paul	$150,965	$3,596,355
Omaha	44,740	3,638,735
Houston	177,885	3,332,090
Spokane	127,080	3,622,910

That, of course, is being reduced all the while.

Notwithstanding the fact that the borrowers own 87.5 per cent of the stock, are liable for all the losses, and the whole system was designed to make agriculture independent of all outside influence, the borrowers have so far had no voice in the management of the banks.

I merely wish to have those figures appear.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], who, I believe, is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "yea."

Mr. MCKINLEY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], whom I do not see in the Chamber. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). Transferring my general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the negative). I understand that my general pair, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], is not present. I transfer my pair with him to the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. STANLEY. I inquire if the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that Senator has not voted.

Mr. STANLEY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky, and for that reason withhold my vote.

Mr. GLASS. Making the same announcement as on the previous roll call with reference to the transfer of my pair, I vote "yea."

Mr. KING (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I am advised that on this question he would vote, if present, as I have voted, and I will therefore permit my vote to stand.

Mr. KENDRICK (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a general pair with the Senator from Illinois, which I transfer to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and let my vote stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—24.

Borah	Glass	La Follette	Shields
Brookhart	Harris	McKellar	Simmons
Culberson	Harrison	Norris	Swanson
Dial	Heflin	Pittman	Trammell
Fletcher	Jones, N. Mex.	Robinson	Walsh, Mass.
George	Ladd	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.

NAYS—46.

Bursum	Harreld	McNary	Smoot
Calder	Hitchcock	Moses	Spencer
Cameron	Johnson	Nelson	Sterling
Capper	Jones, Wash.	New	Sutherland
Couzens	Kellogg	Nicholson	Townsend
Curtis	Kendrick	Norbeck	Wadsworth
Elkins	Keyes	Oddie	Warren
Fernald	King	Pepper	Watson
France	Lenroot	Phipps	Weller
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Poindexter	Willis
Gerry	McKinley	Ransdell
Hale	McLean	Reed, Pa.

NOT VOTING—26.

Ashurst	Cummins	Myers	Smith
Ball	Dillingham	Overman	Stanfield
Bayard	Edge	Owen	Stanley
Broussard	Gooding	Pomerene	Williams
Caraway	McCormick	Reed, Mo.
Colt	McCumber	Shortridge

So Mr. FLETCHER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill which I forecast in some remarks made by me on the bill a few days ago.

On page 6, line 11, after the words "agricultural products," I propose the following amendment:

Or, under regulations prescribed by the Farm Loan Board, by chattel mortgage or lien upon personal property, or hypothecation of collaterals adequate in amount and value.

I hope the chairman of the committee may see his way clear to accept that amendment.

Mr. MCLEAN. Will not the Senator send it to the desk and have it read again?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 6, line 11, after the words "agricultural products," it is proposed to insert the following:

Or, under regulations prescribed by the Farm Loan Board, by chattel mortgage or lien upon personal property, or hypothecation of collaterals adequate in amount and value.

Mr. KING. How will it read?

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. So that, if amended, it will read:

(c) Are secured at the time of discount, purchase, or acceptance by warehouse receipts or other like documents conveying or securing title to nonperishable and readily marketable agricultural products, or, under regulations prescribed by the Farm Loan Board, by chattel mortgage or lien upon personal property, or hypothecation of collaterals adequate in amount and value, or by chattel mortgages or other like instruments conferring a first and paramount lien upon live stock which are being fattened for market.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, a few days ago, in discussing this bill, I showed that under the terms of the bill—and that was conceded, I believe, in the discussion—these rural-credit banks or corporations would not be permitted to make advances for agricultural purposes unless secured by a warehouse receipt or some document conveying title to nonperishable and readily marketable agricultural products; that the bill, having limited and circumscribed to this extent the loans to be made to agriculture, then proceeded to provide that these loans might be made in the interest of the stock raiser upon chattel mortgage given upon live stock.

I contended then, and I contend now, that these banks would be of very little practical benefit to agriculture if they can lend for agricultural purposes only upon warehouse receipts or mortgages upon agricultural products already produced, nonperishable and readily convertible into money, and I suggested that the lending power of these institutions for agricultural purposes ought to be broadened.. I have proposed and do propose in this amendment to broaden it by permitting these rural-credit banks to lend not only upon nonperishable agricultural products but, under the regulation and supervision of the Farm Loan Board, to lend for agricultural purposes upon personal property or collateral of adequate amount and value.

I do not see why that can not be done and why it should not be done. It is the only way under this bill in which a farmer will be able to get any money at all to finance the making of his crop. As the provisions in the bill now are, he can only borrow upon the crop after it is made and after it is ready for market. The exigencies of the farmer for money are not so great after he has made his crop, harvested it, and gotten it ready for market.

If he can not do anything better, he can sell it and get the money, and, being a readily salable, marketable product, he can hypothecate it under the present system; but if he wants money for the purpose of making that crop, if he wants money while he is expending money every day in large sums and while no money is coming in, he is not permitted to obtain it from these banks, although he may offer security ever so good.

I do not see why the restriction upon loans to agriculture should be confined solely to loans made for the purpose of marketing or distributing the crop, and why, if he is able to furnish adequate and sufficient security, the farmer should not be permitted to get some advances from this institution to help him finance the making of that crop.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not want to discuss this amendment. I discussed it very elaborately a few days ago, and I do not wish to repeat what I said then.

Mr. McLEAN. I should like to have the Senator's idea as to what security could be offered and would be accepted under his amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Why, any good personal property security, or any good collaterals adequate in amount and adequate in value. That would be a matter for the decision of the board.

Mr. McLEAN. Furniture, watches, overcoats, anything a pawnbroker would take?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator understands perfectly well what is embraced in the words "personal property." He understands perfectly well what is included in the word "collateral." I want to say to the Senator that before the adoption of the Federal reserve system practically all of the money which the farmer in the section of the country in which I live obtained by loan for the purpose of aiding him in making his crop was upon personal property security. It was generally a mortgage upon the farmer's stock—his horses, his mules, his farm implements, his tractors, his trucks, his wagons, his carts, and upon the crop which he was cultivating.

Mr. McLEAN. That is all covered now under the amendment, section 13a, of the Federal reserve act.

Mr. SIMMONS. Those are loans made by the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. McLEAN. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. This is a loan to be made by the banks we are setting up now under this bill for the purpose of helping the farmer, ostensibly. Can not the Senator understand the difference?

Mr. McLEAN. Helping agriculture.

Mr. SIMMONS. Helping agriculture, ostensibly. Therefore, I say, let us not make a pretense of it. If we are going to set up these banks for the professed purpose of financing agriculture, let us not make the provision so narrow and so restricted that there will be no chance, there will be no power, to lend for the purpose of helping the farmers make their crops. It is in making the crop that the farmers need help, rather than in selling the crop. When a farmer or a manufacturer has carried his process of production to the point where the finished product is ready to be marketed, then he does not need anything like as much money as he does when he is making the product, spending money upon it and getting no money in return.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not know what regulations would be prescribed by the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. SIMMONS. I had in mind, when I used that language, that the Farm Loan Board would indicate the amount of personal property or the amount of collaterals upon which the banks might lend, just as in the War Finance Corporation act we provided that not more than a certain per cent of the face value or the market value of the property sought to be pledged should be lent. I thought some regulation with reference to that would be advisable, and that the Farm Loan Board would prescribe what per cent might be lent upon the market value of certain personal property, and what per cent might be lent upon the market value of certain collaterals which might be offered.

Mr. McLEAN. If the Federal Farm Loan Board interpreted the amendment as it reads, it would be their duty to permit any kind of personal property to be accepted, to permit the acceptance of a chattel mortgage on anything.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, no; the Senator is wrong.

Mr. McLEAN. My point is this, that if the Farm Loan Board followed the direction of the amendment it would be their duty to permit loans secured by any kind of personal property, no matter what it is.

Mr. SIMMONS. To be loaned by what—by these corporations?

Mr. McLEAN. By these corporations.

Mr. SIMMONS. By the corporations to be created under this bill?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is entirely wrong about it.

Mr. McLEAN. Let me read it:

Or, under regulations prescribed by the Farm Loan Board, by chattel mortgages or lien upon personal property or hypothecation of collaterals adequate in amount and value.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, "under regulations prescribed by the Farm Loan Board." I think we can trust that board to prescribe regulations that will guard against reckless loans.

Mr. McLEAN. I am very well satisfied that you could not sell 10 cents' worth of your debentures under such a provision as that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am sure the Senator's statement is not well founded. The Senator's words seem to me to be a deliberate declaration on his part that while a mortgage or a warehouse receipt upon certain nonperishable products is perfectly good security when offered by the farmer, if a farmer shall offer a chattel mortgage upon personal property of marketable value, or upon collaterals which are of adequate value, that security would not be sufficient to enable him to obtain money. That statement is manifestly absurd, I say, with all due respect to the able Senator from Connecticut.

I say to the Senator that before restrictions were imposed upon loans at the time of maturity, excluding certain classes of security from eligibility, securities offered by farmers upon a maturity of nine months—and they can not safely borrow money upon a shorter maturity than that—the farmers of the South were able to borrow from the national banks all the funds they needed for the purpose of cultivating their crops, upon mortgages executed upon their personal holdings, including a lien upon their crops. That kind of security constituted a large part of the security behind the loans of the national banks in certain purely agricultural sections, and I think the experience in that section of the country will show that as small losses were made in loans upon that class of security probably as upon any other.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, could a farmer in the South secure such a loan from a bank located two or three hundred miles away? Did it not depend upon the personal supervision of the banker, having the security right under the eyes of the officers of the bank?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not know of an instance where a bank has exercised any personal supervision over the making of the crops in my section of the country. Of course, these institutions would want to make inquiry through agents whom probably they would have, as to the value of the property, and would make it before they would make a loan. But can the Senator tell me why, if a farmer comes with good, marketable collateral to an institution set up for his benefit, his proposition should be turned down?

Mr. LENROOT. I am only saying that in contemplation of this bill, a general chattel mortgage upon growing stock, farm machinery, and so forth, is not marketable collateral.

Mr. SIMMONS. The provision of my amendment includes loans upon collateral of adequate amount and value.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator feels that the first provision as to mortgages upon personal property is not safe and sound, if that were eliminated, would he allow the farmer to borrow upon collateral of adequate amount and value? Would he not allow him to borrow upon indorsements of two solvent persons? The point I am making is that in your bill you do not allow him to borrow a cent in any way in the world in order to get money to make his crop.

You confine the lending of this institution, which is supposed to be a farmer's institution, altogether to mortgages upon his crop after it is produced. I want to extend the bill so that he can get some money while he is making the crop, when he actually needs the money most. You say you do not regard his personal property, consisting of horses, mules, wagons, carts, farming implements, tractors, and trucks, as anything. I can not see why, when a farmer has planted a hundred acres in tobacco or cotton, and it is in thriving condition, that crop should not be the best of security, as good as the unfabricated material of a manufacturing plant, which is made the basis of security. You lend the manufacturer upon the basis, not that he pledges any particular property, but that he is engaged in a business ordinarily profitable; he has good ability; he is the head of a going concern. You lend him money upon the faith of the proposition, and the banks are doing it every day, upon the faith of the earning capacity, the profits he will make when he converts the raw material, which may be, as I said, in the bowels of the earth when he borrows the money, into the product which he is fabricating.

Why should not the farmer's crop be worth something as a basis of security? I say that but for the limitations as to maturity, the farmers in my section of the country would be able to borrow from the national banks and the State banks, members of the Federal reserve system, all the money they need, upon the basis of their personal holdings and their crops. Agriculture has not broken down in the United States. All value has not been taken out of wheat, and cotton, and tobacco, and the other staple products of the country. Crop failures from boll weevils may occur to some extent, but they have not resulted in preventing the cultivation of cotton, and will not prevent its cultivation, and I hope in the near future its very profitable cultivation.

Mr. LENROOT. I quite agree with the Senator, but I am sure the Senator realizes that unless the business of these corporations be confined to their capital stock alone, if the major part of the credit is to be provided through the sale of debentures, those debentures must have back of them some security that will be attractive to investors, and if you have provisions in this bill, or in any other bill, which are of such a character that the investor will be doubtful about that, he is not going to buy any of the debentures. That is the whole question, it seems to me.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the position of the Senator, as I understand the position of the Senator from Connecticut. But what I am asking is this, if you think it would be unsafe for these institutions to advance money upon this security, consisting of a mortgage on the farmer's personal property and his crop, if you think that is unsound, is there no other security which a farmer may give which you will agree the institutions may accept as security for a loan to be made to him to help him make his crop? You provide no way in your bill by which he can obtain a cent. You say the bill is designed to aid farmers, but when you begin to analyze the bill you find that it is impossible under the terms of the bill. The farmer might even bring Government bonds and put them down as collateral, but he could not borrow anything on them from his own bank to help him cultivate his crop.

I want the farmer to have some access to his bank or to his own corporation to get money to help him make his crop, because if he can not make his crop there will not be any crop to pledge or mortgage, as you have provided may be done in the bill.

I know I am not going to get any amendment through unless Senators on the other side consent to it. The agricultural bloc, so-called, seems to have gone to pieces, so far as agricultural legislation is concerned, and they can not be relied upon any longer. Then will Senators not consent? I am appealing to them now in the interest of the farmer; I am trying to get Senators to let him have access to his own bank to get money to make his crop, and I ask Senators, as they have excluded the farmer in the bill altogether, if they will not accept the amendment I have offered and will they not designate some sort of security they think would be safe which the farmer may offer to get money to make his crop?

Mr. McLEAN. But these institutions are not intended as banks. The Senator insists upon calling them banks.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is intended to aid agriculture. I say when we limit the loans that we make for agricultural purposes to loans to market and distribute the crops, we are not accomplishing in the bill the purpose which the Senator is professing to have.

Mr. McLEAN. If he has a Government bond, if he has anything upon which he can borrow, there are 30,000 banks in the country, and he could go to a bank.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want him to get the benefit of the bank which it is proposed to set up for his benefit. I am trying to put it to the test whether we are setting it up for his benefit, whether we are saying to him that "while we pretend this is for your benefit, if you want to borrow money you will have to go somewhere else to borrow it." I think if this is for his benefit, he ought to be permitted in some way or other to get some money out of it to enable him to finance his crop. It is beside the question to say, "If you can not get it here, you can get it somewhere else." He knows that. Everybody knows that without being told.

Mr. LENROOT. I suggest to the Senator that the bill will be of no value either in his section of the country or mine.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am trying to make it of some value.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think it would be even then, because I do not believe in the Senator's section or in my section any of the corporations provided for in the bill would be organized.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think so, either, but the majority party is passing the bill, and I am only trying to provide for contingencies if the organizations are set up.

Mr. LENROOT. I think it would be of value to the live-stock States.

Mr. SIMMONS. I argued that, so far as the agricultural section of the country, the paucity of benefits of the corporations which the bill proposes are so meager that they will never be brought into operation in the agricultural sections of the country.

Mr. McLEAN. But if they are——

Mr. SIMMONS. If they are brought into operation—I am trying to arrange it so that if perchance one of them may be established anywhere in an agricultural district, which I think is very doubtful, when it is established it will be able in some way or other to help the farmer make his crop.

Mr. McLEAN. It never will be established unless it is organized on a sound basis. The Senator's proposition to permit the corporation to accept chattel mortgages on any kind of personal property satisfies me that none of them would ever be organized, because they could not sell their debentures.

Mr. SIMMONS. But it is said in the bill that it would be perfectly safe to make advances to the farmer upon the basis of the crop after he has made his crop. Now, suppose before he makes his crop he comes in and says, "I need money right now. My crop is not ready yet and I can not get money under that provision of the law. But while I can not give that security upon which you say you will lend money, I can give just as good security of another character." That would be his attitude, I think. That is my opinion about it, that he could give just as good security of another character.

What I am trying to get the Senator to do is to designate what kind of security he is willing to have taken for loans made to the farmer to finance the growing of his crop. Is the Senator willing that he may borrow the money upon the faith of solvent collateral, of approved amounts and values, or upon the indorsement of two or more solvent persons? I am willing to be content if the Senator will suggest any sort of security that would be acceptable in that way.

Mr. McLEAN. But it is entirely inconsistent with the idea of the corporations which are organized for the purpose of financing the distribution and sale of crops.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is there anything in the declared purpose of the bill that says this is to be an institution set up solely for the purpose of financing the distribution of farmers' crops?

Mr. McLEAN. That is the purpose, of course, of the corporations.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator think it more important to finance the distribution of the crop than it is to finance the making of the crop?

Mr. McLEAN. That is another proposition entirely.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course it is. The Senator states an obvious fact which everybody knows.

Mr. McLEAN. That must come under some other proposal than this measure. We can not make banks of these institutions. We can not make pawnbrokers of these institutions. They would not be organized if we undertook to do that.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is not pawnbroking when the farmer comes and says, "Here is a mortgage upon my crop," and you say, "All right"; but if he comes and says, "I want $100 and here is collateral that will sell on the market to-day for $500," you say, "That is a pawnbroking proposition and we will not consider it."

Mr. McLEAN. It might not be, but he does not need to come to this institution to get accommodations under such circumstances. As I have said a great many times, he could go to any bank and on his nine months' paper he could put up his collateral.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, if the farmer can get all the help he needs from other banks, there was not any particular reason for attempting to set up this system. The excuse and the only excuse on the part of the Senator for the establishment of these banks is that he is establishing them for the purpose of aiding agriculture. That is one of the chief excuses—agriculture.

Mr. McLEAN. Especially to encourage the formation of cooperative marketing associations, because I believe that therein lies the solution of the problem—an invitation to the producers of the country to cooperate and control the market for their products.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is a marketing proposition, a distributing proposition, solely and exclusively.

Mr. McLEAN. If the farmers are willing and have ambition enough themselves, as is true in many sections of the country, the cooperative associations would be formed throughout the country. They are now having difficulty in getting accommodations from the banks, and so we establish these organizations and invite and encourage the farmers of the country to get together and cooperate to control the markets for their products. That is the primary purpose of the bill so far as it relates to these organizations. Its benefits reach the individual farmer if his notes are properly secured.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think I have thrashed that out with the Senator about as thoroughly as there is any necessity for doing. I see what the majority have resolved to do. I now offer the amendment. I shall not call for a yea-and-nay vote on my amendment, but I want a quorum here to vote on it. The excuses given by the proponents of the pending bill for their opposition to my amendment are not such as to command my respect, and they conclusively show the utter futility of our entertaining any hope to see here now a genuine effort and desire on the part of the majority to legislate in the interest of the farmer.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, years ago it was thought proper to advise not only business men but farmers and everyone else to keep out of debt. There has not been a piece of legislation enacted here in the last five or six years but what has been an invitation to every business man and every farmer to go into debt. I remember when it was a very unusual thing for a mortgage to be put upon a farm in my State. To-day there are thousands and thousands of them. It was not because in the earlier days there was more money. It was because of the fact that the people were taught to take care of their money and save it, and by all manner of means to avoid a mortgage upon their homes. Now we read in the public press and hear in the legislative halls of the States and of the Nation as well that what is going to settle all these questions and make everybody happy and rich is to advance money to them and get them into debt.

I think we ought to have legislation, under the conditions existing to-day and the railroad freight rates that are charged, that would enable the farmer temporarily to hold his product so as to have at least a chance of saying when he shall sell it and not be forced to put it upon the market as soon as it is harvested.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I heartily agree with the implication contained in the Senator's last statement—that the railroad freight rates now imposed upon the transportation of commodities, particularly agricultural products, are so high that it is in many instances difficult, if not impossible, for the producers of such products to reach a market that will yield them even the cost of production and transportation, not to say a reasonable profit.

Mr. SMOOT. All within a very short time, too.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; within a very short time. But does the Senator anticipate that that condition respecting freight rates will be relieved within the early or immediate future?

Mr. SMOOT. I took occasion the other night to look up the percentages of the moneys obtained from all sources which went to each particular source of expense. I was very much surprised to find that in 1914, as I remember, 40.3 per cent of all the expense of maintaining the railroads was for labor. Last year there was 50.9 per cent of all the expense of maintaining the railroads paid to labor. It is really remarkable, if anyone will take the trouble to look it up, to see the percentages of each of the items of the total expense of the railroads.

I will say to the Senator that since I made that examination I am rather convinced that whatever reduction there may be in freight rates will be small in comparison to what it should be in order to meet the present situation affecting agriculture.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is in part the answer I anticipated. So that, in so far as freight rates affect the prices of agricultural products, or rather the profits to be derived by the producers of them, we can not expect that condition to be mitigated in the early future. The questions which it involves are so complicated and numerous and beset with so many difficulties that it will, to say the least, require a long time to work them out.

It does seem to me, however, that the railroad managements of the country have been slow, in many instances to a point deserving censure, in readjusting their rates to meet the economic necessities of the United States. In the Esch-Cummins law they were given liberal treatment and afforded every possible opportunity to so conduct their business as to treat the public with consideration and at the same time earn a fair profit upon the investments in railroad properties. The manner in which they have handled the subject of freight cars, the total failure to cooperate in the use of freight cars so as to make them quickly available where the business of the country demands it, is an illustration of the inefficiency evidenced by lack of cooperation, widespread and far-reaching, of some of the railroad managements of the country. A day of reckoning is coming if they do not improve service and reduce rates.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I did not rise to discuss the question of railroad rates. I simply felt as though I wished to say a few words as to the tendency of the age, not only as evidenced by our Government but by all the governments of the world, to go into debt. I say there is not a greater bondage into which a person or a government can enter than the bondage of debt. I should like to see not only our Government but every Government in the world, instead of issuing more obligations, begin immediately to redeem their obligations and endeavor to return to normal conditions.

Mr. President, I should like to see every family and, if it were possible, every farmer and every business man, have sufficient capital to operate without borrowing. I should like to see every farmer, if it were possible, when he garners his crop, receive enough from its sale to carry him through for the succeeding 12 months, instead of, as happens in so many cases, having the proceeds spent before ever the crop is garnered. The present system is one continual round of borrowing, and the farmer himself is in debt all the time.

I wish to say that much because I think the policy should be to encourage the farmer and all the people in general to keep out of debt rather than to go deeper into debt.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should like to say merely a few words in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I can not believe that the distinguished Senator really means precisely what he has said; that he wants the farmers of the country to stop utilizing credit; that he hopes the time will soon come when the farmers at the beginning of the year will actually have on hand money enough to carry them through the succeeding year. That has been the condition in the past. It was the condition, however, because of the legislation of this Government of ours.

What would be the effect if the hopes of the Senator from Utah were realized? It would mean that the farmers of the country would have their money in the banks of the country, to be used solely by the speculative interests of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all. The Senator from New Mexico is mistaken.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask the Senator from Utah, then, where would he expect to find use for the surplus funds of the farmer?

Mr. SMOOT. The farmer would be enabled to dispose of his products as he desired, and the proceeds could be used for his own purposes. It would not necessarily follow that a dollar of his earnings would go into the banks, other than, perhaps, a small amount, for he could afford to hold his products until some particular time when he actually needed the money.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes; Mr. President, that is what the Senator from Utah has stated; but, carried to its logical conclusion, what does it imply? In the case of a man who is running a ranch, the expenses of which per annum amount to $50,000—and there are many such in this country—the idea of the Senator implies that at the beginning of the year the ranchmen must have on hand $50,000 in cash.

Mr. SMOOT. No; that is not my idea, I will say to the Senator. I am not talking about a farmer who has an expense account of $50,000 a year; and I do not think that is the man for whom we are legislating. In this instance we are legislating for the man who has a small farm; we are not legislating for one who has a million acres or hundreds of thousands or even tens of thousands of cattle. I do not understand that we are legislating for such a man at all.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Nor do I, Mr. President. I simply used the illustration which I did for the purpose of showing that the whole matter is relative, as the Senator from Utah must very well know. The Senator's suggestion simply means that there should be taken away from the farmers of this country a very valuable asset—that of credit. Credit is what the world has a right to use if it shall go forward as rapidly as it should go forward. The vice of the financial situation in the past has been that we have had legislation which enabled the so-called commercial interests of the country to avail themselves of credit; but credit has been denied to the farmers of the country.

I hope, Mr. President, that we shall not go back to any such period of normalcy as that, when the liquid assets of the country, together with the credits of the country, are to be made available only to one class of people. That was the trouble with the situation when we had nothing but the national banking law for the service of the whole country, under which loans upon real estate were prohibited and there was no provision made whereby the holders of farms could utilize credit at all under any sort of system fostered by the Federal Government. It is to remedy that evil that we have been building up credit systems for the farmer, but the Senator from Utah has stated that we ought not to utilize them.

The history of the farm-land banks shows that there has been a demand for loans already carried into execution and satisfied to the extent of $700,000,000. Would the Senator from Utah say that was wrong; that the farmers who borrowed that money did not know what they were doing when they borrowed it? Is he willing to say that he will put his judgment up against theirs and state that they have done wrong in wanting to borrow any money with which to carry on their business?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has made no such statement. From what the Senator from Utah said, I do not think the Senator from New Mexico had any right whatever to gather that impression. I simply stated that it would be a splendid thing if the farmer were in such a position that he would not have to borrow money to carry him on immediately after he had gathered or garnered a crop for the year; and I think the Senator from New Mexico also will admit that to be true.

I do not think the Senator would like to have the farmer in a position where he is always living 12 months ahead of time and where everything he has on earth may be in jeopardy for 12 months out of the year. I do not think that is the proper way to live. I do not say that the farmer should not borrow money when he needs it; nobody has made any such statement as that. My statement was that it would be far better for the farmer if he could place himself in a position where he did not have to pay interest on indebtedness; and I still maintain that statement to be sound.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from Utah has merely reiterated what he said a few moments ago when he was addressing the Senate. His statement clearly shows that he thinks it is bad for the farmer to utilize any credit, but I do not think so. I believe that the farmer has just as much right to use his credit as has any other man in business.

Mr. SMOOT. He has.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And I think that if the farmer handles his credit judiciously he can make it profitable just as well as can any other man in business. The Senator from Utah well knows that the farmers and stockmen of the West have been borrowers for a generation or more; in fact, ever since the West was attempted to be settled we have had to depend upon money from the East; and we have faced the condition that upon the short-term loans in the West which were floated in the East when the time came that the farmers and stockmen really needed the money the eastern lenders withdrew it from that section of the country. We do not want that to happen again.

I recall very well that in September, 1920, when I appeared with a committee of western stockmen before the Federal Reserve Board to discuss the question of the withdrawal of funds from the West I was told by the representatives of eastern bankers that all they wanted was that when their paper became due it should be paid; they were not willing to recognize that in ordinary times at least $100,000,000 of credit were being furnished by the West, that source of supply of foodstuffs, which enabled the eastern people to carry on their business.

For the Senator from Utah to deprecate the idea that any farmer is going to use his credit is simply to inveigh against progress, to advocate a policy which can only work to the detriment of the farmer and relegate him to a class which it might be said were incapable of conducting their own affairs. That is the criticism which I would extend to conditions which have prevailed in the past—that the financial system of the country has been built up only for special interests, for a special or particular class of the people of the Nation. We are now approaching the time when the farmers of the country who need credit and who have the basis of credit shall be furnished with some means whereby they may avail themselves of it to carry on their business profitably, just the same as other classes of people carry on their business. That we need such a system I have not the slightest doubt.

I do not know that this bill is going to be of very much benefit to the farmers of the West. There have been already organized in the West live-stock associations, capitalized by private money and conducted by private individuals, which indorse and transmit western paper to the East. The one benefit which will, in my judgment, come from this proposed legislation is, if the institutions contemplated by the bill shall be organized at all it will enable them to gather together the short-term and the intermediate-term paper, properly secured, and make that the basis of debentures or bonds for a definite and rather an extended period of time, so that when the day of stress comes the people of the East who will buy the bonds will not be able to cash them in at their will as the individual paper may become due. I think I can see that great advantage in this measure.

My thought, however, is that there may be not a sufficient number of these institutions organized to do very much good. There are not many private institutions now organized for that purpose, although there are a few. I am supporting this measure wholly upon hope that it will be availed of by private capital. I can not say that that hope is very strong; but at least we shall provide the opportunity and furnish a means whereby there may be some relief afforded from the situation which has prevailed in the past. We want, in some manner, to provide definite credit, not credit which may be taken away from one section of the country by another section when the latter section sees fit to use its funds in some other way. I maintain that to say that the farmers of the country ought not to use their credit is hardly consistent with modern progress, and the man who so contends is certainly not in harmony with the spirit of this generation.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to indorse most of what the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] has just said, and also to support the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

I can not see any good reason why the farmer or anybody else can not get money on cattle and on any other personal property that he has that is of value about his premises.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that this bill expressly allows him to get money on a mortgage on cattle.

Mr. HEFLIN. I understand that.

Mr. SIMMONS. But it will not allow a farmer not engaged in stock raising to get money on anything except on a crop that is made and in the warehouse.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the Senator's amendment provide that he can borrow on a growing crop?

Mr. SIMMONS. It does not say on the growing crop; it says "personal property."

Mr. HEFLIN. On any personal property?

Mr. SIMMONS. Personal property or approved collaterals adequate in amount and value.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, why should not a man be able to borrow money on anything he has that is of value? Are we running the banking institutions in this country for one class of people alone? If so, let all these other people quit their occupations and try to go into the occupations of the favored class, go and do what these others are doing whose produce and whose business is recognized as eligible collateral at the banks. We want people to engage in every kind of helpful and needful business in this country.

There are so many different kinds of enterprises and industries, and we want to encourage them to engage in all of them; but here is one man who goes out, and he is a man of small means, and he wants to support his wife and children and produce a worthy livelihood for himself and them, and because he is producing a certain kind of product he is shut out from the bank. That has been the cry heretofore—that the commercial banking system was not suited to this sort of thing. Now we are trying to create a system that is suited to this sort of thing, and these Senators who do not want to get away from the old commercial idea are trying to frame this bill by their preconceived notions of what a commercial banking system is.

If we will make it possible for the small farmer to borrow from these banks on his property of various kinds, that very fact will enable him to borrow from the banks already in existence, and his opportunity for getting the money needed to carry on his business will be greater. That is what happened when we arranged to furnish him with money through the War Finance Corporation.

After that many of the banks advanced money to aid him. Many of them would have done that before if such collateral had been made eligible by law. This amendment simply makes it possible for the small farmer to get money through this system if he can not get it anywhere else.

I want to say a word in reply to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who suggests that the farmer does not want to get into debt any more; he wants to get out of debt.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say that. I did not say that the farmer did not want to get into debt.

Mr. HEFLIN. That he ought not to get into debt, then.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I stated that it would be a very splendid thing if he were not compelled to go into debt. That is the position I take, and I am quite sure the Senator will agree with me.

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, I agree that I am sorry that he has to go into debt any more. I am sorry that he has been driven into debt so deeply as he has; but the deflation policy inaugurated by the leaders of the Republican Party, armed and equipped with the amendment to the Federal reserve act allowing the progressive interest rate to be applied, and which was applied to the agricultural section alone, is what got him into debt.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. BROOKHART. I understand that the Senator claims that the deflation policy of the Federal reserve bank was organized by the Republicans.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROOKHART. The policy that hit us out in Iowa happened in the fall of 1920.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is right, and the Republican Congress passed the amendment that I speak of in the spring of 1920.

Mr. BROOKHART. At that time Mr. Wilson was President of the United States, and every member of the Federal Reserve Board was a Democrat.

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, no; not all of them were Democrats then, and none of them were Democrats when they came from under the spell.

Mr. BROOKHART. I think myself there was only one real Democrat on the board. The others were Wall Street men.

Mr. HEFLIN. John Skelton Williams was ex officio member. He was and is a Democrat, then Comptroller of the Currency, and the best member of the board. He was an honest man, faithful to his trust, and rendered great service to his country during that time and since.

Mr. BROOKHART. But I think a Wall Street Democrat is just as bad as a Wall Street Republican.

Mr. HEFLIN. So do I.

Mr. BROOKHART. I can not see any difference in them.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have no disagreement with the Senator upon that question; but what I am pointing out is that the Republicans had the Congress in 1920, both Houses, and they passed through the House this progressive interest rate, and they passed it through the Senate, and that progressive interest rate was applied to the South and applied to the West, and all sorts of interest rates were charged—15, 20, 30 per cent, and even higher. As I have frequently said before, one little bank in my State paid 87½ per cent. These are the things that drove the farmer into debt. The farmer was not responsible for it. This deadly deflation was what did it, and the Senator from Utah and others now say that the farmer ought to get out of debt, instead of getting more deeply into debt. He has to borrow money to get out; and what I am trying to do is to so hedge him about with the rules of right and the laws of justice that he can not be driven to surrender his stuff to any speculator in Wall Street or elsewhere until the price justifies the sale of it. I want to enable him to hold his products off the market until the price will yield him a profit. He is entitled to that.

I want to enable him to borrow money on such property of value as he has to offer. Time was when he was able to get money on it, but when the paper become due he was frequently forced to sell, and he had to turn loose his products and let them go upon the market without regard to the price. I want to fix it so that he can hold his products and have some say in fixing the price. He has a right to that. That is what we are trying to do here.

I called attention here once before to this illustration: A farmer in my State got $200 for a bale of cotton. He had 10 bales of cotton. That was $2,000. He owed $2,000. He could pay that $2,000 with the 10 bales, and wipe that debt off the books; but when deflation struck him, cotton went down, down, down in a hurry to 10 cents a pound, and then he was forced to sell his cotton, and it paid only one-fourth of that debt, and left him owing $1,500, and at that price it would have taken four crops to pay that debt. That is the sort of outrageous performance that has been carried on against the farmers of the South, and the same thing applies to the farmers of the West. I called attention here before to the statement of Congressman SWING, of California, that in a bankers' convention in southern California he heard a Federal reserve agent in that convention tell the bankers: "Don't you loan any more money on agricultural products"; and several bankers got up and said: "Why, we do business with the farmers. We have to carry them, or they are ruined, and we are ruined"; and this agent replied: "If you do loan them any more money, we will not rediscount your paper."

That is what happened, and that word went quickly from the Federal Reserve Board to the banks in the agricultural South and West, and the farmer was shut off entirely. That is the treatment that was accorded to him; and then Senators come here and stand on this floor and others send in periodicals and say the farmer ought not to get more deeply in debt—that he should try to get out of debt. Farmers do not want more debt, but they want a way to get out of the debts piled on them by deflation. Pray tell me, How is the farmer going to get out of debt without getting money from somewhere and without being given time to work it out and square his debts?

I will tell you what happened out in the Northwest. The testimony showed it before our committee:

"How many of your farmers are mortgaged?"

"Practically all of them."

"What have they mortgaged?"

"Their homes and farms."

"Have they any live stock?"

"Yes."

"Are they mortgaged?"

"Yes, sir."

"What else have they mortgaged?"

"They have mortgaged their growing crops."

Now, what else has the farmer to mortgage? Talk about going into debt! We want to give him a fair deal with what he has. We want to say to every man and woman in America: "We do not care how humble your calling is, we do not care how obscure you are or how far removed you are from the bustle and stir of the city, if you are an enterprising, law-abiding American citizen, the arm of this Government reaches out to you. You have the benefit of all of its great instrumentalities to help you in your business, it makes no difference how small it is." That is the spirit of America responding to the needs of all her children.

Mr. President, I view with alarm the tendencies that I have witnessed since I have been in the Senate, the encroachments made upon the rights and liberties of the people. The underlying cause of the fall of every government that has gone down in the past can be traced directly to the control of the money supply of the country. Any astute student of history will tell you that that is true, if he is honest. The manipulation of the money supply is the underlying cause of the downfall of every government on the globe. Go back and read your history and see if that is not true. Here we have it in the United States.

I saw this Federal reserve system, under the reign of the Republican Party, taken away from the beneficent uses to which we had put it, and I saw Wall Street get hold of it and absolutely monopolize it and run it to suit their interests until the Wall Street Journal had an editorial in which it said, "The control of this system is not in Washington but in Wall Street, where it belongs." The money changers of Wall Street have boasted of the degeneration of this system, and of their control over it; and when we come and ask that provisions be put in this bill—a farmer's bill, a cattleman's bill—that will enable every man who is interested in the fruits of the soil to have aid, we find all sorts of objections and oppositions coming from Senators who guard with intrepid vigilance the interests of Wall Street's financiers.

Mr. President, Senators had better wake up and get on to what is going on here. I saw an amendment voted down here to-day which, if it were properly presented in the States of Senators who opposed it, would greatly embarrass every one of them before the farmers of their State. I saw the Senate vote down the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], which simply provided that the farmers, the stockholders in the bank itself, should have some say in selecting their directors, and it was solemnly voted down in this Republican Senate, and the farmer has no voice in it at all.

Talk about passing legislation for the benefit of the farmer! Somebody ought to tell him the truth about it. It is as much my duty to do it as it is anybody else's. I commend the Senator from Florida for the gallant and able fight that he has made.

That record will rise up to haunt somebody if the farmers of their State have the courage and the sense I think they have. They deny to a farmer who has been invited to bring his money up, his hard earnings, and put them into the system and create the system and set it up for business—they deny him the right to say who shall direct it and run it. That is what they have done. Then they talk about passing a farm credits bill in the interest of the farmers.

The Senator from North Carolina is seeking to provide for the little man. God knows he needs our aid—the little fellow who would go up to one of these big banks and say, "I have yearlings out here, and I have a tractor plow that cost me so much money and is a thing of value, and I have some other things here that are of value. I have to have some money. I want $250 or $300." That amount means much to him. I want to provide a place where he can go and get it. Why should not he have aid? Are we going to say to that man, "You are on too low a plane financially to be reached"? Is that the purpose of democracy? Is that representative government working in the true American spirit? No; it is not.

Every man and woman who is willing to wrok, who is striving to produce something and establish a going business, I do not care how small it is, ought to be able to get the money needed to carry on such work.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. HEFLIN. I gladly yield to my friend from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the farmer has no property that is sufficient security for the money that he needs to finance the making of his crop, how will it be possible for the industry of agriculture in this country to survive?

Mr. HEFLIN. It will not be possible, unless they will permit him to mortgage other things or to get money in some other way.

Congressman SWING, of California, told us how the word went out to strike the farmer down and refuse to aid him in the hour of his great distress. A banker invited him to come in and sit with him in the bankers' convention, and he was sitting among the bankers, and when this Federal reserve agent said that, he did not know anybody but bankers were hearing him. He delivered his message, and Congressman SWING had the courage to repeat it on the floor of the House, and I have repeated it here a number of times and sent it out in the RECORD to 40,000 people in the country.

After they sent word out that they must quit loaning on agricultural products, the farmer just stood helpless in the market place, and they literally robbed him of all he had. They not only robbed him but they said to him after they finished robbing him, "You owe us so many thousand dollars. You go to work and pay it in the next 5 or 10 years"; and he is working now under the bondage of deflation debt to pay off what they left hanging over him. We are trying to provide that he can obtain money on the little things the big bankers will not recognize. We want to say in this law that that stuff is eligible at a bank. We are meeting with opposition.

I simply wanted to say that much in support of the Senator from North Carolina and in reply to the speech of the Senator from Utah. If a man owes money and is tied up to the neck, he has to get money somewhere to get something to work with in order to pay; and they stand up and say, "Let him get out of debt. Don't let him get more deeply in debt." How is he going to get out of debt with nothing with which to pay off his debt? We are going to give him a new deal. We ought to give it to him. We may not be able to give it at this session, we may not be able to give it entirely in the next, but the day is not far distant when a majority of right-thinking and courageous American people are going to have their say registered in this Chamber and in the one at the other end of the Capitol. They will if those who are already here are faithful and will fight to the end, and that is what should be done. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from North Carolina said he did not want the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I happened to be temporarily out of the Chamber just now. I desire to present my amendment in a modified form later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

The READING CLERK. On page 6, line 13, after the word "market," strike out the period and insert a comma and the following words:

Or upon a note secured by a mortgage on real estate, in an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the value of said real estate.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by me carries with it to a degree the policy advocated by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] in his amendment, except that my amendment goes further and specifically provides that a mortgage upon realty shall be considered good security upon which a farmer may obtain a loan under the provisions of the pending bill.

I have studied the bill, and if I construe it correctly as it is now drawn, it does not afford the farmer an opportunity to borrow money upon real estate secured by a mortgage. In the financial world, through our banking institutions, real estate is regarded as one of the very best classes of security. If anything, it is better security than chattel-mortgage security. I was in hopes that the Senate was going to formulate and enact a farmers' banking measure in the interest of our great agricultural industries throughout the country in general, and that it was not going to be restricted to only one or two classes of those engaged in agricultural industry. The measure before us is quite restricted in its beneficent provisions. Under the pending bill, if a farmer is able to finance and produce a nonperishable crop, harvest the crop and obtain his warehouse receipt, he can then secure a loan upon it. That is one class of security authorized. The only other class reached by the provisions of the bill applies to those engaged in stock raising, who may obtain money for the purpose of carrying on their operations in fattening stock for the market. I do not know just how this provision of the measure would be applied. We know the loan is extended only upon cattle being fattened for market.

If it is right and just that we should assist a cattle raiser in building up his stock for the market—and I think it is—is it not right and just that we should also assist the farmer in the production of his crop, whether perishable or nonperishable? I can not see where you draw the line of demarkation. I am unable to see why the Government will assist a man in holding his crop after he has produced it, so that he may receive probably a higher market price for his products, and not, on the other hand, assist him in its production. The proposition seems to be one of trying to assist him in conserving his resources after he has produced them, but not to assist him in the production of those resources. Certainly he needs even more aid in growing the crop than after he has already produced it.

If the policy is right, and our real object and purpose is to assist agriculture, why not assist the farmer in the production of his crop? How can we assist him in the production of the crop and have the banking institution amply secured? We know of no better security than that proposed by the amendment I have offered; that is, notes secured by mortgage upon real property in an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of its value. May not a farmer encounter as much or more rough sailing and trouble in financing in the production of his crop as he does in conserving it after harvested in order that he may market under favorable conditions?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask how long it takes in the State of Florida to realize on real estate security after default?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It does not take any longer than to realize on chattel mortgages, or but very little longer. The system of foreclosure is very largely the same. If the Senator wants to try to complain that real estate security is undesirable, I will say to him that we have thousands of money lenders in Florida who will not have any other kind of security.

I will put their judgment up against the Senator's as to the value of that kind of security, as far as my State is concerned. Of course, in order to have short-time loans and expedite the handling of business, some of the banks prefer loaning on so-called liquid assets; but the banks regard real estate as a safe security, and the reason banks do not handle real estate security any more than they do is on account of the fact, as a rule, loans based upon that character of security are desired for a longer period of time than 90 days, and the banks do not get an opportunity to turn their money over quite so often. Real estate is the very best character of security. If I were a money lender—and I will say that I never happened to be, as I have always been on the other side of the ledger—I would far rather have a real estate mortgage in an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the value of the real estate than a mortgage upon a herd of cattle, even though I would regard the latter as a perfectly safe loan. You are willing to recognize a mortgage upon cattle, and I think that is proper. I desire to see the stock raisers of the country assisted, but it seems to me that in a large measure the bill is more in the interest of the cattle raiser than any other class of our people. I want to see them assisted and I desire to commend the author of the bill and the committee for the beneficence extended in that direction.

But why not extend a similar policy to our agricultural interests in general? In my State we produce largely perishable crops. Our citrus fruit crop runs into many millions of dollars each year. We ship about $60,000,000 worth of perishable fruits and vegetables each year and the output is on the increase.

Those perishable products are produced upon real estate that is as good security as can be offered or afforded, and that same condition exists in other States as well where large amounts of perishables are produced. Yet under the provisions of the pending bill no system of credit is afforded, except for those fattening cattle for market and upon crops already harvested, and then only to nonperishable crops. I am glad to see the cattle industry assisted. It is an important industry, and Florida, I think, has great possibilities along that line. My State, on account of its mild climate, its adaptibility for the production of a number of feed crops annually, should become one of the greatest cattle-raising States in the Union. I appreciate that feature of the bill; but we have in my State our fruit growers and farmers producing and marketing over $60,000,000 worth of perishable products each year; yet they are to be told if they go to the bank and want to borrow $2,000, secured by a mortgage on real estate worth $10,000, that the law does not authorize the bank to accept that character of security. What a shock this would be to the farmer who thought Congress had enacted a law to provide credit facilities for the agricultural industries of the country.

In the West the grain farmer if he wants to produce a crop may, so far as the bill is concerned, see a rainbow with no end to it; but in order to be able to call upon this banking institution to assist him he must have given his labor and provided his own capital to produce a crop and to harvest it before he is entitled to a loan from what is called a farmers' banking institution or system. What do you think the corn and wheat producers will think of such system? Will he not think he asked for bread and you gave him a stone? Now, why should not the farmer of the West, with his farm worth $20,000, needing, probably, $3,000 to plant, produce, and harvest his crop, and willing to give a mortgage upon that $20,000 farm, be allowed the privilege of borrowing through this banking system? No; it is said he can just sort of paddle along in his own way and do whatever he wants to do. The money sharks, the speculators, if they want to, can prey upon him and crush him while he is producing his crop, and this institution will not recognize his security, even though he is asking a loan not exceeding 15 per cent of the actual value of the security.

He is told, "The Government thinks you are a very good fellow after you have produced the crop, but will not help you to produce it, will not loan you money on real estate security, it matters not how valuable your farm." I do not see why the farmer should be left under that handicap during that crucial time while he is producing his crop and not be allowed the opportunity of borrowing from this system until after he has produced his crop and is able to give a chattel mortgage upon it with warehouse receipts attached. Of course, as to any section of the country where perishable crops are produced, there is no provision in this bill whatever to assist those engaged in that character of agriculture or horticulture.

Now, I propose that if the mortgage is upon real estate in an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the value of the land, then they may obtain a loan upon that class of security. I add this class of security as another that may be recognized through this system. Certainly we could have no kind of security that would be any safer than a mortgage on real estate. Certainly if we do not extend the provisions of the bill to that class of security, we will have precluded the grain growers of the West, the cotton producers of the South, and the perishable fruit and vegetable producers throughout the entire country from obtaining any of the benefits authorized under the provisions of the bill; that is, of course, up to the point where his crop—if nonperishable—has been produced and harvested. Of course, so far as perishable products are concerned, they would be precluded entirely. They are not given the opportunity to come in and obtain a loan through this system, subject to the regulations and provisions of the bill, at any time during the period of production or after harvest or at any time whatever. They are absolutely precluded and barred from the benefits of the system, although they have as good and even better security to offer to the banks for the money they may require.

I would like to help the grain producers of the West. I would like to help the cotton producers of the South and the stock producers throughout the country. But if we do that, let us help all agricultural activities. The grain producers of the West can furnish just as good security for the money they want six months before they harvest their crops as they can afterwards, and the cotton producers of the South can furnish just as good security six months before they harvest their crop as the can afterwards, so why should we not assist them at the time when many most need it; that is, in the production of the crop? I think that, if anything, it would add strength to the whole system and would certainly do much to further the intentions which were in mind when this bill was first discussed to adopt my amendment. If I thought it would impair the financial security involved, of course I would not advocate having the provision suggested by me embraced in the measure.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be adopted and that we will go all the way in endeavoring to assist the grain producers of the West, the cotton producers of the South, the stock growers, and that we will bring within the provisions of the bill the fruit growers, the truck farmers—the great producers of perishable fruits and vegetables throughout the entire country, who are amply able to furnish ironclad security to the banks contemplated upon which to obtain their loans. In my opinion, if we fall short of this we will be recreant in the full performance of our duty to the agricultural interests of our country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I want to say a few words in regard to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida. I do not see how there can possibly be any objection to the amendment. Without it the measure places the stockman himself in the following predicament: He has to go to one place for a loan where the land is security and to another place where his live stock is security. If we are going to aid the stock grower, we should provide that he can utilize all the credit that he has at the same place. Moreover, a herd of cattle is worth a great deal more in connection with the ranch where it is located than it is if we have to move the herd of cattle off the ranch. Are we going to force the stockman to go to different tribunals to obtain credit?

If that result is not involved here, I would like to have some one point it out. I think it must be recognized that such a result as that would be unwise. It simply means that if a man wants to borrow money upon his live stock he is limited to a very small percentage of the value of his live stock, even though he may have ranches and other securities of very large additional value. If that is not so, I would like to have some one point it out.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am glad to have the Senator from Connecticut express himself upon the proposition.

Mr. McLEAN. It is entirely inconsistent with the purpose for which the associations are organized. They deal with self-liquidating commercial paper. It is assumed that the paper will be retired from the proceeds of the sale of the products. When we make a farm-loan bank of this system, we are defeating the main purpose of the bill.

There may be a great many things that are good security, but the idea of the bill was to finance the marketing of crops. The crops are pledged as security, and when they are sold the notes will be retired. We have a Federal farm-loan system to take care of the land mortgages. The man who has a farm that is not mortgaged can raise money, but not through these corporations. They are not intended for that purpose. I question very much whether a single one of them would be organized if it was understood that they were to go into the farm-loan business. I do not think that Congress ought to set up another farm-loan system in competition with the Federal farm-loan system. That is what it would amount to.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator, I think, is in error. Under division 2 of section 4 of the bill it is provided that the corporation shall have power—

To make advances upon or to discount, rediscount, or purchase, and to sell or negotiate with or without its indorsement or guaranty, notes secured by chattel mortgages conferring a first and paramount lien upon maturing and breeding live stock and dairy herds, and having a maturity at the time of discount, rediscount, or purchase not exceeding three years.

Now, the hope is held out to the live-stock man that here is an institution organized for the purpose of helping him raise cattle or sheep. We are going to loan him money for a period of three years, if he wants it. It is to be an institution supposed to occupy the field between the ordinary national banks which can loan money under the provisions which have been incorporated up to nine months, and, on the other hand, the farm-land bank, which can not make a loan upon real estate for less than five years. It is proposed to occupy that field by limiting the security to personal property, to the live stock itself, but not enable the ranchman to use the real estate which he has in connection with the live-stock business as a part of his security for the loan.

Mr. GLASS. I would say to the Senator that the ranchman, under the national bank act, can borrow money on a farm mortgage for any period from six months up to five years.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But, under the national-bank act, only a limited amount of the resources of the bank can be utilized for the purpose of such loans. The Senator quite understands that. We are providing another agency; but, assuming that the national banks have an adequate money supply for making loans upon real estate, we are, by not incorporating in the bill a provision that this concern may take a mortgage upon real estate, forcing the stockman to do business with two different institutions.

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of fact, we are not proposing to set up here a land-mortgage bank. We have already a land-mortgage system, and as I pointed out a moment ago, in addition to that national banks are authorized to make loans on improved farm lands up to a period of five years. Under this bill the Government is not proposing to make loans; but the organizers of the discount corporations, the credit corporations to be created, propose to make loans on liquid assets which in their very nature will liquidate the indebtedness in a period of from 9 months to 3 years. This is not assumed to be a land-mortgage system at all.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. All I can say is that if the view just expressed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] prevail, we shall be entering upon a vain thing; we shall be setting up here an absolutely worthless proposition to the stockmen of the West. There is not a stockman in the West who would go out simply to borrow money on the cattle themselves. If he is to have a going ranch—a going business—he wants to use as a part of his credit the ranch itself and his other property.

Mr. GLASS. I will say to the Senator, if he will permit me, that if there is any fooling involved in the pending measure, it is the Committee on Banking and Currency, which reported this bill, that is being fooled; for the representatives of the stockmen of the great western section of the country are the men who are responsible for the bill. Their selected representatives came here to Washington, and in conjunction with the Director of the War Finance Corporation and the attorney for the War Finance Corporation, based upon the experience of that corporation in making similar loans in the West over a period of two years, drafted this bill and presented it to our committee for our acceptance. On that committee sat the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], himself a stockman and large owner of ranches. He did not tell us that this was a worthless proposition, and that we were proposing to fool the stockmen of the United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I venture to assert that the Senator from Wyoming does not believe that this measure is going to be of any material benefit to the West. It may be in a few instances; here and there it may help out a little, but so far as meeting the situation is concerned, my humble judgment is that it will not do so.

Mr. GLASS. I do not assume to say that the Senator from Wyoming has not changed his opinion, but I know he said to our committee, of which he is a member, that he thought it would be of very great service to the stockmen of the West; that there were more than 100 loaning corporations already organized, inspired by the advice of the director of the War Finance Corporation; that they were not asking any Government funds, but that they were proposing to help themselves; that they simply wanted Government supervision and examination to add prestige to corporations which were already formed or which might hereafter be formed; and that would give them readier and more confident access to the money markets of the East.

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I shall yield in just a moment, if the Senator will pardon me.

I do not mean to say that this measure will not supply the wants of certain stockmen in the West; I do not mean to be understood in that way at all; but I am simply pointing out how it will not serve the great demand in the West and, in my judgment, the greatest demand in the West and of the stockmen of the country. From the standpoint of reason, can not anyone see that if the stock grower wishes to utilize his credit for the purpose of carrying on his business he would like to utilize all his credit, and not merely part of it?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from Oregon, who first requested me to do so.

Mr. STANFIELD. I should like to say to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] that of the 100 corporations which the War Finance Corporation has organized very few would be eligible under this bill, for their capital is below the minimum of $250,000 that is permitted under the bill.

Mr. GLASS. Very likely that is true, but a great many of them have a capital far in excess of the requirements of the bill.

Mr. STANFIELD. A few of them have.

Mr. GLASS. And the director of the War Finance Corporation and gentlemen who confidently assumed, because they were ranchmen and stockmen themselves, to speak for those people, assured us that it would be a comparatively easy matter to have the smaller corporations expand their activities and increase their capital. It was confidently asserted there that, instead of the 100 corporations now organized, there would be a great many more organized if we would erect this instrumentality which they proposed and presented to us. I submit that it is not exactly a fair suggestion which has been made by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] that we are presenting here a worthless proposition, and an act, if not so intended, the effect of which would be to fool those who are supposed to represent the great live-stock industry of the country.

Mr. STANFIELD. The limitations of the bill are very rigid, and I am inclined to agree with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] that the relief which the live-stock men are anticipating will not be accorded to them under the restrictions of the bill.

Mr. GLASS. Perhaps that may be so.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I, of course, acquit the members of the committee and the framers of the bill of any intention to deceive the people of the country, and I have no doubt the provisions of the bill may be availed of by some people; but my prediction is that it will not go very far and that the benefits derived from it will not be general.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think, perhaps, the Senator from New Mexico does not appreciate the difficulties which the committee encountered. It realized that there ought to be some provision offered to enable men with large real estate holdings to use their credit; and that was one of the reasons why there was incorporated in this bill an amendment to the farm loan bank act so as to increase the limit of loans under that act to $25,000. Such loans, of course, will have to be made through the Federal farm loan bank machinery. We could not set up duplicate machinery. The Senator says that a man ought not to be compelled to go to two places to borrow money, but it would be equally bad for the Government to establish two competing institutions to lend money on real estate.

The Senator must realize that there is going to be considerable difficulty in securing the money under this bill. The corporations are to be organized with a comparatively small capital, $250,000 being the minimum, and then back of them are the discount corporations. Where is the money coming from? The money has got to be procured by selling their debentures. There can not be found a market for such debentures if they are given a real estate basis. In many States it takes more than two years to foreclose a mortgage on real estate. It is necessary to have back of the debentures liquid securities of some kind that may be realized on. That is one of the reasons why the committee provided securities of the kind mentioned in the bill. The bill, however, already carries in another provision an opportunity for the ranchmen to secure, through the proper Government agency, large loans on their ranches. I think that ought to answer the objection which the Senator makes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I feel quite sure that the Senator thinks that is a complete answer, but as a practical proposition I do not think that it is. I do not think so for this reason: Thus far we have provided no machinery of the Government whereby the farmer may secure a loan upon his ranch for less than five years, unless it be through the national banks, only a limited part of whose capital and surplus may be invested in such loans. I take it that all will agree that that facility is not adequate to meet the situation; that the national banks do not want to tie up much of their money in real estate, for the reasons very well stated by the eminent Senator from Virginia. They want short-term loans and liquid assets, and all that sort of thing. They are permitted only to loan, I believe, 10 per cent of their capital and surplus upon real estate, and the loans which they are permitted to make are short-term loans. They are not permitted even to loan the limit of 10 per cent for three years upon real estate, if I am correctly advised.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, they are permitted to loan for five years on real estate.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then, I withdraw the statement. Just for the moment I did not think that was the case.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator will recall that under the national-bank act they were not permitted to make loans on real estate at all.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I recall that.

Mr. GLASS. But the Federal reserve act so amended the national-bank act as to permit national banks to loan a certain percentage of their assets upon real estate for a period of not exceeding five years.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. They are permitted to loan up to 10 per cent of their assets, as I understand.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, he complains that there is no opportunity for the cattle raiser to borrow money on a five-year mortgage, but that is not correct The real evil that existed before the establishment of the Federal farm loan act was that the farmers could only borrow money on short-time loans, from three to five years, and they were compelled to renew them, often at great loss. So the Government stepped in and provided an agency by which they could borrow money at a low rate of interest on long time, which is just the very thing they needed and the thing needed by the West, where the Senator from New Mexico and I live.

Mr. GLASS. And under a system of amortization.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Under a system of amortization, as the Senator from Virginia suggests. It was the very thing that was needed by the West, and that system is in successful operation. The Senator says we ought to provide some system whereby the farmer may obtain upon his lands loans for less than five years. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the presence in the local market for real estate loans of the Federal farm-loan banks has resulted in compelling the insurance companies that loan on short time, such as the Senator refers to—from three to five years—to reduce the rate of interest practically to match the Federal farm-loan rate. In my State at this time those agencies are meeting that rate and loaning money at 5 per cent or less on good farm mortgages. So the presence of the Federal farm-loan bank system has resulted in regulating the rates of interest that other agencies charge, and has added that much to the lending machinery of the United States.

I think that the pending bill in increasing the amount that may be loaned to any one borrower by the Federal land banks to $25,000 is a boon which the ranch owners of the United States ought to appreciate. It will give them on long time an amount of credit which will be of tremendous value in their business. Instead of complaining that they can not pay their loans off in five years, they ought to congratulate themselves that they can get them on long time.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I hope that the Senator has not any idea that I do not realize that the farm-loan banks have been performing a very distinct service to the farmers of the country. I am not casting any reflections upon that system; but that system, as the Senator knows, merely provides for loans not less than five years in time. A great many ranchmen may avail themselves of that system and get money upon their lands through it, and then come to the institutions provided for by this bill to get some money upon their cattle. The Senator must realize, however, that a great many people would not care to do that sort of thing; and, moreover, the mortgage upon your cattle is worth very much less if that mortgagor has mortgaged his ranches and real estate to another institution.

When a man loans money upon stock cattle he necessarily must have in mind some place where he can run those cattle in the event that he should be required to foreclose the mortgage. You can not put a herd of stock cattle on the market and realize anything like its value. A ranch property as a going concern is worth far more than the material property itself, considered separate and apart from the active, forward-going business; and you destroy the value of your cattle whenever you force the cattle owner to borrow money upon his real estate from another institution.

I do not believe that the objections here to having this institution loan money upon real estate are sufficient to overcome the other objections. I, of course, quite appreciate what the Senator from Virginia has said about liquid assets; but the fact of being liquid is based as much upon the time of the obligation as it is upon the security of the obligation. It is true that it may take some little time to foreclose a mortgage upon real estate in most of the States of the country; I think that is the case; but is that a sufficient objection to warrant us in going ahead in a way which has other objections to the other system? The very fact that the paper can not be for longer than three years' time will have a great deal to do with it. I submit that there can not be a ranchman in the whole country but who would say that he would be better off if he could get a mortgage upon his ranch and his stock together than if you confine him simply to giving a mortgage and getting a loan upon the cattle themselves, as distinct from the ranch.

Mr. GLASS. That might be, Mr. President; but when the loaning corporation has to procure its funds by the sale of its debentures in the open markets of the East, principally, the question arises as to whether or not the facility with which that may be done will be interrupted by the amendment proposed, and whether the amendment proposed will not prove a real obstacle to the sale of these debentures. If the man holding a debenture is likely to become involved in the litigation incident to the foreclosure of mortgages, the debentures in those circumstances is made that much less liquid and that much less valuable, and he invests his money rather cautiously than liberally in an enterprise of that sort.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, of course the purchaser of the debentures of the associations to be organized under this act must feel secure. There is not any question about that, and there is no attempt upon my part to render them less secure; and my judgment is that if you will include with the stock the ranch itself you will have them more secure than if they are based solely upon the personal, moving property which may possibly be destroyed. You can steal the one, you can not steal the other. You can starve the one, you can not starve the other; and it seems to me that it would give a basis of security here very much more desirable by the purchaser of the debentures of the associations to be organized.

Mr. GLASS. Of course, the Senator knows that the bill is not entirely oblivious to the fact that cattle may be stolen and that we have put in it provisions for frequent and vigilant inspection.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I realize that safeguards have been thrown around the transaction, and, so far as I am able to judge, they will be helpful; but the fact remains that the one class of security certainly is not any better than the other.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, does not the Senator realize that that amendment would shut off entirely a field of investment where the investment is made only upon the assurance and belief that the debenture will be realized upon when due?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not think so.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, suppose the Senator were an investor in the East, and a company came to him and offered him debentures. "What are these debentures? What is their security?" "Their security is cattle that have a market value that can be realized on, that can be sold in 10 minutes." "Why, yes; I will buy the debentures, because if the debt is not paid the cattle will be sold, and the debentures will be good." But suppose he is told that the debentures represent all sorts of security, personal and real, on a ranch; that here is a $10,000 debenture, substantially, that represents a $10,000 loan on a ranch out West, of which the ranch represents $5,000, and the cattle represent $5,000. Suppose the man does not pay. The cattle can be sold, but you have to go to foreclosure to sell the mortgage. How long will it take? It will take two years. Now, they do not know that until the debt is due. Do you think those debentures will find a market?

It will be impossible to sell those debentures in the East. The man who buys a debenture wants to put it in the bank and know that it will be cashed in when it becomes due. He does not want to feel that the company will have to wait until it has foreclosed the mortgage before it may be able to pay. Of course in a single case that would not be so; but if a company undertook to loan a lot of money to a great many real-estate people, it might in hard times find itself with a lot of mortgage foreclosures on hand, and in some straits to meet its debentures. That is the difference.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I hope that after these institutions are organized, if there are any, they may avail themselves of some agent to dispose of their debentures who has as much confidence in the security as the distinguished Senator from Nebraska evidently has. This thing of having a mortgage upon stock cattle which can be thrown upon the market in 10 minutes or 10 days does not exist. If the mortgage is upon cattle practically ready for slaughter, the Senator from Nebraska is quite right about it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, that is what this measure proposes—to lend the money to the owner of the stock until they are ready to slaughter. Then they will have a market value and a market, and can be realized on and liquidated immediately. That is the very purpose of the bill—to lend the money to the man until the time comes when the cattle are marketed.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska has ever been upon a stock ranch, he will quite understand that at the end of three years, if you have a stock of cattle, a comparatively small proportion of your herd will be ready for market. That is not the way in which the ordinary stock ranch of the West is conducted. You do not expect in three years' time to grow your herd to the point where the whole of it is ready for market. A very small proportion, indeed, will be ready for the ordinary market at the end of that time—that is, for slaughter.

I sincerely hope that Senators will think seriously of this amendment, and try to do what is best for the class of people for which this bill was intended to furnish benefit. It seems to me it is not going nearly far enough; and in the case mentioned here by the Senator from North Carolina, if a man has other personal property on his farm, and wants to borrow money with which to grow a crop, would it not be a safer thing, or at least as safe, to have a mortgage upon that personal property and the ranch as well, as upon the personal property alone?

It is a question here, it seems to me, of the time of the loan, with ample security, for which you want to make provision; and to say that you can not have a three-year loan amply secured by mortgages on real estate is not convincing. If you are going to issue debentures now for a term of years based upon personal property—some of that personal property in the warehouse, some of it roaming upon the range—why should you not go a step further, and say that when you are going to take care of a man who wants to engage in that industry you are going to take care of him and let him utilize all the credit that he can furnish?

A man can not afford to engage in the live-stock business with a credit of only the amount which he might get upon his stock, upon his cattle. You force such a man to have behind him his real estate and the margin of cattle required by this bill. I submit that it is not within reason that you should set up here a machinery which will not do as much for that man as should be done for him.

You are only going halfway, if I may so express it.

I feel keenly about this subject. If you are going to do anything for the ranchman, do what you should reasonably be expected to do; and I submit that there is no private concern in the country dealing with the ranchmen who would not do just that thing. He will lend it himself on a small mortgage upon the cattle, and perhaps the small mortgage which could be paid by throwing into the general market such parts of them as might be suitable for that market; but if you are going to help the industry, why not at least go as far as you might reasonably be expected to go? Why not deal with it as a sensible proposition?

Of course, I understand how this bill was prepared, and I have not the slightest doubt but that it was prepared in this way because the framers thought it was all that could be gotten out of the Congress; but when we are faced with this situation, why should we not deal with it? It must be one perfectly apparent to every practical farmer or ranchman, and to go only halfway seems to me unworthy of thoughtful men.

Mr. GLASS. May I suggest to the Senator from New Mexico that there could have been no possible motive in the minds of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate to withhold any ample facility of relief for western ranchmen in the construction of this bill. The Government of the United States does not have a dollar at issue in the operation of these corporations; it does not provide one cent of the capital. Congress is simply asked to set up an instrumentality under Federal charter to give to corporations already organized, or which may be organized, facilities for the flotation of their debentures and the acquirement of capital hitherto gotten from the eastern money market. They simply ask us to give these corporations already organized, or which hereafter may be organized, the prestige which comes from Federal examination and Federal supervision. The Government has no risk in the matter, and the Committee on Banking and Currency nor the Congress itself could have any reason in the world to withhold any ample facility in setting up this corporation.

Just exactly what the Senator means by saying that it was only intended to go halfway, because the proponents of the measure supposed that Congress could not be induced to go the whole way, I am unable to determine, because I think all of us may be induced to go the whole way in providing safe facilities for this purpose. I do not think there is anything sinister in the action of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, and I can not conceive that there would be anything sinister in the action of this body. We want to do the best we can for this interest. I am not so concerned about it personally. While a large part of my State has a great export cattle industry, I do not think they are suffering for credit facilities, and there is nothing in this bill which would preclude any western ranchman from mortgaging his ranch if he so pleases, if he can get somebody to loan him money on it. After hearing the testimony of the Director of the War Finance Corporation and others speaking for this particular interest, I very much question whether the Congress would be doing this interest a service by enabling these corporations to engage in a business that will not facilitate the sale of their debentures upon which they must rely for their operating capital.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request, that when the Senate closes its business to-day it take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow, and that all debate on this bill and all amendments close at 1 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, personally I do not intend to delay this measure at all, but I think it is certainly desirable that the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] should be consulted about the matter, and I notice he is not in the Chamber just now.

Mr. LENROOT. He has no further amendment to offer.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand he has no further amendments, and I have talked with a good many Senators on the other side and they seem to agree that this course shall be taken. It would give two hours to-morrow.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not intend to discuss the measure any further myself or consume any time on any other provisions of the bill, so far as I know. I observe the Senator from Florida has now entered the Chamber.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have nothing further.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Will it not be necessary to have the roll called?

Mr. CURTIS. Not on this agreement. It is not a request for a final vote. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its business to-day it take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow, and that all debate on this bill and all amendments close at 1 o'clock.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator make the meeting hour 12 o'clock?

Mr. CURTIS. I am willing to make it 12, if it be agreed that all debate shall close at 1.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us take a recess until 12 o'clock and let the debate close at 2.

Mr. CURTIS. Very well; I ask that all debate close at not later than 2 o'clock, and that the Senate take a recess at the conclusion of its business to-day until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. FLETCHER. That will be satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The agreement was reduced to writing, as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it recess until 12 o'clock m. to-morrow, Friday, and that all debate on the bill (Senate bill No. 4280) to provide credit facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries of the United States, to amend the Federal reserve act, to amend the Federal farm loan act, to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds and other securities, to provide fiscal agents for the United States, and for other purposes, close at not later than 2 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Friday, January 19, 1923.

EFFECTS OF CITIZENS DYING ABROAD.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a draft of proposed legislation respecting the disposition of effects of citizens of the United States dying abroad, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXCESSIVE INTEREST RATES OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the acting governor of the Federal Reserve Board, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 335, agreed to December 6, 1922, information relative to interest charges of the Federal reserve banks of Atlanta, St. Louis, Dallas, and Kansas City, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS.

Mr. KENDRICK. I present a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Casper, Wyo., urging the Government to undertake the construction of the Casper irrigation project and calling attention to the fact that the Federal Government annually derives about one-half million dollars in oil royalties from the territory immediately adjacent to the project. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KENDRICK. I present a resolution adopted by the Washakie National Farm Loan Association, of Worland, Wyo., favoring the passage of the so-called Strong bill, providing for amendments to sections 3, 4, 6, 9, 12, and 15 of the Federal farm loan act. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KENDRICK. I present a resolution adopted by the Dubois National Farm Loan Association, of Dubois, Wyo., favoring the passage of the so-called Strong bill, providing for amendments to sections 3, 4, 6, 9, 12, and 15 of the Federal farm loan act. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KENDRICK. I present a resolution adopted by the Farmers' Central National Loan Association, of Basin, Wyo., favoring the passage of the so-called Strong bill, providing for amendments to sections 3, 4, 6, 9, 12, and 15 of the Federal farm loan act. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF NATIONAL SOCIETY DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION (S. DOC. NO. 289).

Mr. MOSES. I ask unanimous consent to report a resolution from the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received.

Mr. MOSES. I ask further unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 412) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution for the year ended March 1, 1922, transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, pursuant to law, be printed as a Senate document, with illustrations.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow, according to the unanimous-consent agreement.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously made, took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, January 19, 1923, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 18, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

To our loving Father in heaven we offer our tributes of praise and gratitude. We bow before Thee in contrition and trust. We know that Thy ear is not closed, nor Thy arm shortened. May it always be our delight to expend our strength and skill and zeal on the very best themes of human thought and life. We beseech Thee, O Lord, that this warring, weeping world may not go back to its trenches. O bring a fresh redemption to it that shall honor Thee and save humanity. May it return to its rest and prove the promises of the Most High God. To the troubled in spirit, to those cumbered with heavy cares, and unto all this day be a sweet blessing. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. SCOTT of Michigan was granted leave of absence for 10 days, on account of illness.

AMENDING REVENUE ACT IN REFERENCE TO CREDITS AND REFUNDS.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means I present a privileged report on the bill (H. R. 13775) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to credits and refunds.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa presents a privileged report on a bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13775, Rept. 1424) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to credits and refunds.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Union Calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think it better to reserve all points of order on the bill.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4260. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge over the Columbia River, between the States of Oregon and Washington, at a point approximately 5 miles upstream from Dalles City, Wasco County, in the State of Oregon; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13793, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13793, the War Department appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIBRARY, SURGEON GENERAL'S OFFICE.

For the library of the Surgeon General's office, including the purchase of the necessary books of reference and periodicals, $15,000.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am a little curious to know, Mr. Chairman, just how we spend over $1,000 a month on the library in the Surgeon General's office. I would like the opinion of the Chairman on that subject.

Mr. ANTHONY. For the information of the gentleman I will state that the library of the Surgeon General's office is quite an institution. It has the largest collection of medical books there is in the country in any place.

Mr. ROACH. It evidently must be.

Mr. ANTHONY. And is used by physicians and surgeons all over the country by correspondence as well as by personal visits, and it necessitates the employment of quite a force of clerical help. Now, another thing that will necessitate an increase of the clerical force, and which I propose to ask for in an amendment in a few minutes, is during the last year the Prudential Insurance Co. of New Jersey has made a present to the Government of 50,000 volumes of medical works which they want to place on their shelves now and classify, a very valuable addition.

Mr. ROACH. That does not cost us anything.

Mr. ANTHONY. No, that is a present, but it costs money to place those books in position and take care of them.

Mr. ROACH. We are appropriating $215,080 in the next item for that purpose. What I was particularly interested to know—

Mr. ANTHONY. This is a $15,000 appropriation.

Mr. ROACH. Per annum by Congress for supplying the books of the library of the Surgeon General.

Mr. ANTHONY. Eight thousand dollars of the $15,000 goes to purchase the books each year and $7,000 is expended for medical journals.

Mr. ROACH. It does occur to me that it is a rather large item in the bill, and I was wondering if the committee had gone into that matter carefully to determine whether the amount was necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. ROACH. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. As the chairman of the committee has stated to the committee, the library connected with the Surgeon General's office of the War Department is the largest technical surgical and medical library in the country.

Mr. ROACH. It does not justify extravagance in Army expenditures, and there is a good deal of complaint in that respect.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will make a visit to this wonderful library of technical books, he will become impressed immediately with its extensiveness and the advisability to keep it extant. In connection with the Library of Congress, I call the gentleman's attention to the annual appropriation of $200,000, or thereabouts, for the purchase of rare collections, and the Librarian of Congress does not utilize that full amount at one time.

Mr. ROACH. That seems to be an altogether different proposition. Here is but one officer of the Army, where we are expending more than $1,000 a month for his library.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman realizes, however, that it is an immense library for the medical profession of the country, and he would not favor a policy of stagnation, but he would vote the small sum of $8,000 for the acquisition of new books so as to keep that library up to date.

Mr. ROACH. There does not seem to be any danger of it becoming stagnant with the expenditure of $15,000 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Fifteen thousand dollars on a library that is worth several million dollars, comprising several hundred thousand volumes! Does not the gentleman wish that this rare corps of surgeons connected with the Army, comprising 1,000 men, shall be kept posted——

Mr. ROACH. Considering the careful provision that is made by this library, as stated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], I doubt whether this appropriation is justified.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman wish to have these thousand men kept posted right to the minute by having at their command several thousand professional journals? This library is available to the medical profession of all the country and is resorted to by them.

Mr. ROACH. I will ask the gentleman this question: Who disseminates this information from the library out into the country, and what does it cost?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is disseminated through the librarian.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think I can give a concrete illustration of the work that is being done by this medical library. General Ireland stated that a surgeon had written to him from one of the States in regard to some recent medical developments, some serum, or something, and they immediately put their force to work collaborating the latest information on the subject, and they sent that information that is priceless to him; information that otherwise he would have had no opportunity of getting unless he attended one of the big hospitals or clinics in the country. They are constantly doing that work.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not only do physicians call upon it, but Members of Congress frequently avail themselves of this wonderful collection of scientific volumes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Only in the past year, when I had a near relative who was afflicted with a kidney disorder, I called up the library of the Surgeon General's office to furnish me with an elementary work, and I was regaled and enlightened by reading a small manual published by a teacher at the Yale medical school describing the various disorders of the kidneys. Then, having been furnished this elementary work, of readable character, I asked for some other elementary works on other disorders, just as a means of diversion, because it was so interesting. I want to emphasize the fact that this complete library is in one respect just like the Library of Congress, but more so—subject to the call of the medical profession of the country. It is, in fact, a monument illustrating the scientific work of the War Department.

I wish to call attention to the generosity of the Prudential Life Insurance Co. in transferring their 50,000 volumes, containing very valuable statistics, to this library, not only without expense of transportation, but even providing the file cases and the stacks. When they found that the stacks they had in use in New York were not available, they provided new stacks.

Mr. ROACH. Considering that contribution to the library that the gentleman has mentioned, it seems to me that with an appropriation of $1,000 a month you would have all the medical works in the United States for this library.

Mr. STAFFORD. If this library consisted of only a few thousand volumes I would admit that the upkeep of $15,000 might be a little extravagant. Even if it were a small library, even the gentleman from Missouri, knowing his desire to advance scientific knowledge throughout the country along every line of activity, would not, I know, be so grudging as to wish to have the medical profession and the medical officers connected with the Army deprived of the use of this $7,000 worth of journals.

Mr. ROACH. I know; but I know that these Army officers usually get all that is coming to them in the way of appropriations.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is no donation to the Army officers. It is for their enlightenment.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Is not this library the most complete medical and surgical library in the United States?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. Where is it located?

Mr. STAFFORD. At Seventh and B Streets SW. A whole building is given over to it. If the gentleman wants to go down there immediately, I will give him the exact location.

Mr. ROACH. No. I was wondering whether or not these gentlemen who are patronizing that library so extensively could not get the same information out of the Congressional Library?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; and for this reason: The Congressional Library, in the way they operate that wonderful institution, transfers to the Surgeon General of the Army all the technical and medical books that come to them in their line—thousands of books of a scientific character.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. FESS rose.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the committee on this side of the aisle. The topic that is being discussed, I think, is of extreme importance. The library that is under consideration is down here in a red brick building on the Mall, in the southwestern part of the city. It houses the most important collection of technical works touching surgery that can be found anywhere in the country.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I stated in colloquy with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] that the library was located in a building at Seventh and B Streets SW., just as the gentleman has stated.

Mr. ROACH. The gentleman was referring to the hearings.

Mr. STAFFORD. No. I stated in my first remarks where it was located.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman from Ohio does not need to refer to the hearings. The gentleman from Ohio has looked into this library a number of times. What I want to call to the attention of the committee is that it is housed in a building that is not fireproof.

I would not say it is a tumble-down building, for it is not, but it is far from being fireproof. Only a short time ago a distinguished visitor from another country in the Capital made the comment that there under that roof was, so far as he knew, the most important collection of scientific works applicable to the professions of medicine and surgery to be found anywhere in the world.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman from Wisconsin said these scientific works were sent down there from the Library of Congress. Are there duplicates of these books in the Congressional Library?

Mr. FESS. There is no duplication in the sense that every book found in this technical library is also found in the Library of Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In response to the question propounded by a member of the committee, General Ireland states in the hearing that the Library of Congress gave them the surplus copyright books, and that they have other exchanges.

Mr. FESS. That would only apply to the publications in the United States on which there are copyrights.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman mean to tell the committee that the Congressional Library is not purchasing all these books?

Mr. FESS. That is true. The Congressional Library is not purchasing all the scientific books available in the world because of lack of funds. I think we have not been as responsive as we should be to the needs of the Library. They get all the copyright books without purchase, as the gentleman knows, and many of the world's publications through exchanges by the Smithsonian Institution. I am referring to books that are published in other countries, many of which we do not secure for the Library of Congress.

Mr. DOWELL. What I am getting at is this: We are providing here a special appropriation for the purchase of scientific works.

Mr. FESS. Yes; that is not a duplication.

Mr. DOWELL. Are those purchased books also in the Congressional Library?

Mr. FESS. No; I think not; especially not all of them.

Mr. DOWELL. That is the point I wanted to bring out.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. My question is suggested by the statements made by the gentleman from Iowa. Even if it were true that the books that are placed in this medical library were also placed in the Congressional Library, it would not answer the purpose.

Mr. FESS. That is true.

Mr. McKENZIE. The medical library disseminates information. It is the place where the medical men of the country look for medical information rather than the Congressional Library.

Mr. FESS. There are certain classes of books of which they ought to have duplicates, and others they do not need.

Now I should like to ask the gentleman, a member of the Military Committee, whether there is any thought of removing this library from these quarters to any better quarters where there is more fire-proof protection?

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio in that connection that it is the expectation that this library will be removed to the grounds of the Walter Reed Hospital, and we consider that a part of the plan; and unless Congress undertakes to destroy that great tract out there by building street-car lines through it, and so on—if we will permit it to go on, in my judgment it will become eventually the greatest center of medical knowledge and information in the world.

Mr. FESS. That is precisely what it is intended to do, and the suggestion is a very good one. All I wanted to do was to commend the committee for the appropriation which is keeping up with the demands of this tremendous research work, and I wish individual members of the committee would visit that library. There is no field of investigation or research so widely important and so wonderful in results as the field of surgery. We should not hesitate to keep up to the times in this important investigation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would not wish to have the impression go abroad that these most valuable scientific books are housed in a building that is lacking in fireproof protection. The building down here on the Mall, with which I am quite well acquainted, in front of which is the statue of Dr. Samuel Gross, a noted Philadelphia surgeon, is, as testified by General Ireland, a practically fireproof building. He states that it is what would be called a very slow-burning building. Of course, it is not modern. It was built probably 40 years ago, but it is not built of combustible material. It is not a shack or anything like that. It is practically a fireproof building. It is not the character of fireproof building of to-day which is proposed to be built out on the Walter Reed Hospital grounds, where the Army Medical School is to be transferred the coming year, and where ultimately this library is to be transferred when the building is erected.

Mr. DALLINGER. Does the gentleman think these priceless books should be kept in a slow-burning building?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; but I wish to dissipate the impression that this library is in a combustible building that is in immediate danger. It is not the up-to-date fireproof building that would be constructed to-day, but it was regarded as a fireproof building when it was constructed 40 years ago. Improvements have gone on so rapidly in that line that it can not be considered as meeting the requirements of fireproof protection as understood to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. When General Ireland was before the committee this proposition shocked the conscience of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Far be it from having any such effect upon me.

Mr. BLANTON. I was just judging from what happened, because the gentleman from Wisconsin immediately began to pounce upon him. He said, "You asked for only $12,000 last year. We gave you $12,000 last year. What do you want with an increase?"

Mr. HUSTED. That is what the chairman of the subcommittee always says.

Mr. BLANTON. General Ireland said, "Why, 50,000 volumes have been given to us by the Prudential Life Insurance Co." "Has it cost you anything for those books to be transmitted to you?" "No; they have been transmitted to us free of cost. We have not paid out anything." "Well, are the stacks going to cost you anything?" "No; we decided that we could not use our stacks, that we need a different kind of stack." "You have to pay for them, don't you?" "No; we do not have to pay for them, because the Prudential is furnishing them to us free. They are building new stacks in accordance with our estimates and requirements, and it is not costing the Government a cent." "Why did you mention the 50,000 volumes then if that had nothing to do with the transaction?" My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], who wants to know all about these matters in the committee, asked him these questions. Then he asked him this question, on page 539 of the hearings:

How much do you estimate the Prudential is expending in the furnishing of new stacks for this special library?

General Ireland said:

$4,750 for books and $6,200 for journals.

That makes a little over $10,000. That is what we are expending this year for that magnificent library, but we are giving them in this bill $15,000. If we already have the finest library in the world for scientific research, and if we only had to spend $12,000 this year, and if on top of that the Prudential Co. made us a present of 50,000 of fine volumes for the library and are putting in the stacks at their own expense, why should we have to expend more this year than we did last?

Now, the gentleman from Missouri is exactly right. The committee asked a few general questions, and the distinguished general before the committee gives a few general answers and satisfies the gentleman from Wisconsin. He shuts up and $15,000 goes into the bill when there is no reason shown for it.

Mr. KLINE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. KLINE. Would it not require some help to take care of these 50,000 volumes and to arrange them for the benefit of those who need the information?

Mr. BLANTON. We are giving $215,000 in the next paragraph for the dissemination of scientific knowledge. The gentleman from Missouri called attention to that. We are giving them a great army of employees to help them.

Mr. STEPHENS. Does the gentleman know about the location of this building down on the Mall?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; it was stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. STEPHENS. Does the gentleman know anything about the character of the building as to its being fireproof?

Mr. BLANTON. That was stated by the distinguished General Ireland. He said it was one of those buildings that is partly fireproof. He said it is one of those slow-burning buildings. It burns slowly. It is not exactly fireproof, but practically fireproof. He said it had been condemned as one of the buildings that must be removed from the Mall. But what has that got to do with this $15,000 appropriation?

Mr. STEPHENS. The gentleman says it was a slow-burning building. I would like to ask if it was burning slowly when he was there.

Mr. BLANTON. No; it was not burning at all. The distinguished general said that it was slow burning, and having convinced the gentleman from Wisconsin he quit asking general questions and General Ireland quit giving general answers, and the $15,000 went into the bill. That is the way these bureau chiefs get big appropriations year after year before our committees. They come in and the committee will make a little fight, the smoke will go up, the fight stops, the money goes into the bill to be expended. I am with my colleague from Missouri if he will try to stop it. I have been trying to stop it ever since I have been here, but we can not do it as long as the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin, who is generally persistent, lies down.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, this item of $15,000 instead of being extravagant is a very modest one for the maintenance of this library. The books they purchase are scientific books and cost relatively a large amount of money. Fifteen thousand dollars will not go very far in acquiring the annual publications of medical and surgical books and pamphlets which are issued throughout the world. This is not an ordinary library. This is the most perfect and complete medical and surgical library in the United States. It is one of the places where any surgeon or any doctor in this country can go and be sure of obtaining the very latest scientific medical and surgical results. It is the one library where they maintain a force of experts to file and digest and distribute this information to anyone who applies for it whether he be a doctor or a surgeon.

The Bureau of the Budget, which we know is a pretty close organization and which cuts down estimates sometimes to points that we think are not reasonable, allowed for this library this year $18,000. So that the Committee on Appropriations has not even equaled in its appropriation the amount estimated by the Budget Bureau, but has cut it $3,000. They say they expended $12,000 this year. That does not mean that that was all the library could usefully expend. It means that it was all that Congress allowed them to expend. I have no doubt that they could usefully expend the full amount of $18,000 allowed by the Budget Bureau, and as far as I am concerned I wish they had the full amount of $18,000. I believe the Surgeon General could make the very best use of it. I do not think there is an item in the bill that will do more for the health and comfort of the people of the United States than this small item of $15,000.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Is not it proper and eminently fit that the Federal Capital should have the finest library of this kind it is possible to obtain?

Mr. HUSTED. Absolutely.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit me to read a statement of General Ireland?

Mr. HUSTED. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. General Ireland said that the appropriation last year does not allow us to keep up with the literature of the world.

The subcommittee did not go to the extent of making an appropriation that would allow them to keep up with the literature of the world.

Mr. HUSTED. It is manifest that the committee did not.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Is there any field in which there are more remarkable developments than there is in medicine and surgery?

Mr. HUSTED. If there be any, I certainly do not know of it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Going back, I notice on page 52, in lines 12 and 15, there is a proviso that no part of this appropriation shall be used for the payment of any expense connected with the publication of the medical and surgical history of the war with Germany. What is the reason for that?

Mr. HUSTED. I am not sure, but I think the reason is that it is being done under some other item of appropriation.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I understand from a surgeon and physician that this is one of the most valuable medical works that has been compiled by anybody, and on inquiry at the Surgeon General's office I find that it is out of print.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say that this is in process of preparation. It consists of 15 volumes, and 1 or 2 volumes have been completed. Nine will be completed this year. We have previously appropriated a total of about $277,000 for that purpose. Congress originally limited this cost to $150,000, I think, but it has exceeded that, as these figures show, and $15,000 is provided further on in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I simply wanted to give the gentleman the information that we are asking for $15,000 more to carry on the work of the completion of the publication of the medical history later on in the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. So that the work of the publication of that history will go forward?

Mr. ANTHONY. It will be carried forward to completion.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I think it very important that that be done, because I see no use in compiling this great mass of information if the profession is not to get the benefit of it.

Mr. ANTHONY. In addition to the $15,000, which will take care of the editorial work, the actual cost of the volumes will be taken out of the general appropriations for printing in the War Department.

Mr. DOWELL. How many copies of that will be printed?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think that has been determined as yet, but I understand the number will be 3,000 sets, for distribution only to libraries in this country and abroad.

Mr. DOWELL. Will it be where it can be secured by those who desire to get it?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think there has been any method of distribution positively decided upon.

Mr. DOWELL. Will there be enough volumes printed so that it can be distributed, so that this information can be obtained outside of the Army?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am not in opposition to the proposed appropriation for the Army library. I have been advised by physicians that it is by all means the greatest medical library in the country. I do, however, want to call attention to a very interesting illustration of the different treatment which we accord to things military and to things civil. We are now appropriating for the medical library for the Army, which has grown until now, though the finest in the country, it still requires from twelve to fifteen thousand dollars a year. We have a Patent Office which is more than self-sustaining, whose officials are constantly called upon to pass on very fine technical questions, questions of mechanics, chemistry, engineering, and if the library that they have were given $15,000 in one year, I presume they could double the library. We have been giving them $3,000 a year, and for next year $8,000 for new books for that library. I hope a time will come when there will be some sort of readjustment, and if it does continue to be true that we have untold thousands to give for military activities in time of peace, that we may come to the point where we can say that we have similar sums to take care of such important agencies as the Patent Office, which is self-sustaining. Very recently in the Patent Office a decision was made involving a question of chemistry. After the decision was rendered the latest works on chemistry were referred to and it was demonstrated that the decision was wrong, and it was made in that way because the Patent Office did not have at hand the latest work on chemistry. We gave them this year all that the Budget asked for, but I hope that in the Budget office and in Congress there may come a time when the spirit of generosity will become such as to treat the scientific libraries which are used for civil purposes as well as we treat the scientific library in the War Department.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Do I understand the gentleman that at this particular time he questions the infallibility of the Budget?

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, not at all; and I would not avowedly question the wisdom of Congress, but sometimes thoughts drift through my mind carrying doubt as to whether we are all wise in our extreme liberality for military activities, and the closeness with which we hold down civil activities.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Charman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. As I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED], he said that the committee really had been very economical, because it has allowed $3,000 less than the Budget recommended, and, as I caught the "drift of the thought that was floating through my mind" of the gentleman from Michigan, he was somewhat resentful of the limitations of the Budget with reference to the particular library that he discussed, and what he seemed to think was a correspondingly relative overliberality for this particular medical library. I asked him if he questioned the infallibility of the Budget at this time, because, as I recall, it is not very long since the gentleman was resisting the "onslaughts of an ignorant and incompetent Congress," to use a pet phrase of the pink tea philosophers, in its efforts to exercise some independent thought and not submit to the limitations of the Budget.

I picked up a paper this morning, one of the greatest in America, and read an interesting editorial in it that is somewhat in keeping with what the gentleman from Michigan intimated might be drifting through his mind.

The editor of this newspaper is a brilliant man, and a patriotic man, and he seemed to be very much distressed that in the handling of these supply bills this year Congress seemed to be disposed to exercise some independent discretion in the appropriation of moneys, and was not willingly submitting to the limitations of the Budget. The editorial in substance said that the people of America should wake up, that Congress was absolutely about to override the limitations of the Budget, and some Congressmen were insisting that the House of Representatives had the right to increase an appropriation beyond the amount the Budget had told them was proper. Reading the record of the proceedings of another body a few days ago, and I want particularly to direct the attention of the House to this proposition, I discovered that the rules of that body have been so amended that an amendment increasing by a few thousand dollars an item which had been put on the bill in the House went out on a point of order because the amendment would make the item larger than that which had been estimated by the Budget.

Now, you may smile, gentlemen, but it is a serious proposition. Oh, of course, all of us saw the wisdom of having a budget that would make the departments make their estimates more intelligently and more economically. There was never any doubt in the minds of thoughtful, intelligent, informed men that the House of Representatives especially was careful in appropriating public money. Why, it was penurious, that being the contention of the departments, so penurious that the custom had grown up in making the estimates to make them larger than they really wanted on the theory that the House of Representatives in its niggardly policy, as it was described, would cut them down. So I say the real intelligent agitation for a budget was for many years for something, not to control the House of Representatives, but it was to control the improvident and extravagant and wasteful estimates of the executive branch of the Government, and so to provide a budget that would make it impossible for the President of the United States to pass the buck, but made it his duty intelligently, through a budget system and organization, to go into the real needs of the departments and try to cut down their estimates to a point where there could be an intelligent consideration of those estimates by the House of Representatives. But, of course, the country, listening to these great uplifters, who regard the House of Representatives, and practically every other constitutional agency of our Government, as one of the necessary evils that they have to put up with because the Constitution requires it, fed the country upon the idea that the Budget is infallible, and that this House has no right to create any agency of Government or to provide for the expenditure of any money unless the executive department, with the approval of the Budget Bureau, urges it. But you are enamored with that idea, gentlemen, and those who protest against such a vicious overthrow of our real theory of Government are abused when we call attention to the fact, but the day will come when the people will wake up to the fact that our system of government is not a failure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I would ask for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINGO. I was saying the people will wake up to the fact that our system of government is not a failure, that the greatest safeguard for economy is that the House of Representatives, the direct representatives of the taxpayers, should exercise their independent judgment, under the weight of their responsibility, in determining how the taxpayers' money shall be expended. I for one am resentful of this idea, which some Members of this House encourage, that constitutional government has broken down and the House of Representatives has not the capacity to frame supply bills, but that we should sit here like a bunch of young jay birds in a nest with our mouths open and swallow any revenue or expenditure worm that the Budget Bureau condescends to stick in our mouths. I say I am resentful of that theory, which is asserted with enthusiasm, of this new idea that another body has rules by which it has tied itself so that if the House of Representatives puts upon a bill an item of $5,000 and some Member of that body who has investigated the question and believes that $6,000 is necessary for that particular item and offers to increase it $1,000, that body is tied hand and foot, and its Presiding Officer rules it out of order because the lords of the Budget have not estimated as much as $6,000. Those who contend for that kind of a rule in this House and in the other body indict the capacity of the Congress to discharge its constitutional duties, and that is to hold the purse strings of the Nation, decide what revenues shall be raised, and how the moneys that flow from those revenues shall be expended. But you are drifting along to-day. Why, the reason these supply bills have gone through so rapidly is twofold. One is to prevent an extra session and the other is a mistaken idea that the poor, ignorant mortals of the House and Senate should not question the wisdom of the gentlemen who made up the estimates and set the boundary. We ought to discharge our constitutional duties. Bolshevism! I am not afraid of Bolshevism that finds expression on a soap box in New York, Chicago, and Milwaukee, but I am afraid of that high-browed Bolshevism that treats with contempt and irritation our form of government, that has no respect for or confidence in the capacity of the American people to govern themselves through their established constitutional agencies. If they had their way to-day they would have a director of railroads, and they would have a director of fuel, and a director of mails, and a director of steel, and a director of cotton, and a director of wheat, and a director of everything. In other words, they have no faith in the capacity of the people to govern themselves and they want an autocrat in this country, an autocrat that is as vicious and as contemptible as either the autocracy of the Czar or the autocracy of Lenin and Trotski. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CARE OF INSANE SOLDIERS OF SIXTY-FIFTH REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.

For care, maintenance, and treatment at asylums in Porto Rico of insane soldiers of the Sixty-fifth Infantry, formerly known as the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, $50.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HICKS. I do so merely to secure information. The amount of $50 is a very commendable sum to put in an appropriation bill, so far as size is concerned, but it is so extremely small that I am wondering how much care can be given to the insane soldiers for $50 a year.

Mr. ANTHONY. My recollection is that this sum used to be $15,000, but we are so fortunate now that Porto Rico has no insane soldiers. This item is put in there simply to keep that appropriation alive. They might have some next year.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE STORES, AMMUNITION.

For the development, manufacture, purchase, and maintenance of airplane bombs; of ammunition for small arms and for hand use for reserve supply; of ammunition for burials at the National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., and of ammunition for firing the morning and evening gun at military posts prescribed by General Orders, No. 70, Headquarters of the Army, dated July 23, 1867, and at National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several branches, including National Soldiers' Home at Washington, D. C., and soldiers and sailors' State homes; for manufacture and purchase of ammunition, targets, and other accessories for small arms, hand and machine gun target practice and instruction; and ammunition, targets, target materials, and other accessories which may be issued for small-arms target practice and instruction at the educational institutions and State soldiers and sailors' orphans' homes to which issues of small arms are lawfully made, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, $574,000.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HICKS. I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Kansas a question, because we are, all of us, interested in having our Army kept in the highest state of efficiency. Of course, there must be on hand vast quantities of guns and rifles of modern construction, and mounts and materials of all kinds. I find here items running into the millions for new equipment, and while I approve of keeping our Army properly equipped I am not prompted in asking why so much money is required? I am not criticizing it, because I believe in it.

Mr. ANTHONY. The item which the Clerk has just read calls for $574,000 for the development, manufacture, purchase, and maintenance of airplane bombs.

Mr. HICKS. I was speaking more of the other items that follow—the manufacture of arms, and overhauling ordnance stores, and supplies and automatic rifles, and so forth.

Mr. ANTHONY. The item that has just been read is probably the largest and most important of that type in the bill, and it is a field where there is ample room for development. The use of the airplane bomb is likely to occupy such a prominent part in future warfare that we felt it wise to go ahead and allow them ample money for the development of that type of bomb.

We have immense quantities of war material on hand, and it is going to be useful for probably a good many years to come; but it is necessary to allow a reasonable amount of money for the development of new types of artillery and new types of ammunition in order to keep our workmen at the arsenals and Government plants abreast with the progress of the times in these arts of manufacture.

Mr. HICKS. Do I understand the gentleman from Kansas, then, desires to have the impression that as to the items of manufacture of arms, $374,000, and $224,000 for automatic rifles, these sums will, probably, largely be for experimental purposes rather than for the procurement of new arms?

Mr. ANTHONY. Take, for instance, the manufacture of small arms. That will allow the Springfield Arsenal, which is our standard factory for the manufacture of that class of weapons, to proceed on the basis of turning out 40 rifles a day. The alternative presented to us was either to produce such a small quantity as that or else to leave the plant lying idle.

Mr. HICKS. These appropriations, then, will be to prevent our factories from becoming stagnant and in order that the plants shall be kept in a "stand-by" condition, so that we can call upon them when necessary?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. I think that is a commendable policy to adopt.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. HULL. I am very much interested in seeing that these factories are kept in a stand-by condition, especially with reference to the manufacture of rifles. But will the gentleman say whether they are developing the Springfield rifle from what it was to a modern rifle? I presume the gentleman knows that the Springfield rifle we used in the World War was the model of 1903. It is probably the best rifle that is manufactured in the world to-day, but the model is 20 years old. There are several improvements that have been proposed to make this rifle a modern rifle. I am very much interested in having the rifle brought up to date and then manufactured in small quantity, to see whether they have a better rifle than the present one, and when it is perfected the jigs, tools, and dies necessary to produce them in large quantities should be made and kept on hand. I have urged this on the Ordnance Department, but unfortunately there seems to be somebody putting on the brake somewhere, so that this rifle is not brought up and made modern.

Mr. ANTHONY. In reply to the gentleman's question I will say that the opinion of the military experts who came before our committee is to the effect that our service rifle, even though its general design may be about 20 years old, is still regarded as superior to any other military rifle in the world.

Mr. HULL. There is no question about that; but it is also true that the military experts agree that the rifle should be changed in many ways to make it even a better shooting rifle than it is to-day. Why do they not bring it up to the maximum of efficiency? That is the question.

Mr. HICKS. Could the Rock Island Arsenal bring it up to date?

Mr. HULL. They could bring it up to date if they wanted to, and they should be compelled to do so.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to call the attention of the subcommittee to what I believe to be the improper form of some of these items, grouping together matters radically different from one another. In framing an appropriation bill the aim is, or should be, to get similar matters together, instead of mixing different propositions all up in one paragraph and providing a very large appropriation to be spent just as the officer in charge of the matter may wish. I call the attention of the committee to the item on page 62:

For the development, manufacture, purchase, and maintenance of airplane bombs; or ammunition for small arms and for hand use for reserve supply.

This is a large and very important activity.

And we find it hooked up with a proposition to provide for firing salutes over deceased soldiers at soldiers' homes. When appropriation bills came from the committee of which I am a member we were severely criticized if we did not separate items that were different or for grouping dissimilar matters together and providing one great big appropriation for all of them without any division or distinction.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the criticism is a good one; but the gentleman will bear in mind that the ammunition for firing certain guns at national military homes has to be furnished by the Government, and this paragraph would authorize the purchase of such ammunition, if necessary, and its transfer to the soldiers' home authorities. So it is related to the paragraph.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And here is a provision for target practice at sailors' orphans' homes hooked up with one of the largest propositions that the Army has anything to do with. That is, we find here authority and a large amount of money for the development, manufacture, and purchase of airplane bombs, the development of firearms, inventions, and discoveries, their better use, and all that, hooked up with a small and radically different matter at a sailors' orphans' home.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Would not the gentleman think that we have enough powder and ammunition on hand to fire salutes for the next thousand years without buying any new powder?

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman will yield, there is no item in here for buying new powder. This is the language that has been carried for years, and the Government undoubtedly is turning over powder which it has on hand to these institutions to be used for this purpose.

Mr. HICKS. It says "for the purchase of ammunition for salutes."

Mr. ANTHONY. They do not actually buy the ordinary powder for that purpose if they have stocks on hand, which they undoubtedly have.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I respectfully suggest that paragraphs of the bill be arranged in such a way that the Congress can give some direction as to how the money of the Government is to be spent, and later have information as to how it has been spent.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

AUTOMATIC RIFLES.

For the purchase, manufacture, test, repair, and maintenance of automatic machine rifles, or other automatic or semiautomatic guns, including their mounts, sights, and equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture, to remain available until June 30, 1925, $224,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on page 63, line 7, after the word "the," to strike out the word "purchase."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL: Page 63, line 7, after the word "the," strike out the word "purchase."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there is no argument that I know of that can be used for the retention of the right to purchase automatic rifles at the present time. There may be some reason for this appropriation. Certainly there is no reason to leave in the bill the right of some one to buy something with which we are overstocked to-day. The curse and scandal of the recent war was the purchase of material during the war and after the war. I think we ought to go over these appropriation bills very carefully and hereafter take out wherever we can the word "purchase." It is left in, and then some one finds an appropriation that is unexpended, and gets hold of a man who has the right, and they purchase something. Billions of dollars of the people's money were worse than wasted in the recent war by this right to purchase.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the gentleman does not want to shut off the purchase of any improved or newly developed automatic rifle. For instance, the Browning automatic rifle probably represents the highest type of development of that arm; and if the Government acquires any of those weapons it has to acquire them under the Browning patents, as I understand it.

Mr. HULL. Certainly not. They have a great supply on hand at the present time; and not only that, but they have in their arsenals facilities to manufacture them if they want them.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. General Peirce, of the Ordnance Department, when before the committee on this item was interrogated as follows:

Mr. ANTHONY. What else do you intend to produce?
General PEIRCE. Some antiaircraft machine-gun mounts and some antiaircraft machine-gun adapters, model of 1917 tripods.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the Government pay Mr. Browning anything as a royalty for the use of this new machine gun?

General PEIRCE. The 50 caliber?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

General PEIRCE. We do not pay Mr. Browning directly. We procure these guns from the Colt Patent Firearms Manufacturing Co., who are Mr. Browning's licensees in this country, and an element of the cost is a royalty per gun.

The Army is short of 50-caliber machine guns. We produced none during the war, and the 50-caliber machine gun is the gun that we intend to mount upon our new planes for warfare in the air. I hope the gentleman does not want to prevent the acquirement of these Browning guns.

Mr. HULL. I think it is very questionable whether they ought to purchase these guns, but upon the gentleman's explanation I will withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TANKS.

For the purchase, manufacture, test, maintenance, and repair of tanks and other self-propelled armored vehicles, to remain available until June 30, 1925, $169,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL: Page 63, line 13, after the word "the," strike out the word "purchase."

Mr. HULL. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what is the reason why they want to be buying tanks at the present time?

During the war we developed tanks that were, some of them, too light, but for the most part they were too heavy. The tendency now is to develop a mobile tank that will have a speed of 25 or 30 miles an hour, enabling them to go over any country. There are two lines of development. There is the so-called Cristy tank, the development of which the War Department is closely following; and then they may want to build some tanks at the Government arsenals, and I presume at Rock Island. They are developing a tank that they have confidence in and which they feel may fulfill these requirements for the new tank.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield? I want to say that I sympathize with the purpose of the gentleman from Iowa in undertaking to curb the War Department in the use of appropriations for the purchase of unnecessary material for the Army of any kind. However, is it not a fact that the word "purchase" carried in the various items is a word that has been carried for many years, and does it follow that because the word "purchase" happens to be in the paragraph that the War Department must engage in the purchase of the articles mentioned? It is only carried as a matter of legislation in case the necessity should arise. I assume the gentleman from Kansas has investigated this matter and ascertained whether or not this power has been abused by the War Department. If not abused, then we ought to carry it.

Mr. ANTHONY. It has not been abused in regard to tanks.

Mr. HULL. I do not know about that; I rather think it has. I think if the gentleman will look it up he will find that you have purchased a number of tanks at an enormous outlay of money since the close of the war.

Mr. ANTHONY. Not out of new appropriations.

Mr. HULL. Yes; out of new appropriations or lump-sum appropriations given to them. That is the trouble. You leave the word "purchase" in, and when the time comes they find the money and they go out and buy a lot of stuff that they do not need. Take the harness that you bought during the war——

Mr. ANTHONY. If it will assure the gentleman I will read the itemization of what they intend to do under this appropriation. It is all to be handled at the arsenal, which, I suppose, will be in line with the gentleman's desire.

Mr. HULL. If that is the case there is no use in leaving the word in the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. But suppose the Rock Island Arsenal should fall down in the production of the type of tanks that the Government requires, and the Christy folks should bring out a tank that the Government did want, the gentleman does not want to prevent the War Department from the acquisition of a desirable tank?

Mr. HULL. I do if there is no use for it.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. We all know of our experience during the war. Does not the gentleman think that some time we can reach a state of development that would get us a tank that would kill people fast enough without squandering money on other tanks?

Mr. HULL. I have no objection to the War Department experimenting. The trouble is they have a lot of grafters, or did have during the war, that took our money and bought material that they knew at the time we did not need. I think it is time that Congress should put a curb upon these grafters. If you strike the word "purchase" out of the bill, they will have no right now or at any future time to buy stuff that they do not need. The chairman of the committee has made a plain and open confession that the use of this word in this paragraph is not necessary because they do not need it.

Mr. ANTHONY. If they build tanks at Rock Island Arsenal, they will have to buy the raw material, and the gentleman does not want to shut them off from buying raw material.

Mr. HULL. They have all the raw material in every arsenal that they want. They are filled up with a surplus of material and let them use it.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is steel and other material that is necessary to go into the tanks.

Mr. HULL. Well, you are throwing your money away.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am not able to agree with the chairman of the subcommittee or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] when they say that an unnecessary or improper word in an act should be retained simply in the belief that the officer in the exercise of his discretion will act wisely and that he will not abuse that discretion. It is a slothful and improper manner of legislation. If the Congress of the United States knows what it wants to do, we ought to write it in the law, and if it knows what it does not wish to do, it should write that into law. There are many cases in which an executive officer must be vested with a large discretion, and where that is necessary let the law carry proper words giving the discretionary power. But where Congress has information, knows what it wants to do, where it determines what it does not wish to do and can find words to express its wishes, then the words should find a place in the law. But this giving an executive officer discretion to use money with the idea that it will not be abused is very slothful and improper legislation, too much indulged in by Congress, and it ought to stop.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas to point out on page 63, lines 14, 15, or 16, anything about material for tanks. It says for the purchase, manufacture, test, repair, and maintenance of tanks.

Mr. ANTHONY. In the manufacture of tanks the material would be involved.

Mr. DALLINGER. If we strike out the word "purchase," they can manufacture all of the tanks they want to.

Mr. ANTHONY. The committee does not desire to strike that word out. It would be a mistake to do it. This is a technical matter. This committee does not want to arrogate to itself the authority to direct the War Department as between two types of tanks which to purchase. We have not that technical knowledge. I think it would be a great mistake for Congress to direct them in the purchase of military arms, in respect to the patent or the type or the invention that they must spend the money for.

Mr. HUSTED. Is it not true that if we strike that word out, they may go ahead and manufacture tanks out of any material they have on hand, but if they do not have some particular material on hand, absolutely necessary in the construction of one of these modern tanks, even though a small amount, insignificant in price, it could not be purchased, and the construction of the entire tank would be impossible?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is true.

Mr. HULL. Where do they get any authority to buy any material in that paragraph?

Mr. HUSTED. "For purchase."

Mr. HULL. It is the purchase of tanks; it is not the purchase of material.

Mr. HUSTED. That allows them to purchase a tank or to purchase material that goes into the manufacture of the tanks.

Mr. HULL. If it does, then we ought to reform our legislation. They could not buy material with that.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. This item reads as follows:

For the purchase, manufacture, test, maintenance, and repair of tanks.

That does not exclusively apply to the purchase but to the repair of tanks, and you must have material to repair tanks and purchase that material.

Mr. HULL. But when you strike out the word "purchase" you simply take away the right to purchase tanks and not anything else. They can go ahead and repair and manufacture. They can go ahead and experiment. There is no right under that but the right to purchase, and that is the right I want to take away; and I appeal to this Congress to take away that right, which has proven a scandal in the Army.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. As far as the word "purchase" is concerned, I am half inclined to the opinion that we would save a lot of money if it were stricken out of all of the Army appropriations for the next 12 months, and the country might be just as well off, but before I would go that far I would like to get a little more information. A good many wars are going on. I do not know just how many there are, but if this committee would tell us in the course of these debates just how many are going on, and whether there is being developed anything new and useful along these lines, it would be satisfactory to the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. I explained a few moments ago that this money would be used for the development of a new type of tanks, a tank that would be mobile and faster than any tank that we have.

Mr. LITTLE. I heard the gentleman. Is that the result of his conclusions or the result of observing other wars?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is the result of the opinions of technical men from the War Department.

Mr. LITTLE. Without intending to be unkind, permit me to say that I have not such a high regard for the opinion of these technical men. What I am trying to get at is this: There are wars going on all of the time everywhere. Can not we find out how many there are and find out if anywhere in these wars there is being developed practically anything new?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; the English have developed a tank of the type I speak of, which is capable of going across the country at from 25 to 30 miles an hour.

Mr. LITTLE. Is that developed in battle?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know that they have had it in battle. They have made the most marked advance in the development of the tank, and we are endeavoring to follow in their footsteps and keep abreast of this work. If the gentleman will permit, for the benefit of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], of this total item of $169,000 which is proposed to be spent for experimental and development work, $85,000 is to go for maintenance and $85,000 for repairs. Out of those two items $48,000 or thereabouts would go for salaries and $52,000 for wages, all of which I understand will be expended at the arsenal. They have no particular tank in view that they want to purchase outright. They think they will be able to manufacture at the Rock Island Arsenal a better tank than they will be able to buy, but I do not want the language so hedged about that if somebody does build a better tank than they can build they will be precluded from buying it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's amendment. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] by striking out the word "purchase" could stop all of the waste and all of what he denominated graft in connection with the purchase and acquisition of Army supplies, I would be with him. He confined most of his statements to waste concerning war purchases during our recent war, but the most commendable thing that I know of—and there are a good many commendable things—attached to the valuable service now being rendered by our colleagues, Mr. Reavis and Mr. McCullough, and a few of their associates is going after the waste and leakage that has occurred not only since the armistice was signed but that has occurred since the present administration has been in complete charge. I understand the indictments will be due next week on this great meat scandal, involving millions of dollars, that has arisen during the life of the present administration, and they are going to get action on that, and they ought to get action. If reports are true, there are men connected with it that ought to be in the penitentiary. These gentlemen who left this House and are now in the Department of Justice are doing splendid work, and I commend them for it.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman says I did not mention the graft that occurred after the war. I certainly did.

Mr. BLANTON. I accept the gentleman's statement.

Mr. HULL. I reiterate that that has been the most fatal of all, the graft that occurs after.

Mr. BLANTON. And ought to stop.

Mr. HULL. It occurs because we permit the use of words which are not necessary. This word is not necessary in this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. This applies to a certain kind of tank for offensive warfare. It reminds us of the evidence that has been accumulated concerning the purchase and acquisition of water troughs, which is absolutely disgusting to any decent individual.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman knows that that comes about because we leave words in bills that ought not to be left there, the right to purchase. All this scandal comes because of the right to purchase.

Mr. BLANTON. I am with the gentleman on protecting legislation and appropriations with every safeguard.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition. I think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] should be explicit when he uses the word "graft" in connection with the expenditure of an appropriation. As I understand, he uses that word in connection with the expenditure of appropriations made for the Ordnance Department since the armistice. Personally I have no knowledge of any questionable purchase or transactions that have been made by the Ordnance Department in recent years. I do know that General Williams and General Peirce, who are the heads of that department, are as honorable and as high types of Army officers as I have ever come in contact with, and they are both men in whom I have implicit confidence in reference to the expenditure of public funds; and if the gentleman from Iowa has any information which the House ought to have, he certainly should give it to us.

Mr. BLANTON. I will give the gentleman some reference. If he will go to our colleagues, Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota and Mr. WOODRUFF, and our former colleagues, Mr. Reavis and Mr. McCullough——

Mr. ANTHONY. I am referring——

Mr. BLANTON. They will give him enough evidence to keep him awake at night for two months thinking about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIELD ARTILLERY ARMAMENT.

For purchase, manufacture, and test of mountain, field, and siege cannon, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture, $400,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment: Page 63, line 17, after the word "for," strike out the word "purchase."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 63, line 17, after the word "for," strike out the word "purchase."

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say for information that no purchases are contemplated under this. It is all for development and experiments——

Mr. HULL. I understand it, and that is the reason I want the word stricken out. It is not necessary; it is superfluous to carry this word in there. If we should get into a war somebody would use the right to purchase a lot of material that is not necessary.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman will take for sights and equipment for field artillery, there is liable to be an invention to-morrow, some great improvement over what we have now, and it might be desirable to acquire some. We ought not to be precluded from that.

Mr. HULL. And somebody will come down here and get hold of somebody and work through an order. I do not say that General Williams or General Peirce are negligent. Somebody is, and somebody was negligent in the Ordnance Department and in the Quartermaster Department. It was not confined to our Army; it ran through every bureau of this Government; and this right to purchase is abused, frightfully abused, and I propose to offer at least to the Congress the opportunity to strike out that word. When you do not need it, let us strike it out.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman charge on his responsibility as a Member of this House that graft has been engaged in during the present administration in connection with these activities?

Mr. HULL. What does the gentleman mean by administration?

Mr. STAFFORD. The present Republican administration under President Harding.

Mr. HULL. I refer you to the Graham committee for their report on this graft——

Mr. STAFFORD. I am asking a direct question, whether the gentleman makes the charge of graft against the present Republican administration in the administration of these items? The gentleman can answer yes or no.

Mr. HULL. I want to escape and avoid the incentive for graft. Now we have the opportunity, and it will hurt nobody, because the chairman says the word is superfluous; so let us take it out.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is not superfluous. It is to carry on experiments and developments, and they have to buy material of all kinds.

Mr. HULL. They can not buy materials; they can only buy things. They do not buy material with it; they buy finished products; that is what they buy. Under these authorizations they buy the finished article. It is not experimental work that we want to stop. I am perfectly willing that they should experiment; but, for goodness' sake, let us stop the right to purchase the finished article because somebody has an industry which is going to be fostered. That is what you are doing.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, if the officers of the Army are as crooked and dishonest in the administration of these funds as the gentleman from Iowa seems to think they are, then we should strike out not only the word "purchase," as advocated by the gentleman from Iowa, but we should strike out the item itself and every other item in this bill which calls for the expenditure of money.

What does this item provide for? It provides for the purchase, manufacture and test of ammunition for mountain, field, and siege cannon, including their carriages, their sights, implements, equipment, and machinery necessary for their manufacture. If the word "purchase" is stricken out of this item, it would be impossible to buy any of those things which now may be necessary or which may hereafter become desirable for use in connection with the manufacture of field artillery. It would prevent the purchase of improved sights or equipment which may be patented during the year by parties outside of the War Department.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] intimates that these officers are so dishonest that we should not vest in them any purchasing authority. I do not believe it. I do not believe anything of the kind. I believe absolutely in the statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] that the officers at the head of the Ordnance Department of this Government are men of the highest character and that they would not permit any act of dishonesty to be committed in this department under their administration. I think we safely can trust them. If we can not trust them to the extent of investing them with this necessary purchasing power, then we certainly can not secure efficient results in the administration of this branch of the Army.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say anything at this time or consume any of the time of the committee in its consideration of this bill, because I am reasonably well satisfied with its status. But I do feel at this time that somebody at least on this side of the aisle should say something for the Army officer. He does not need any defense against the charge of dishonesty. Whatever may be the fault of an Army officer or a Navy officer, it is not that he is dishonest.

I want to say for the Army and the naval officer, having been in close touch with him for 12 years and having heard him before the committee not only before the war but during and since the war, that I have yet to see a single Army or Navy officer, a graduate of either of the academies, whose honesty and integrity has ever been questioned.

There are two things that you can say of the Army or Navy officer. He will not lie and he will not steal. That is not the trouble with Army and Navy officers. General Goethals tells us of the trouble and the weakness of the Army and Navy officers. They have been working all their lives for a client with an unlimited supply of money at their disposal, and they have never had to give the question of money any consideration, because that is not a thing that is demanded of them. The only thing demanded of an Army or Navy officer is results. We want results. Therefore he may be extravagant, for he spends money ruthlessly. That is not the case with all, but that is the rule generally, that he spends money ruthlessly, with a view only to obtaining results.

I believe there is no man who can truthfully say that the Army or Navy officer is not as a rule the most honest fellow in the world. These men are taught at West Point and Annapolis to hate a liar. They are taught to hate a thief. These young men go through that four-year course, and when they come out they despise a thief and they despise a liar. Those two things are emphasized in their instruction. They believe in manhood and courage, and manhood and courage are always accompanied, as a rule, with honesty and integrity.

Therefore, this present debate having assumed this angle to this extent, I thought it proper that these men, who can not speak on this floor themselves, should have some one speak for them who knows them, and I am delighted to bear testimony here to the fact that they are as truthful and as honest a bunch of fellows as ever served a government on earth. [Applause.]

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Assuming that everything the gentleman says is true and assuming that the gentleman says correctly that they are extravagant with the use of public money, does the gentleman think he ought at this time to give to Army officers the authority to expend millions of dollars for material when we already have on hand material enough to fight another war?

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman is stating a fact, I would unquestionably say "No"; I would not give it to them.

Mr. DALLINGER. It is a fact that we have this stuff on hand.

Mr. SISSON. It may be true that we have on hand more stuff along certain lines than we ought to have, and yet they may have a dearth of material of other kinds which are needed. I have given several years to the study of this question as a member of the committee, and it has been with us a great problem to know what they did have on hand and what they did not have on hand. Where they have had this material on hand it has been my belief and the policy of the committee—and the Congress has sustained us in it—not to have them buy more material. But when the testimony shows that the supply of material is exhausted, we can not, in my judgment, afford to assume a standstill policy in war material, any more than in all the other things necessary to put us in a posture of defense.

You know I am one of those fellows who believe that the United States Government ought to have the most deadly instrumentalities of war in its possession. I was criticized in the press because I once stated on the floor of this House with reference to the development of gas, poisonous gases—I was criticized because I wanted the United States Government to have the most deadly gas on earth.

I did not want any government to have more deadly gas than we have. I want to repeat that. If I could have my way, I would put in the hands of the American soldier a wand like that described by Bulwer Lytton in his Coming Race, where his hero would take the wand and by waving it once produce the substance which he calls vrillia and destroy the whole army of the enemy with one swoop of the wand, with absolutely no danger to the man who waved the wand. If I had such a wand, I would put it in the hands of Uncle Sam and I would enjoin him to keep the secret, and I would tell him: "When these other nations pester you, wave that wand and destroy every enemy of Uncle Sam and not lose a single American life." That is how much I love the American boy and his wife and his child. I want our Army to have the most deadly instrumentalities on earth, and when we are trying to keep pace with the balance of the world I am willing to spend a little money. I do not think it is extravagant. When by my vote I send out our boys to fight on the battle field, I want, if I can, to have the assurance in my own heart and mind that they are equipped with the most efficient and reliable instrumentalities of death that the ingenuity of man up to date has devised, and that is why I am for these appropriations. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on page 63, line 21, after the word "for," to strike out the word "purchase."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL: Page 63, line 21, after the word "for," strike out the word "purchase."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, during the eight years that I have been in Congress I have had a great deal to do with the Army officers. I admire them. I consider them on the whole honest. I do not, however, want to say that they are always well advised. I hope they are my friends. There is nothing personal in this matter with me. I know that it is hard to associate with these Army officers as my friend from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] has, and listen to their stories and not believe that all is well. But I listened to their story before they went into the World War. I heard them say, "Oh, we have plenty of material. We have Springfield rifles sufficient to fight this war." We gave them untold millions to prepare this country, and the amazing thing to me is, what did they do with the money that they had before this war? Is there any gentleman in Congress who can answer that question? They had millions of dollars and the greatest facilities in the world to manufacture the things to fight with, and when we came to fight we had to manufacture cannon out of old logs to practice with. What did they do with the money? I ask you gentlemen who want to defend the Army officers to answer that question—what did they do with the money? That is what the American people would like to know of you. I will tell you what they did. They stalled about preparedness. They camouflaged, they smoke-screened Congress and got away with it. But when you wanted material you had to borrow it, and for two years you turned the Treasury of the United States over to them and they spent $8,000,000,000 and never got one piece of fighting material on the firing line. That is the kind of preparedness you have when you let Army officers purchase material. When some gentleman says everybody is honest, I want him to explain that to the American people.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am sure my colleague does not want to be unfair to the officers of the Army.

Mr. HULL. I certainly do not.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to ask him if it is not a fact that the greater part of that $8,000,000,000 was spent, not under the supervision of officers of the Regular Army but under the supervision of representatives of the Council of National Defense, civilians who were brought in and given authority to expend that money?

Mr. HULL. That is absolutely true; but we spent millions of dollars to educate those boys in West Point to know how to conduct a war. The gentleman speaks about the money that was spent. Let us take one item. You spent about $2,000,000,000 for cantonments, and yet we spent all this money at West Point in educating boys to be engineers.

Why was it impossible for the engineers to go out and build those cantonments? They had the authority in the War Department somewhere to send those boys to build those cantonments instead of paying contractors 6, 8, and 10 per cent cost plus. That is one of the things I have wondered at. Why did they do it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. I am not trying to dig up ancient history. I am simply trying to call attention to some things so that they will not be repeated. Let us prepare this country as it should be prepared and not take the word of Army officers always. I will take them just as far as anyone will. When they are right they are all right, but when they are wrong, and we know they are wrong, let us analyze what they want and let us curb them. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] himself says that they admit that they are easily influenced.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. The gentleman said a few minutes ago that the Regular Army officers told this country before the World War that we were prepared. Did I understand the gentleman correctly?

Mr. HULL. We had assurances in the Committee on Military Affairs that we were prepared, as far as Springfield rifles were concerned, and certain other articles, and I remember very well that we were assured that we were to have 20,000 airplanes in May of 1918. We did not have them.

Mr. LINEBERGER. It was my experience and, I think, the experience of the country generally that at that time the Regular Army officers were preaching our lack of preparedness, and such men as General Wood were making speeches and trying to arouse the people of this country to prepare for the emergency that they saw was about to arise.

Mr. HULL. They preached preparedness of man power.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I think they preached preparedness and told of our unpreparedness in material as well.

Mr. HULL. So far as I know, the General Staff of the American Army never studied a supply system that would furnish supplies.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. I ask for five minutes more to answer the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 13 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MACGREGOR). The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 13 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman just stated that the General Staff of the Army had not made any study of supplies previous to this war and that the Regular Army officers had allowed the public to believe that we were adequately prepared with material. The gentleman is an experienced member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I ask him if he does not recall the report of the Chief of Staff, General Wotherspoon, made to the Secretary of War November 15, 1914, in which he said the United States Army, from the point of view of material, was so absolutely unprepared that it was like a house afire and nothing to put it out?

Mr. HULL. I presume that is true. I know we had reports on certain things—artillery, and so forth, and certain other matters. I referred to the Springfield rifle situation.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman's statement was a broad general statement which I think was a reflection on the Regular Army officers. As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] said, the Regular Army officers can not defend themselves. I was glad to hear the remarks which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] made on that subject from his experience. I do not think it is fair for us in the House to make general statements unless we are prepared to support them by facts.

Mr. ROACH. If the gentleman will yield, I did not understand the gentleman from Iowa to make any such general statement. I understood the gentleman said that prior to the war the Army officers were making claims that they had plenty of material, but that when the war came on they sang a different song.

Mr. HULL. I did not make the broad statement; I said prior to the war the officers said that we were prepared with Springfield rifles.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman said that we were unprepared in material, and that included everything. General Wotherspoon said that we had nothing adequate, from the point of view of world conditions and our lack of preparedness.

Mr. HULL. I know the gentleman is mistaken, because I offered on the floor of the House, year after year, amendments trying to prepare them with artillery. We wanted them to have a great deal of artillery.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman was speaking of the Springfield Arsenal——

Mr. HULL. I introduced an amendment—I understand the Army officers called attention to the lack of material, but what I can not understand is why with all the money we gave them and the great facilities they had we were not better prepared in this war.

Mr. HILL. I refer the gentleman to the report of General Wotherspoon, of November 15, 1914, which answers his question.

Mr. HULL. I am calling attention to the fact that we gave them the money in 1914 to manufacture dies, jigs, and tools, and the money was not expended. We gave them $5,000,000 to manufacture Springfield rifles, and they did not use it.

Mr. HILL. I am sure the gentleman does not want it understood by his remarks as to graft and grafters that the Army officers of to-day are doing anything of that kind.

Mr. HULL. I am not trying to charge the present Army officers with graft, but I am trying to remove all temptation to graft by striking out of the bill the word "purchase," which, as admitted by the chairman of the subcommittee, is a superfluous word.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I asked a question that might be construed as an inference of graft. I took the position that when the Democrats were in power the grafters should be named. I wanted to find out when we would finally perfect deadly weapons to be used in the case of war, when we are bragging about peace so far as we are concerned and about the wonderful progress our Nation is making with other nations. Unfortunately, the chairman of the subcommittee, in response to the gentleman from Iowa, said—I am sure he did not intend it and only spoke in a general way—that he knew of no graft in recent years. Of course, that would mean during the present administration, but he left the inference that he knew of graft in former years. I think the chairman of the subcommittee, if he does know, ought to give to the country such information as he may have along that line. I only desire to say, and I trust I may make myself clear, that I have the utmost confidence in such Army officers as I have met. I have found them to be perfect gentlemen, and whatever fight I may make is simply for economy, in an effort to reduce the taxes that the people are complaining of. We are unable to get a public building bill; we are unable to get a river and harbor bill, and by that I mean one for new projects; we are unable to make internal improvements, which I fought for during the war and since the war. We appropriate millions and millions of dollars to perfect deadly weapons, thereby adding to the tax on the people of the country, which they are now staggering under. That is what I was complaining of when I asked the gentleman from Iowa the question, and did not mean to indorse the word "graft" or "grafters" either in the past or in recent years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in fairness to the officers of the Ordnance Department it should be said—and I make this for the special benefit of the gentleman from Massachusetts, who represents the Watertown Arsenal, and the gentleman from Iowa, who represents in part the Rock Island Arsenal—that the Ordnance Department with these various appropriations will be able to carry on the experiments in the various arsenals with the smallest organization. It is not, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] infers, for the purchase of material that is now possessed by the Government. I am rather surprised that the gentleman should have any such thought, because he certainly must be conversant with the activities that go on at that great arsenal in his district, which is so dear to his heart. These various appropriations are merely for experimental purposes. The item under consideration, which is for the purchase of powder for experimentation to test some of our large improved 75-millimeter guns, has not any especial interest to the representative of the Rock Island Arsenal, because it applies to Picatinny Arsenal, where the Government powder plant is located, and does not apply, except remotely, to Rock Island. I know how solicitous the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is about bringing everything to Rock Island. He is a monopolist in that particular, and that is the only particular in which he is a monopolist. He is very vociferous about it.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. In a few minutes. He is always alert to magnify the activities of the arsenal which is so close to his district, across the river. One never sees him rise trying to pare down the appropriations for that arsenal, but I say in all candor that of all the officers who appeared before the subcommittee on the War Department appropriation bill there was no set of officers who knew their estimates better than the head of the Ordnance Bureau and his subordinates. They impressed the committee with their frankness; they impressed the committee with their thoroughness. They stated that these appropriations were the minimum that could be had to keep the work at a skeleton basis, and perhaps that is the reason why the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER], who represents the Watertown Arsenal, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], who represents so largely the Rock Island Arsenal, are protesting here. However, the policy of the administration and the policy of the War Department is to keep employed only a skeleton force, so that in case of trouble we will be prepared; we will have the dies and all of the other equipment to go ahead and multiply on a large scale the latest designs. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman knows that the Rock Island Arsenal is in Illinois, and I hope that he is not trying to convince the House that I am from Illinois.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no. And I have never made a special study of the number of Rock Island Arsenal employees who live across the river in Davenport, Iowa, which is in the gentleman's district. I can not explain the gentleman's solicitude for the workers at the Rock Island Arsenal except upon the hypothesis that a very great number of them live in his district. It would be absolutely inexplicable to me otherwise. I can not otherwise conceive of the gentleman being so energetic, even going to the extent of casting reflection upon the administration of his own party in his effort to espouse the cause of the workers and to increase their work, when there is no necessity for it in peace times.

Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Proving grounds, Army.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out line 9.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 64, strike out all of line 9.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, that is for a proving ground for the Army. It has been well said that our Army officers and our naval officers as a whole are absolutely honest and truthful. There is no question about that, but just as there is with all rules applicable to any other class of individuals, there is an exception once in a while. It is amusing to remember how the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] would get up here under the applause of every Republican Member of this House some time back and speak of the stupendous frauds upon the country that were possible only because of the dishonesty of some officers. I say that it is amusing to think of that, and to now have it asserted by orthodox Republicans that it was all buncombe, and to have the gentleman from Illinois sit silent when he is attacked upon it. It is especially amusing when we remember the present conditions. The most important investigation in the Department of Justice right now is on the alleged great meat fraud. Every bit of this late scandal has occurred since the gentleman had his investigation, and since his party has been in complete power in the White House, in the House of Representatives, and in the Senate. Every feature of that meat transaction has occurred since that time, and if the allegations are true it shows dishonesty upon the part, not of the great force of Army and Navy officers—no; because, as I say, as a rule they are honest to the core—but upon some officer or officers; that they have a black sheep in their flock occasionally. So we can not dismiss this proposition, either Republicans or Democrats, by getting up here and speaking of the general rule and forgetting that there is an exception. These investigations must continue to go on whether Democrats or Republicans are in power. It is only by just such careful investigation and watchfulness that we can safeguard the sacred money of the taxpaying people of America.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, that was offered as a pro forma amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEACOAST DEFENSES, UNITED STATES.

ARMAMENT OF FORTIFICATIONS.

For purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon for coast defense, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture, $403,500.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the committee with reference to where it is contemplated that this money will be spent.

Mr. STAFFORD. I may say that principally this appropriation will be expended in the gentleman's district, at the Watertown Arsenal, particularly that part which applies to the 16-inch and the 14-inch mounts.

Mr. DALLINGER. How many of these mounts are going to be manufactured?

Mr. STAFFORD. There are four 14-inch railway mounts that are in course of construction. That is something new in ordnance development. During the war, as the gentleman knows, we had some experimental railway mounts. These are now being developed so as to provide for four 14-inch portable railway mounts. The full scheme has not been developed, and I am not supposed to divulge matters of some secrecy as to where they are to be used, and I hope the gentleman will not press me in that particular.

Mr. DALLINGER. May I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if he will tell the committee how much the Budget estimate was for this item?

Mr. STAFFORD. The Budget estimate was the identical amount that has been recommended by the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. Page 65, line 13, after the word "for," strike out the word "purchase."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I hope no one thinks I impugn the motives of the great mass of Army officers. I do not. I think, however, that the Ordnance Department of the United States is mistaken, was mistaken before this war, and so far as I know they are still mistaken in advocating one policy, and it is with that policy that I am at war, and that is the policy of openly advocating and openly encouraging the building up of industries which must make a profit out of war munitions. We talk about taking the profit out of the manufacture of war munitions in war times. How much better and how much easier it is to lay the foundation now and take it out in peace times. There are in this country to-day some industries which must receive orders to exist for material to make war, which is the murder of people in mass, and I think it is one of the most contemptible things that Congress ever does to make an appropriation to give to somebody an opportunty to profiteer upon the manufacture of material to murder people in peace time when it is not necessary. That is what you are doing by this bill. Every Army bill and every Navy bill that you present to this House carries with it millions of dollars of the people's money that you are giving to some industry to manufacture something with which to murder people. You say we must do that to prepare this country. I say to you that it is not necessary and when you carry out that principle you have less preparedness than if you manufacture those things in your public arsenals where the people know that they are being manufactured and not sold to some other country with which to murder their neighbors. That is the thing I am trying to strike out of your bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 12777. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the cities of Grand Forks, N. Dak., and East Grand Forks, Minn., or either of them, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Red River of the North;

H. R. 13139. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the Great Southern Lumber Co., a corporation of the State of Pennsylvania, doing business in the State of Mississippi, to construct a railroad bridge across Pearl River at approximately 1½ miles north of Georgetown, in the State of Mississippi;

H. R. 13195. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Missouri, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the St. Francis River, in the State of Missouri;

H. R. 13474. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the county of Winnebago, the town of Rockford, and the city of Rockford, in said county, in the State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rock River;

H. R. 13493. A bill to authorize the State road department of the State of Florida to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Escambia River, near Ferry Pass, Fla.; and

H. J. Res. 16. A joint resolution providing for pay to clerks to Members of Congress and Delegates.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 11626) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Baton Rouge, La., in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 49 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to return to page 49 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. SISSON. One moment. I would like to know what the amendment is. Report it first.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman for information. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. I object until I know what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to its being reported for information?

Mr. SISSON. No; not for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EDMONDS: Page 49, line 19, after the word "appropriation," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and add the following: "Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated under the title shall be used for the purpose of giving exhibitions to the public upon Government flying fields, and no public exhibition shall be given unless a bond of indemnity from damages to person or property shall be furnished the Government by the parties desiring the exhibition."

Mr. SISSON. I have no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to page 49 for the purpose indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. EDMONDS: Page 49, line 19, after the word "appropriations," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and add the following: "Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated under the title shall be used for the purpose of giving exhibitions to the public upon Government flying fields, and no public exhibition shall be given unless a bond of indemnity from damages to person or property shall be furnished the Government by the parties desiring the exhibition."

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment with the idea that if public exhibitions are desired by different exhibitors of flying machines of the Government that the Government should not be responsible for any accident that may occur. On yesterday, or last night, I went over a claims bill which will carry over $200,000 of damages against the Government, and which undoubtedly the Government will have to pay. Twenty-two people injured, several automobiles burned up, and five people killed. We had another accident in Florida a short time ago where three people were killed, and another out in Texas. It is manifestly unfair to let exhibitors use these machines for advertising purposes or for the purpose of making money by charging admission without protecting the Government at least by giving a bond of indemnity against any loss.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am in thorough sympathy with the gentleman's amendment, but does not the gentleman think we ought to provide the bond should be given in such sum as the Secretary would require?

Mr. EDMONDS. I would have no objection. The intention was, of course, to require a sufficient bond.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I assume that would be inferred, but I thought that would make it clear. However, I do not offer——

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama is a good one, because that designates specifically the person responsible for the fixing of the bond and the regulations governing the bond.

Mr. EDMONDS. Could that be added to my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment can be modified or an amendment can be offered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BANKHEAD to the amendment offered by Mr. EDMONDS: After the word "indemnity" insert the words "in such sum as the Secretary of War may require."

Mr. STAFFORD. May we have the entire proposed amendment reported as it would be modified by the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified by the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 49, line 19, after the word "appropriation," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and add: "Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated under the title shall be used for the purpose of giving exhibitions to the public upon Government flying fields, and no public exhibition shall be given unless a bond of indemnity in such sum as the Secretary of War may require from damages to person or property shall be furnished to the Government by the parties desiring the exhibition."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I question whether we should go to the extent that would be possible under the gentleman's amendment. The gentleman's amendment would forbid flying under Army auspices, such as was undertaken a few months past at Selfridge Field near Detroit. No money whatsoever, under this proposed amendment, could be used for such purposes. I do not think it is the intention of the gentleman to forbid such exhibitions as that.

Mr. EDMONDS. Let me relate the incident that happened in West Virginia.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. What sort of an exhibition has the gentleman in mind? How about the ordinary training of these men upon the flying fields? I am heartily in favor of the gentleman's amendment, providing there is nothing in it which in any way precludes the training of men as flyers upon these fields.

Mr. EDMONDS. There is nothing in it that would preclude that.

Mr. BUTLER. There is nothing in it that would preclude that?

Mr. EDMONDS. No. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] to the fact that this is a public exhibition that I am complaining about; not the ordinary work in the field, but giving a public exhibition on a governmental field. In this case in West Virginia it was advertised that they were going to bring in a new kind of plane, and the people were assembled on the property next door, and the machine went up and fell down and struck a bunch of automobiles, and the automobiles were burned up.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman's amendment would forbid such exhibitions as were given at Selfridge Field.

Mr. EDMONDS. They have no business to give public exhibitions on Government flying fields.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was interesting to thousands of persons.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; and those thousands of persons were in trouble.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Would the gentleman from Pennsylvania accept an amendment which would permit exhibitions on Army fields?

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman will put in the word "official," that would make it all right. Otherwise they might be precluded from giving exhibitions to their own officials.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by inserting the words "except such exhibitions as those under the control and direction of the War Department."

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kansas indicate to the Clerk where his amendment would come in?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, while they are perfecting the amendment, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] stated that we were spending millions of dollars in the purchase of munitions from private establishments for murdering people. I fear the gentleman from Iowa is not speaking by the card. I know, after listening to the hearings on the estimates for these various appropriations, of no case where we are purchasing munitions from private plants to the extent even of hundreds of thousands except in the case of aircraft; and I differ with the gentleman from Iowa that we should manufacture everything in Government establishments. It is fair to say to the committee that the policy adopted by the aircraft service is to develop private aircraft establishments. In European countries commercial aircraft has gone away beyond what has been attempted in this country, and the only way we can develop that wonderful activity in this country is to give some encouragement to these large private manufacturing establishments for the development of the latest and best in aircraft machines.

It is not difficult to understand the view of the gentleman from Iowa. He lives close by the Rock Island Arsenal, and has large numbers of people living in his district who are employed at that arsenal. He is solicitous to have everything manufactured in the Rock Island Arsenal. But I think he will agree with me that it is not a good economic policy or good governmental policy, especially as this new art of flying is in its infancy, relatively, to have every available development effected in aircraft done in his establishment.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. I want to ask the gentleman this, that if this country should become involved in war, does he not think we would have to depend largely upon private industries?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. One of the main purposes in keeping this word "purchase" in the various items is that when Congress is not in session in the event of any warlike trouble they shall have the authority to go ahead, and when Congress meets for the Committee on Appropriations to recommend appropriations of money in large amounts to carry out the authority given to the War Department in these various paragraphs. It is to keep alive these authorizations that these items are inserted.

Mr. FIELDS. Should we not give them sufficient encouragement to keep intact their organizations?

Mr. STAFFORD. The work now is done mainly in Government establishments. Only in aircraft are we pursuing a different policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] to the fact that the amendment is not capable of being amended in the third degree and would not be in order at this time.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer this as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. EDMONDS: Page 49, line 19, after the word "appropriation," strike out the period and insert a colon and "Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated under the title shall be used for the purpose of giving exhibitions to the public other than those under the control and direction of the War Department upon Government flying fields, and no public exhibitions shall be given unless a bond of indemnity in such sum as the Secretary of War may require shall be furnished to the Government by the parties desiring the exhibition."

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to the original amendment.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the latter part of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], as read, would negative the earlier part of it. It says that no public exhibition shall be given except under the direction of the War Department, and then it goes on to say that no exhibition shall be given unless a bond is given.

Mr. EDMONDS. There are two kinds of exhibition. One is on a governmental flying field and the second one is a public exhibition, like those given around in villages and towns.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Does it say that?

Mr. EDMONDS. It does. The modification is as to the exhibitions given on governmental flying fields. The other is an exhibition given to the public.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I only heard the amendment read. I have not looked at it. It did not strike me as meeting the point that gentlemen discussing it had in mind.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; it does.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the parliamentary situation, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] obtained permission to offer the whole as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. As a substitute for the other; but unless the gentleman from Alabama withdraws his amendment, it will have to be put.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want my amendment incorporated into the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it is incorporated into the substitute.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment to the original amendment will be withdrawn and the question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama incorporated in the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it is incorporated in the substitute offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS].

Mr. SEARS. I ask that it be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The substitute of Mr. EDMONDS was again read.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment to insert after the word "exhibition" in both places where it occurs the word "flights," so that it will read "exhibition flights."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment to the substitute which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BULWINKLE to the substitute: After the word "exhibition" strike out the letter "s" and insert the word "flights."

Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that under this proposed amendment a private manufacturing concern like the Curtiss Airplane Co. could not conduct an exhibition without giving a bond to the Government to protect those who might be injured by reason of any accident that happened during the exhibition.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. ANTHONY. It covers only exhibitions conducted under the auspices of the War Department.

Mr. MacGREGOR. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] to say it is divided into two parts, and that it is intended to cover every exhibition.

Mr. EDMONDS. No; it does not do that. Frankly if the Curtiss people want to make these flights I wish they would put up a bond, but this does not provide for that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

The amendment to the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute as amended.

The substitute as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, manufacture, and test of chemical warfare gases or other toxic substances, gas masks, or other offensive or defensive materials or appliances required for gas-warfare purposes, including all necessary investigations, research, design, experimentation, and operations connected therewith; purchase of chemicals, special scientific and technical apparatus and instruments; construction, maintenance, and repair of plants, buildings, and equipment, and the machinery therefor; receiving, storing, and issuing of supplies, comprising police and office duties, rents, tolls, fuel, gasoline, lubricants, paints and oils, rope and cordage, light, water, advertising, stationery, typewriters and adding machines, including their exchange, office furniture, tools, and instruments; for incidental expenses; for civilian employees; for libraries of the Chemical Warfare Service and subscriptions to periodicals which may be paid for in advance; for expenses incidental to the organization, training, and equipment of special gas troops not otherwise provided for, including the training of the Army in chemical warfare, both offensive and defensive, together with the necessary schools, tactical demonstrations, and maneuvers; for current expenses of chemical projectile filling plants and proving grounds, including construction and maintenance of rail transportation, repairs, alterations, accessories, building and repairing butts and targets, clearing and grading ranges, $650,000.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I desire to take this opportunity to call the attention of the House to a bill which I introduced some time ago, known as H. R. 13574, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to erect a monument at Fort Pierre, S. Dak., to commemorate the explorations and discoveries of the Verendrye brothers.

History records that in the year 1742 Francois de la Verendrye and Joseph Louis de la Verendrye, sons of Pierre Gaultier de Verennes Sieur de Verendrye, of Three Rivers, Canada, set out from the Mandan villages of the upper Missouri on an extensive tour of exploration into that vast and unknown region lying between the Missouri River and the Pacific. The specific object of their quest was the "sea of the West." While the "sea of the West" does not seem to have been discovered by them, they did make some exceedingly important discoveries and explorations, which added enormous stretches to the territory of New France and gave to the French nation most of that territory embraced in what later came to be known as the Louisiana Purchase.

After enduring innumerable hardships and privations they returned from their expedition in the early spring of 1743 and on the 30th day of March solemnly took possession of the huge territory covered by their explorations in the name of the King of France. In commemoration of their act and as an evidence of physical possession they deposited in the earth on a high bluff on the west bank of the Missouri River a leaden tablet, suitably inscribed, and erected over it a stone monument. This bluff is now a part of the city of Fort Pierre, S. Dak. The point on the crest of the bluff where the tablet was buried commands a most magnificent and awe-inspiring view of the valleys of both the Missouri and Bad Rivers. It also overlooks the beautiful State capitol building just across the river. It would be difficult to find a more sightly place for a public memorial, and certainly none could be more appropriate at which to commemorate the discoveries of these cavaliers of France.

While it was known to the delver into the history of the great Northwest that such a tablet had been placed, no one had been able to find it, as the stone monument erected over it must have disappeared within a few years after its erection. On the 17th day of February, 1913, some school children, while playing upon the bluff, accidentally stumbled upon it Nearly two centuries of erosion and wash had finally bared it to the elements. Fortunately it fell almost immediately into the hands of the secretary of the State department of history and now rests in the archives of the Commonwealth at the State capitol.

This bill proposes the erection of a permanent memorial, at a cost not to exceed $25,000. The erection is to be done under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of the Interior after the model and design of the proposed monument shall have been passed upon by the Fine Arts Commission.

As a part of my remarks I ask to have printed in 8-point type Senate concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota asking the Congress of the United States to provide the necessary appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated, in 8-point type. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution is as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution memoralizing Congress to give careful and favorable consideration of House bill No. 13574.

"Whereas on the 30th day of March, 1743, the Verendrye brothers, commissioned by the King of France, did at the present site of the city of Fort Pierre, S. Dak., make formal claim to the region now embraced in the Northwestern States of our Union, and in witness of such claim did bury in the earth a plate of lead upon which was inscribed the evidence of such claim; and

"Whereas while history records such event, the exact place of the burying of such evidence of claim remained a mystery until Sunday, the 17th day of February, 1913, a period of 170 years, when some school children while engaged in play accidently discovered and secured same, which evidence is now the property of South Dakota; and

"Whereas while this matter is, of course, of interest to the State of South Dakota, but in a broader sense of national historical moment, not, of course, in a class with Plymouth Rock, but of far more moment from a national historical event than many others which have been recognized; and

"Whereas a bill is now pending in Congress, known as H. R. 13574, providing for the properly marking of the site as an event in national history worthy of consideration: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the senate of the State of South Dakota (the house of representatives concurring), That it is the desire of this body that a careful and conscientious consideration of the merits of H. R. 13574 be given by the Members of Congress, individually and collectively, and if your honorable bodies find that the event from a national historical standpoint warrants your favorable consideration, the citizens of this great State will ever cherish the memory of your acts, but if upon such careful consideration you deem the matter unworthy of your favorable consideration, we will abide by your decision uncomplainingly: Be it further

"Resolved, That engrossed copies of this preamble and resolution be prepared by the secretary of the senate, signed by the presiding officers of the senate and house of representatives and forwarded to Congressman WILLIAMSON, the Secretary of the Senate, the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to his honor the President of the United States, Warren G. Harding.

"CARL GUNDERSON,
"President of the Senate.
"A. B. BLAKE,
"Secretary of the Senate.
"E. O. FRESCOLN,
"Speaker of the House.
"WRIGHT TARBELL,
"Chief Clerk of the House."

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL BOARD FOR PROMOTION OF RIFLE PRACTICE—QUARTERMASTER SUPPLIES AND SERVICE FOR RIFLE RANGES FOR CIVILIAN INSTRUCTION.

To establish and maintain indoor and outdoor rifle ranges for the use of all able-bodied males capable of bearing arms, under reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice and approved by the Secretary of War, for the employment of labor in connection with the establishment of outdoor and indoor rifle ranges, including labor in operating targets; for the employment of instructors; for clerical services; for badges and other insignia; for expenses incidental to instruction of citizens of the United States in markmanship, and their participation in international matches, $20,000.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask my friend from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] if this contemplates the purchase of any additional land for rifle practice?

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand it does not.

Mr. HUDSPETH. What is the purpose of the expenditure of this $20,000?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is practically all for clerical services and employees.

Mr. HUDSPETH. You have a number of rifle ranges throughout the West?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Is it the purpose to keep up those rifle ranges and continue target practice upon them?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is. The appropriations are made for conducting National Guard target practice and target practice of other branches under the different items of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIELD ARTILLERY SCHOOLS.

For the purchase of textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, instruments, and matériel for instruction; employment of technical, special, clerical, and temporary clerical services; and for other necessary expenses of instruction, at the Field Artillery Schools at Fort Sill, Okla., $18,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if it is his own remarks?

Mr. CRAMTON. My own remarks, with some few clippings. It is a speech that I had prepared to give a few days ago but was diverted, and I still have it in my system.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to the gentleman extending his own remarks, but I would like to protect the RECORD from a mass of press clippings.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will submit it to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; I do not want to act as censor.

Mr. CRAMTON. They are my own remarks, as I say, with a few clippings.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to the gentleman's own remarks, but otherwise I object.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses, sergeant-instructors, $500,000.

Mr. HILL. Mr Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go back to line 5, page 76, to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to return to page 76, line 5. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the right to object until the amendment is reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 76, line 5, strike out $1,250,000 and insert $1,465,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. HILL. I am glad the gentleman from Texas has reserved the objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I will reserve the objection if the gentleman wants to speak. I did object.

Mr. HILL. I was talking with the chairman of the subcommittee at the time the item was read.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. Chairman, I feel rather guilty, because I was engaging the gentleman in conversation while the Clerk was reading the item in which the gentleman from Maryland is much interested.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, at the moment this particular item was read I was talking with the chairman about what would be a reasonable amount for me to offer from the point of view I expect to present to the House for this item. This year the bill provides for the procurement of forage, bedding, and so forth, for animals for the National Guard, $1,250,000. Last year the House provided $1,400,000. The War Department now asks for $1,465,000. The situation in reference to the National Guard horses is this: There are at present on hand 7,703 horses. The National Guard has arranged to receive from the Regular Army 2,445, which will make a total of 10,148. They have on hand 7,703 horses to-day which are allocated in units of 32, 4,145 to the National Guard Infantry, 3,403 to the National Guard Field Artillery, 55 for the Signal Corps, and 40 mules.

The Milita Bureau states that they have 26 troops of Cavalry and 90 of Field Artillery that have no horses, and it needs 32 to a troop.

Out of the appropriation which they had last year there were $375,000 not expended, because of insufficient appropriations for caretakers. I would like, at the rate of $160 per horse, to put in such an amount as will take care of the horses for the existing units. We gave them 8,022 horses last year.

Mr. BLANTON. For Cavalry?

Mr. HILL. Cavalry and Field Artillery.

Mr. BLANTON. How many Cavalry horses did we use in France during the recent war; any?

Mr. HILL. We used the Cavalry on the Texas border.

Mr. BLANTON. How many did we use in France?

Mr. HILL. The British used thousands of Cavalry horses in the Battle of the Marne with great effect.

Mr. BLANTON. How many did we use?

Mr. HILL. We used horses on some fronts, but there were no actual American Cavalry engagements.

Mr. BLANTON. If we did not use them in the late war, why do we need them in peace times?

Mr. HILL. We did use them in the late war, and we could have used Cavalry in October, 1918, in France, north of Verdun. We need them in peace times, we need Cavalry to patrol the Texas border. There has been formed in the National Guard field artillery and cavalry units, and they need 32 horses per unit. We have no National Guard Cavalry in my district, I want to say to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. We have plenty of Cavalry on the Texas border.

Mr. HILL. In the Regular Army.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. HILL. These are National Guard troops, and you needed National Guard Cavalry on the border in 1916. All we ask for is to give as much money as they had last year in order that there may be no——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a secret conspiracy between the gentleman from Maryland and others on the committee, and I object.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak on the same subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, it has been a common thing for some years to say that cavalry is out of date. At the time of the great attack made by General Mangin on the flank of the German Army there was not an American present who was not longing for a cavalry division to charge in at any risk and complete the victory. The Germans would never have gotten out if we had had cavalry there.

The end of the war developed a strange fact, probably not very much known. In Palestine, under General Allenby, the English Army started the capture of Beersheba. It was far away from any water, and they had to do it in one day. They fought all day in front of Beersheba, and all of their infantry attacks were repulsed. Finally they sent a division of cavalry forward, which charged the entrenchments and the ditches and the walls, and captured that town at the end of the day. I am talking now of what was told me by an eyewitness, an American observer, who was there from our Army. From that time afterwards, attacks on trenches where there was not too much barbed wire were always conducted by cavalry and not by infantry. A very strange thing took place at one fortified hill where the attack was made by cavalry with orders not to dismount. One of the units in that attack thought that it was safer for the men to dismount and fight on foot. Those men were almost wiped out, while the others came with little loss into their place at the top of the hill. The reason is that where a machine gun is playing over a field and there is, say, half a mile to go, the cavalry can do it in a single minute at a gallop, while the infantry take from 10 to 20 minutes going forward in a slow skirmish line. The cavalry, therefore, get through without loss, while the infantry are destroyed.

I speak for this supply of forage. We are losing all of our horses because of the automobile. The only way that we can maintain a fitting army for the future, in the face of all the modern machine guns, is to grant abundant supplies to our cavalry.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Is it not well known that the American Army suffered from the great lack of horses upon the western front during the war?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think that is true, but I was not there, unfortunately. The gentleman was and can speak. There are men who can tell you. Horses were used to carry ammunition to the front. It could not be carried by wagons. After they got to the muddy roads that were always on the front, horses took the ammunition on each side and carried it up to the front.

Mr. BLANTON. But we are not engaged in European conflict now. We are at peace, and we are hoping for peace for 25 years.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. BLANTON. Why should we be so fearful about not having enough horses in peace times?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Because it takes at least three years to train a cavalryman.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What is the purpose of all this appropriation, of all this legislation, if not to prepare us for war which may come?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes; it is preparedness. I urged that upon this House before this last war. I got no response then, and I have been keeping silent now, because I see that men all over the House are beginning to realize that if we wish peace we must prepare for war and be ready to defend ourselves.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, on this item of forage for the National Guard I want to remind the House how easy it is for the House in its enthusiasm to respond to local sentiment or request and appropriate more money than is necessary for the purpose. Last year when we were on this bill the committee brought in, I think, $800,000 for forage for the National Guard. The House in its enthusiasm increased the amount over the protests of our committee to $1,400,000. The evidence taken by the committee this year shows that the War Department will not expend all of that amount by $375,000. The Militia Bureau reports that of the $1,400,000, to which amount you gentlemen increased the item, $375,000 will revert to the Treasury on July 1.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. What was the item recommended by the committee to the House?

Mr. ANTHONY. Eight hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. So that they did spend considerably more than the amount the committee recommended?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; a little over $100,000.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. So both the committee and the House were wrong?

Mr. ANTHONY. The committee wanted to cut down expenses.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does not that indicate that the confidence which the House placed in them was well founded, because they did not spend it all, they economized?

Mr. STAFFORD. They spent $200,000 more than we thought they should spend.

Mr. ANTHONY. They economized because the House placed a limitation upon the bill that they should not recognize any more mounted units?

The Clerk read as follows:

For office rent, etc., instructors, $5,000.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In connection with the amendment which I offered in reference to National Guard horses, I want to insert in the RECORD a brief extract from a letter written by Maj. Gen. George C. Rickards, Chief of the Militia Bureau in the War Department, to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], chairman of the subcommittee, and I ask unanimous consent to incorporate it in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extract referred to is as follows:

3. In order that I may not be misunderstood, I shall discuss each item in detail.

a. Forage, etc., for animals: The estimate is decreased by $215,000, or $150,000 less than the amount provided for 1923. The Guard has now 7,703 animals, and the War Department has agreed to furnish 2,445 horses as free issue after June 30, 1923. The $1,465,000 allowed by the Budget will barely forage the above animals under the most rigid measures of economy. The development, training, and growth of the guard is now seriously hampered as to field artillery and cavalry because of lack of animals, there being, at the present time, 90 field batteries and 26 cavalry troops without any horses, while many of the other units have much less than authorized allowance. The National Guard can not accept the 2,445 horses from the Regular Army unless we have sufficient funds with which to provide forage and caretakers for them. The States have gone to considerable expense and much trouble to organize field artillery and cavalry in order to play their part in the scheme of national defense. Many of the mounted units to which horses have not been furnished are now verging on a state of disintegration. That many of them will disintegrate, if not furnished their proper equipment, is beyond doubt. In this connection you are informed that the program necessary to bring the National Guard up to a total strength of 215,000 will require a sum total of 511 horsed units, and the 10,148 animals which the National Guard would have, after the War Department has turned over to us 2,445 more, would provide less than 20 animals per unit. Wastage between now and the end of the fiscal year 1924 will very materially reduce this number. So that, at the end of the period for which appropriations are being made, we can safely estimate that each horsed unit will have only about 50 per cent of its allowance of animals.

Mr. HILL. The National Guard should have the horses they require for their essential mounted units.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous: Travel allowance due enlisted men on discharge; interest on deposits due enlisted men; warrant officers and two staff sergeants, for duty in the Cadet Corps headquarters; two master sergeants; staff sergeants; additional pay for length of service; in all, $15,418.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, are the appropriations for enlisted men in the Military Academy in addition to the appropriation for the enlisted strength in the other portions of the bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. They are included in the strength of the Regular Army.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. So the appropriation for pay of the Army in the other sections of the bill does not cover them?

Mr. ANTHONY. They are put under the West Point appropriations, although their strength is included in the strength of the Regular Army.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. That appropriation in the other section eliminated them, so far as the estimates are concerned?

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand that is the case.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Now, while the gentleman is on his feet I would like to ask a question. On page 78, line 22, "Constructing quartermaster, in addition to his regular pay, $1,000." Why is that provision made in the case of the constructing quartermaster and not in reference to other quartermasters?

Mr. ANTHONY. Because of the important work going on for the last 8 or 10 years this appropriation has been made to give the quartermaster in charge of construction $1,000 a year extra. He has easily saved the Government, in my opinion, fifty times the amount of his extra salary in the work which he has done in personally supervising the construction of that work. We have given him that much liberty in doing the work. On every job to my knowledge in the last few years he has completed it at a less cost than any of the bids submitted at the time for the construction.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the supply, maintenance, and upkeep of athletic grounds and stands, $20,640.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL: Page 84, line 2, after the amount "$20,640," change the period into a colon and add the following: "Provided, That hereafter the authorities at the United States Military Academy are authorized to charge admission to all athletic contests in which the cadets take part, and the funds received from such charge shall be used solely for the improvement of the athletic facilities at the United States Military Academy."

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise the point of order on the proposed amendment.

Mr. HILL. I ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order for a moment.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. I notice that Mr. MCKENZIE's name was on the top of the amendment and was scratched out. I notice the letter which the gentleman introduced a moment ago with his other amendment had been written to the distinguished chairman of the committee. I heard something the other day about "wet nurses." There is no "wet nurse" for this committee, is there?

Mr. HILL. No. I will say to the gentleman that that question could not be raised on the facts; but the gentleman's remark gives me an opportunity to say something which I very much wish to say. I am very glad to say that, although there are, in my opinion, certain needed increases for national defense, yet there is most excellent cooperation on this bill between the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations and the House Military Affairs Committee.

And I wish to take this opportunity to say another thing, and that is this: At various times on these appropriation bills I may perhaps have been too enthusiastic last year for certain provisions of national defense, and I came into some clashes with some members of the committee, but I want to say I think the two members of this subcommittee, whom, I regret, will not be Members of the next House, and who, I hope, will be Members of the following House, have rendered this country splendid service by their conscientious endeavor to give the best kind of national defense, and I personally regret very much that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] will not be on this Appropriations Committee next year. [Applause.] I hope they will be back soon. To the extent that that is "wet-nursing," make the most of it, I say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Did the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I reserved the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I indorse very heartily the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL], because it meets with the hearty approval, so far as I know, of the authorities of the Military Academy. Now, it is necessary for you to understand a little bit about this matter, because it has been heretofore rather contrary to the rule of both academies to charge anything for admission to athletic sports. Athletic games have reached a proportion in the expenditure of money now so that to meet the demands of the public and build a stadium that will be sufficient amply to take care of these throngs of people that come from all over the United States to attend these great athletic sports the expenditure runs up into the millions, and with a charge of a very reasonable fee the authorities at the academy would be able to build a magnificent stadium, a stadium like the ones which are being built by other schools—one in Chicago and other great cities—costing millions of dollars, and yet not one dollar is appropriated from the institution, not one dollar is appropriated directly from the State universities. Simply an authority is given by the authorities of the universities to make a reasonable charge to these great athletic fields to those people who desire to see the athletic sports. That makes it self-sustaining and takes it out of the field of taxation. Now, I am not in favor of appropriating vast sums out of the General Treasury to furnish entertainment for the comparatively small percentage of people who may attend these great athletic games, but I am in favor of giving the authorities of the institutions, whether the academy at West Point or the authority to any State university or any private school under the management of individuals or under the management of eleemosynary institutions—as church schools are—as I say, I am more than willing that they be given the opportunity to make their athletics self-supporting. Now, I do LOT believe that it is absolutely essential and necessary that this provision should go into the bill, except that the custom has been that at this academy—and has almost grown into law—that the Army officers there in charge of it say they would feel very much better about it if they had the authority of the Congress.

I think Congress ought to give its authority. I do not believe the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR] wants to tax the American people for a fund of a million dollars to build the right kind of a stadium to take care of the vast throngs of people that will come. I think the gentleman is mistaken, as usual [laughter], but he has the right to make the point of order. I hope he will withhold his point of order and let this very much needed and very much pressed for and very much sought for activity go on.

Mr. BLANTON. You can not very well blame the gentleman from New York since the last game that was played in Philadelphia.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman from New York going to insist on his point of order?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I am.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then I think we should have it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furnishing slate boards for six reitation rooms in West and East Academy Buildings, $2,100.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will correct the spelling of the word "recitation" in line 9. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general incidental repairs and improvements to the cadet store building, including storerooms, office, tailor shops, shoe-repairing shops, $1,500.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CRAMTON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to be allowed to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to be allowed to speak out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. And also, Mr. Chairman, to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention at this time to the fact that the time has come when the people of the United States must, as a sovereign Nation, assert their rights and require foreign nations to observe a domestic policy that has been fixed after a political struggle of more than 50 years' duration, or else have such law of the people of the United States subordinated to the demands of the whisky interests of Europe.

The press for the past few days has been filled with dispatches relative to the activities of rum smugglers along the Atlantic coast. Undoubtedly many of the accounts which are being published and circulated are grossly exaggerated and the extent of the evil greatly magnified as a part of the propaganda which is being circulated to discredit prohibition. Yet the extent to which the smuggling trade in liquor, narcotics, and aliens has recently grown is sufficient to challenge the consideration of every thoughtful citizen.

I have examined the press reports for the past 12 months in an effort to discover the extent of this evil and in order to learn something of the methods which are being used by these smugglers as well as something of the difficulties which confront the enforcement officers. Discarding those reports which may be regarded as mere rumor or propaganda, the report of actual seizures made by the enforcement officers shows the amazing growth of this trade and reflects credit upon the officers charged with this difficult task. The following items will show something of the extent of these activities. They are selected at random from the press reports for a period of 12 months and disclose that while the greatest difficulties in this respect are encountered along the Atlantic coast with the liquors being smuggled in from the British possessions, the Bahama Islands, and from the French possession, the Island of St. Pierre, off the coast of New Foundland, yet these problems are not confined solely to the Atlantic coast; smuggling is also carried on on the Pacific coast and along the Canadian and Mexican borders.

Every conceivable device which modern science and invention have provided are being utilized by these smugglers in their attempt to frustrate the laws of the United States. Airplanes, submarines, radio, high-powered automobiles and motor boats have all been brought into use.

NEW YORK, January 18, 1922.—Conviction in United States Federal Court of certain persons alleged to be guilty of smuggling liquor from the ship Javery:

"The Javery arrived here on December 10 with 250 drums of alcohol, containing a total of 27,500 gallons, from Baltimore and consigned to Constantinople, Turkey. During the night 36 drums of alcohol were emptied into casks on the pier and carted away."

NEW YORK, March 23, 1922.—News item. The steamer Javery, seized last December when the Government confiscated grain alcohol valued at $500,000, was sold at auction yesterday by United States Marshal Hecht at Stapleton, S. I., for $15,000 to the Garland Steamship Co., 511 Fifth Avenue, which had a lien on the vessel. The Javery was built 14 years ago at a cost of $300,000.

NEW YORK, January 19, 1922.—Reports of what was alleged to be an organized plot to smuggle imported liquors off the President Wilson. Police boats pursued four well-built, fast-engined motor boats that had been scuttling about the President Wilson. When pursued these boats sought to reach the Thirty-ninth Street pier. In the gloom in the rear of the bulkhead the police found a Ford automobile the tonneau of which was piled high with whisky. Three arrests were made.

NEW YORK, January 19, 1922.—Customs officers yesterday seized the motor schooner Bertha A, 25-ton registry, and its cargo of 1,900 packages of assorted liquors, valued at $150,000, bootlegger prices, when the craft put in shore with her bow stove in as a result, it was said, of being struck by the British steamship Sheffield while at anchor 15 miles southeast of Atlantic Harbor. * * * The Bertha A cleared from West End, Grand Bahamas January 3 for St. Johns, New Brunswick, with liquor aboard, according to Mr. Sanders. The vessel had no manifest, he said, and there was nothing to show to whom the liquor was consigned.

WINDSOR, CANADA, January 21, 1922.—Joseph D. Brean, of Detroit, arrested at the ferry, was charged with trying to smuggle 52 bottles of American moonshine into Ontario, where the sale of liquor for use within the Province is prohibited. His automobile was seized.

HOBOKEN, N. J., January 27, 1922.—Two arrests for smuggling liquor were made yesterday at Hoboken Pier by customs officials. Aliens charged with smuggling four and one-half cases of liquor were removed from the steamship Marengo, which arrived last Monday from Helena.

NEW YORK, January 8, 1922.—Alleged attempt by six men to smuggle liquor ashore from the St. Marie, of the United Fruit Line, at South Fourth Street, Brooklyn, last night resulted in the shooting of one of the men by customs officers and the arrest of two others. The wounded man fell into the river, but was rescued by his companions. Three men escaped in a motor boat with several hundred bottles of whisky. * * * The men wore short jackets, the inside of which had eight pockets to carry liquor, the police say.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., January 19, 1922.—Coconuts which contained not their own natural milk but a pint each of strong Jamaica rum were seized by the Federal agents to-day at the Minneapolis railroad station.

SEATTLE, WASH., January 12, 1922.—Reports that a submarine built here years ago and later turned over to the Canadian Government, by which it was sold for junk, has brought large shipments of liquor into Seattle from British Columbia ports are being investigated by Federal authorities here to-day.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 17, 1922.—Seizure of the first liquor-running airplane this year was announced by prohibition authorities. The plane, with 120 bottles of Mexican tequila, was seized on the Mexican border at Del Rio, Tex., and the pilot and two men arrested.

NEW YORK, March 4, 1922.—Police officers seized 54,000 bottles of hooch, valued at $500,000, which had been brought into Westchester Creek, The Bronx. This liquor was stolen by a rum runner from a vessel of English registry outside the 3-mile limit at Cape May, N. J., and brought into New York in two scows. The flock of automobiles and trucks at the wharf aroused the suspicions of the officers, which resulted in the seizure.

NEW YORK, March 7, 1922.—Customs Inspector Hokensen and a squad of special agents yesterday raided the steamer Iroquois, of the Clyde Line, in her berth at Christopher Street, in the Hudson River, and found 30 cases of contraband liquor in the coal bunkers. Seven men arrested Friday night when they were alleged to have been unloading whisky from two scows in Westchester Creek at One hundred and seventy-seventh Street were held on $1,000 bail each for the action of the grand jury, after examination yesterday before Magistrate Judge W. Simpson in the West Farms court.

NEW YORK, March 10, 1922.—The auxiliary schooner Victor, 95 feet long, was seized as a rum runner in the lower bay by customs agents who said she did not have a manifest for her cargo of more than 3,000 cases of American and Scotch whisky valued between $300,000 and $400,000. * * * About the time the schooner was being seized the little British steamer Granville with a cargo of 2,200 cases of whisky which arrived off Twenty-third Street in the East River about three weeks ago, cleared and sailed for Nubitas, Cuba. The Granville arrived here under escort of Coast Guard cutter Gresham detailed to see that none of the cargo was diverted. Coast Guard cutters will keep the Granville under convoy as long as she keeps within the three-mile limit.

MARCH 11, 1922.—Word came from Cape May, N. J., last night that 3,000 cases of whisky were found on the British tug Neville bound from Cuba to Portland, Me., and forced by rough sea to put in at the breakwaters. Men from the Coast Guard cutters Kickapoo and Gresham seized the tug.

BOSTON, MASS., March 15, 1922.—"Proceedings against the Grace and Ruby and the half million dollar cargo of liquors as the result of the capture of this boat in this port as a rum runner recently, will take the form of a civil libel," said C. P. Curtis, jr., assistant Federal attorney, to-day.

NEW YORK, March 18, 1922.—The following heading appears: "$500,000 in Scotch seized in battle on liquor ship. Fifteen customs men board schooner and capture the jewelled crew. Riverside Drive men, two real estate men, and two jewellers picked in this raid." The foregoing heading appears over the report of the seizure of the two-masted schooner Clara.

NORFOLK, VA., March 21, 1922.—Three men and two women were under charges to-day in connection with the discovery of a quantity of Scotch whisky aboard the United States ship Henderson at the naval base Sunday.

NEW YORK, March 24, 1922.—Rear Admiral Rodman has ordered that all Navy vessels except contraband craft arriving at Hampton Roads from foreign ports be searched and that only shore boats carrying authorized Government agents be allowed to approach them because liquor had been found concealed in bunkers and elsewhere.

NEW YORK, March 24, 1922.—Federal agents last night raided Pier No. 20, Clifton, Staten Island, near which the Japanese steamer Toba Maru is anchored. * * * A thousand bottles of Japanese whisky done up to look like so many bottles of cologne were seized on the pier. It was believed that the liquor had been smuggled. Four Japanese were arrested.

NEW YORK, March 29, 1922.—The steam yacht Edith which was seized by a sheriff, Charles W. Smith, Nassau County, Bayville, Long Island, had on board, the officers said, 1,500 cases of rye whisky and 3,000 bags of six bottles of whisky each, the value of the appraisers being about $300,000. Much of the liquor had already been loaded on six automobile trucks. The liquor had just arrived, the authorities said, from Nassau, in the Bahama Islands. Three arrests were reported to have been made.

MARCH 29, 1922.—In Federal court in Trenton, N. J., Capt. Joseph Ray, of the schooner Pocomoke, a liquor-running vessel operating between the Bahama Islands and this country, pleaded guilty to a charge of conspiracy to violate the Volstead Act.

NEW YORK, April 6, 1922.—American Deep-Sea Traders Association plans rum-running steamship line between Liverpool and port outside of 3-mile limit. Postal authorities put stop order on mail addressed to concern. J. V. Martin says organization has no connection with floating palace.

MAY 5, 1922.—A raid yesterday by customs agents of the Belgian Ampetco netted 350 bottles of whisky. The vessel was lying at a point near Bayonne, N. J.

MONDAY, May 22, 1922—Rouses Point, N. Y.—Customs officers seized 100 cases of imported liquors found secreted in a cargo of lathes to-day in the railroad yards here.

CALIFORNIA.—News despatches report the capture at Point Lobos, on Monterey Bay, of 14 automobiles and 1,000 cases of Canadian whisky, valued at $250,000; also the arrest of eight alleged booze smugglers. Prohibition officers had been notified that a mysterious ship, carrying liquor, had passed Vancouver and was proceeding toward Mexico. The prohibition agents kept a close watch, being aided by members of the Coast Guard. The boat kept outside of the 3-mile limit until Sunday night, according to the agents, when it turned inshore and lowered anchor. * * * At the arrival in the vicinity of Point Lobos, according to the officers, they noticed that a score of motor boats were plying between the vessel and the Point Lobos wharf. Automobiles were on the wharf, and into these men and women were seen piling cases of liquor.

NEW YORK, July 28, 1922.—The press reports liquor, worth $250,000, and three rum-running vessels were seized with their crews to-day. The three vessels seized were the Marion Mosher, the sloop J. H. B., also of British registry, and the small auxiliary schooner K—10706. Two members of the crew of the schooner told a story of "shanghaiing" and ill treatment.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., June 3, 1922.—Thirty shots were exchanged in a rifle and pistol battle at dawn Saturday between Lake Ponchartrain rum runners and three United States prohibition agents near Bayou St. John. The Federal men captured one boat, a 30-foot speed launch, named Wayfarer, arrested its skipper, and used it to chase two other booze runners into the marshes. * * * The cargo seized aboard the Wayfarer was valued at $300,000.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., March 13, 1922.—Four hundred sacks of bottled whisky were taken from the good ship Honest Clay Monday and destroyed by Federal prohibition agents. Tony Vashan, the skipper, was arrested, but the crew escaped. The cargo was valued at $20,000.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS., March 7, 1922.—To-night the British schooner Pesequid, which was brought into the harbor this evening by the Coast Guard cutter Acushnet with most of her cargo of 3,000 cases of liquor still aboard, was still anchored off the State pier. * * * The schooner's commandant, Capt. B. W. Latham, stated that he was bound from Nassau to St. Pierre with 3,000 cases of liquor, but it was not all on board when the men from the Acushnet boarded her, although how much is missing can not be definitely stated until there is an official check.

NEW JERSEY, May 17, 1922.—The 75-foot sloop Grace and Edna was captured Monday night about 5 miles off Monmouth, N. J., and six members of the crew were arrested. * * * Going aboard the sloop the hand crew found 1,063 cases of Scotch whisky. Burlap bags containing bottles of whisky were found in every imaginable place, some being suspended from the mast and hanging over the sides of the vessel. The liquor, it was said, was loaded at Nassau, Bahama Islands. One of two sets of clearing papers showed the vessel was bound for a Canadian port. The destination given in the other set was not announced.

NORFOLK, VA., March 2, 1922.—The Nova Scotian schooner Emerald loaded with liquor was captured by the Coast Guard cutter Manning after a chase off the Virginia capes Saturday, and was taken over to-day by the United States marshal.

PORTSMOUTH, VA.—The Nova Scotian schooner Emerald, of Dibgy, Nova Scotia, flying the British flag, was seized by the Coast Guard cutter Manning 9 miles southeast of the Cape Charles Lighthouse as a rum runner. Her cargo, it is alleged, consisted of more than 1,000 cases of liquor for New York delivery.

NORFOLK, VA., June 10, 1922.—Approximately 1,000 quarts of liquor, valued at more than $10,000 were seized by marine guards of the navy yard to-day in a raid on the Navy ship Sirrius. Under orders of Rear Admiral Phillip Andrews, commandant of the navy yard, the officers and men are confined to their ship under guard.

NEW YORK, September 16, 1922.—The press reports the seizure of the British schooner Buema, 40 tons, out of Rockport, Nova Scotia, and the Etta B, 30 tons, out of Nassau. Four hundred packages of whisky, mostly in bags, and 5 kegs of rum were found on the Buema and seized. Even the lifeboat was full of them. Capt. John Sims had $19,793 cash in a tin box, and First Mate John McNeil had $2,150.

NEW YORK, September 22, 1922.—The press reports the capture of the tug Kehoe and the confiscation of 2,112 cases of Scotch and rye whisky found in the engine room. The seized liquor is valued at $25,000.

NEW YORK, August 31, 1922.—The British three-masted schooner Gamma, with $200,000 worth of Scotch whisky aboard, and the steamer Smithfield, alleged to have been carrying a floating bar, were seized by customs and prohibition authorities to-day.

NEW JERSEY, September 15, 1922.—Suspected of having delivered all but 65 cases of her cargo of 2,000 cases of whisky at ports along the Jersey coast in violation of the customs laws and Volstead Act the two-masted fishing sloop M. M. Gardner, 130 tons, of British registry, was seized late Wednesday night by the Government rum chaser Taylor about 7½ miles off Long Branch, N. J. * * * The clearance papers showed, the report said, that the vessel left Nassau, Bahamas, with 2,000 cases of whisky for St. Pierre de Miquelon, while at the time of seizure there were on board only 131 packages, or 65½ cases. * * * Captain McDonald and his men found aboard the fishing sloop three books said to contain the name and address of big hotel keepers at Asbury Park, Atlantic City, and Long Beach, as well as names of New York hotel and café keepers, with code markings showing where motor boats could be met for unloading purposes was also found, according to the Government officials. With the vessel was also seized $50,886 in gold.

NEW YORK, September 16, 1922.—Three alleged rum-running boats were added yesterday to the list of craft seized by the prohibition navy's rum chasers, making the fourth important capture for the week. The Hahn, in command of Capt. George V. Tawes, brought in two 2-masted vessels, both of British registry, with a combined cargo of 1,450 cases of Scotch whisky, while the Newberry seized a crewless motor boat with 40 cases of whisky.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., September 17, 1922.—The auxiliary schooner Pittsburg, now lying in Cape May, was the boat seized on the orders of Mr. Pearse, and her captain, George Jeffrie, 54 years old, of this city, has been arrested. * * * According to the information which the customs agents have secured the Pittsburg succeeded in landing between 300 and 400 cases of Scotch whisky here.

NEW YORK, September 15, 1922.—The 60-foot two-masted schooner Glendover * * * with her cargo of between 750 and 800 cases of whisky was seized in East River yesterday morning. * * * Some of the cases were marked "Canada." Included in the consignment were Haig & Haig, Black & White, and other well-known brands of Scotch. The police estimates the value of the vessel at $50,000, and the whisky, at bootleg prices, at $70,000 to $80,000.

These excerpts show clearly the devices which are being used in an attempt to circumvent our laws. They also show that it is a problem coextensive with our territorial boundaries.

The practices of these bootleggers and rum pirates tend to undermine the morale of the American seamen. In many instances law-abiding and patriotic citizens of the United States who are attempting to keep the American flag afloat on the high seas are being victimized by these unscrupulous criminals. The following letter from four officers of the ship Korona, written from Cadiz, Spain, to the New York Times of September 22, 1922, illustrates the manner in which these men, many times unsuspectingly, are lead to accept employment on these vessels and when beyond communication with the shore are forced by thugs and gunmen to do the bidding of these modern pirates. The letter reads as follows:

[From the New York Herald, Saturday, September 23, 1922.]

ACTS IN SMUGGLING OF $1,000,000 RUM—GOVERNMENT TO TRANSPORT THE "KORONA'S" OFFICERS HOME TO TELL WHAT THEY KNOW.

The prayer of four officers of the liquor-toting steamship Korona, who have appealed to the world from Cadiz, Spain, for "justice and assistance," is likely to be answered. The Department of Justice probably will transport the stranded mariners home and use them as witnesses at the trial of 14 indicted men and 2 corporations accused of smuggling nearly $1,000,000 worth of alcohol and whisky into this country and landing it on a pier in Newtown Creek, off the East River.

The four officers, in a letter published here, told a long and circumstantial story of the voyage of the Korona under the Peruvian flag, which began at New York in March and ended at Cadiz, where the vessel was seized by order of the United States Government. Their tale coincides with and also supplements information already in the Department of Justice. The officers are Nolan B. Harris, chief steward and purser, of Lyons, N. Y.; Zachary Taylor Jones, second mate, of 55 Forest Avenue, Verona, N. J.; Arthur B. Anderson, wireless operator, of 155 East Eighty-fourth Street; and A. E. Andrea, second engineer, of 5223 Second Avenue, Brooklyn.

They told how the ship, owned by the Globe Line, whose real control the Government is trying to identify, cleared from New York on March 19 last for Greece, and how it stopped off the Rhode Island coast and transferred to a barge 40,200 gallons of grain alcohol, which was towed back to New York and landed in Newtown Creek with the assistance of 18 uniformed policemen. Then, they said, the Korona steamed to St. Georges, Bermuda, got a load of 2,200 cases of whisky and 74 barrels of liquor and, returning to Block Island, transferred the stuff to the barge, after which the Korona actually started across the Atlantic and got as far as Cadiz.

The rueful officers now at Cadiz say that the Korona had gunmen aboard, with orders to watch the chief steward, wireless operator, and second officer and to shoot anyone who might try to signal for help or halt or leave the ship. They say that the gunmen did beat up one of the firemen and threaten to throw him overboard. They make charges of "graft, rum running, and modern piracy."

The Globe Line, owner of the Korona, was bought from Gaston, Williams & Wigmore about a year and a half ago. It closed its offices at 150 Broadway about the time Federal indictments were filed, which was on July 5.

I do not vouch for the accuracy of these statements, but have merely selected this as one from among many such stories now being told by those who navigate the high seas.

These bootleggers and rum pirates are utilizing the near-by possessions of foreign nations as a base from which to attempt to smuggle liquors and other contraband articles into this country. Something of the growth of this business can be learned from an article appearing in the Literary Digest of December 30, 1922, wherein is quoted an article by Mr. Dolan, of the New York Daily News. In speaking of the growth of the liquor business in the Bahama Islands, Mr. Dolan is quoted as saying:

When Uncle Sam added prohibition to the other 17 constitutional amendments, the government of the Bahamas, always behind in its fiscal affairs, owed the Imperial Government of Great Britain about $500,000. Now Great Britain owes the Bahamas more than $5,000,000 and the old loan has been paid off. How? By taxing the rum runners' cargoes.

The business of transporting liquor from the Bahama Islands to the high seas, a destination for which the rum boats are allowed to clear, owing to a peculiar kink in Bahama maritime law, is perfectly legitimate.

The smugglers violate no Bahama law by purchasing millions of dollars' worth of liquor in the colony each year, and, as far as the local government of the Bahamas is concerned, the destination of liquor which leaves the island is the joint affair of the United States Government and the rum runners.

A similar situation is reported to exist in the Miquelon Islands, just off the Newfoundland coast. In speaking of this place, it is said in the Literary Digest article:

And the Miquelon Islands, just off the Newfoundland coast, have built a liquor traffic that is now second only to the Bahamas. St. Pierre is the chief shipping point from the Miquelons, and this town has grown in the past three years from a small fishing harbor to a commercial center. There is no concealment of rum traffic there, for St. Pierre is under the flag of France, and French merchants have yet the legal right to buy liquor of whom they choose and sell it to whom they can in return for coin of the Republic, which has not depreciated. It is said that even the dry-goods merchants of St. Pierre carry stocks of liquor.

The reports contained in this article are confirmed by investigations made by other newspapers and periodicals of this country. Collier's Weekly of June 24, 1922, contains the report of a similar investigation. The Christian Science Monitor during July and August, 1922, also contains a report of investigations made by representatives of that paper.

The question of the right of vessels of the United States to transport and sell liquor on the high seas, also the right of foreign vessels to transport intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes within the territorial waters of the United States, is now pending before the Supreme Court. For this reason I shall not touch upon the legal aspects of this question, but in this connection I would call attention to the fact that the privilege which has heretofore been accorded foreign vessels of listing liquors as sea stores under our customs regulations has also been abused. This is pointed out in the brief filed by the United States district attorney of the southern district of New York in the cases recently decided by Judge Hand, involving the right of foreign vessels to possess beverage intoxicants within the territorial waters of the United States.

In the Government's brief, in reply to the contention of counsel for the shipping interests, the case of the British steamer Harbinger is cited with reference to sea stores. The facts in that case were:

The British vessel Harbinger, of 70 tons, purporting to have sailed from Halifax bound for Nassau, entered the port of Eastport, Me., having on board 300 cases of liquor, which were listed as sea stores. The vessel was detained by customs officials and subsequently released. On January 25 the vessel entered the port of Newport, R. I., accompanied by the Coast Guard cutter Acushnet. It was later escorted down Long Island Sound from a point off Bridgeport, Conn., by the Coast Guard cutter Gresham. Subsequently, on February 5, the vessel was seized at Perth Amboy, N. J., after an alleged attempt to smuggle liquor into the United States. The Government brief, in referring to this case, said:

* * * He claimed * * * the right to transport liquors as sea stores into the ports of Portland, Me.; Boston, Mass.; and New York. * * * He was accorded the privilege under the regulations then in force. All courtesy extended to him as a foreign master short of coal. Three Coast Guard cutters spent a lay or more with their expensive crews escorting the polished gentleman down the coast. Other customs officers tenderly watched him for days, until at last, after nearly a month of solicitous surveillance, the polished gentleman started to smuggle his cargo and boat and crews were seized.

According to the statement appearing in the New York Times of January 15, 1922, Maj. John Haley Clark, jr., assistant United States attorney, is quoted as saying:

Another frequent and large source of liquor in the country is from foreign ships which come in with their cargo of liquor apparently sealed. With about a hundred floating saloons daily and probably a thousand constantly in the port it would be surprising if a lot of liquor did not get ashore unnoticed. Customs officers have found liquor in almost every part of the vessels that arrive from a port in a foreign country, and generally it is without the knowledge of the master of the vessel.

These illustrations are sufficient to show the character of the problem which confronts the American people. The people of the United States have, by an amendment to their Constitution, written the policy of prohibition into their fundamental law. As the Government has tightened up on the withdrawal of liquor from the bonded warehouses of the United States, and as they have improved their facilities for suppression of illicit distilling, additional incentive is given for smuggling.

The time has come when the people of the United States must, as a sovereign Nation, assert their right to require foreign nations to observe a domestic policy, adopted after a political struggle of more than 50 years' duration, or else confess that the will of the people of the United States is to be subordinated to the dictates of the mercenary demands of the whisky interests of Europe.

A similar situation confronted this Nation many years ago with reference to the slave trade. The people of the United States did not hesitate to exercise their sovereign rights to suppress this outlawed traffic, so, as at that time, the people of the United States must insist that foreign nations respect our laws; that the fraudulent practice now obtaining in some quarters of issuing double clearance papers and of registering vessels of the United States, who seek to transfer their allegiance to another flag in order to engage in the business of rum running, be suppressed.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Under the authorizations contained in this act no issues of reserve supplies or equipment shall be made where such issues would impair the reserves held by the War Department for two field armies or 1,000,000 men.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLACK. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa later.

Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. ANTHONY] a question about this particular appropriation which I see on page 77. It is that particular provision of the bill which provides for the procurement, purchase, manufacture, and use of certain supplies for the National Guard. The Secretary of War is directed to issue from surplus or reserve stores or material as much of this equipment as he is able to issue. On reading the hearings I find that when the estimates were sent to the committee by the Budget Bureau the language "or reserve stores" was omitted, and that those in charge of the militia department called that fact to the attention of the committee and also brought to the attention of the committee the fact that the omission of such language would make a much larger appropriation necessary for the support of the National Guard.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is correct.

Mr. BLACK. Down that far the situation is clear enough to me. Now, the question in my mind is, What effect will the adoption of the paragraph just read in the bill have upon the National Guard authorization to which I have called attention?

Mr ANTHONY. As the gentleman just stated, there is an authorization carried in the appropriation for the National Guard and for the training of several of the reserve activities for them to invade the reserves of the stores of the Army to get supplies instead of our appropriating the money for that purpose. The committee believes that abundant stores are now carried as reserves, more than the necessities of the Government demand, and which can be profitably used for supplying these services. But there is a limit attached to the amount of these reserves. The War Department says it is necessary to keep on hand material sufficient to equip three field armies. That would mean a million and a half men. The committee thought if they keep a sufficient reserve for two field armies, or a million men, that would be enough, and that we should use all reserves in excess of that requirement.

Mr. BLACK. The point I have in mind is this: Has the committee made a sufficient investigation of the matter to determine to its own satisfaction that a provision allowing the Army to keep a sufficient reserve for two field armies, or 1,000,000 men, will still permit the Secretary of War to issue to the National Guard a sufficient amount of equipment to comply with the estimates of the Militia Bureau?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. Take the question of uniforms and uniform materials: Now, our hearings showed that the Army had on hand four or five million uniforms—or parts of uniforms, or yards of uniform cloth on hand—much more than necessary for reserve purposes, and that it would be good business to use up some of that reserve.

Mr. BLACK. Of course, I am in thorough accord with the idea of the gentleman from Kansas to use all this surplus material possible, because we all realize that a great deal of the equipment becomes obsolete, and if we go ahead and spend our good money to buy new equipment and allow this other material to become obsolete the loss would be complete in some cases and very heavy in the aggregate.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is other equipment in which the War Department is short, and they said that unless there is a limit put on it we would invade their reserves very seriously; for instance, in the case of cartridge belts, in which they have no surplus. On such things we want to be within reason.

Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman feels certain that the provision in the bill, to which I have referred, will not impound so large a quantity of equipment and supplies now in the hands of the War Department as to make it unable to comply with the National Guard request I shall be satisfied.

Mr. ANTHONY. As the gentleman will notice, we are cutting down the amount that the War Department wants to hold in reserve 33 per cent.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; and I am in entire agreement with that policy and think it might be wise to go even further. That was the reason for my inquiry.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL: Page 92, line 7, after the word "men," insert a new paragraph as follows:

"No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill; and regardless of what has been done heretofore, in all sincerity I make the point that it is not a limitation. It does not come within the Holman rule. It does not retrench expenditures, and it is against the rule just the other day suggested by the distinguished gentleman from from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS], who was then in the chair presiding, and adopted by him as his decision on the question.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think it is necessary to argue the point of order very long with the chairman of this committee. I think he was in the chair a year ago when the same point of order was made against identically the same amendment, and he held it in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. I do not know how anyone can claim it is not in order at the present time, when it has been held in order for eight years. I am sure the present occupant of the chair was in the chair once, and I think he has been in the chair several times when this identical amendment has been held in order. It has been held in order by the best parliamentarians in this House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the point of order when the gentleman gets through.

Mr. HULL. I am through on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, it is time that all these recent parliamentary cobwebs should be wiped out and that we should get back to the sane rulings that have been made in this House heretofore. They all run back to the ruling suggested the other day by the distinguished present occupant of the chair, made by Mr. Speaker CANNON, when he said that a limitation which is legislation, which directs affirmative action, which restricts the discretion of an executive, should be ruled out of order on appropriation bills. That the Members of the House have the right to expect when an appropriation bill comes on the floor in charge of a committee that it contains no legislation, and that when it does contain legislation or when legislation is offered from the floor and a point of order is made against it, it should be sustained. I am sure that the Chair is not going to be carried away by what has happened heretofore. Garden seed amendments have been held in order time and again in the Committee of the Whole in former Congresses, and usually on committee rulings the Speaker of the House follows the decisions of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Every year since I have been in Congress the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole has held the garden seed amendment in order. Yet the other day when that proposition was put directly up to the Speaker of the House he held that it was legislation on an appropriation bill and that it ought not to be permitted. I submit to the Chair that this costs money to the Government. I submit to the Chair that the evidence is before our committee showing that where you prevent any kind of supervision over the employees of the Government in these various arsenals you do not get that degree of efficiency which this Government has a right to expect and that it is a wastage of at least 40 per cent of the money spent in these supply bills because of a lack of such supervision. Hence, it is not a retrenchment and does not come within the Holman rule, but a direct additional expenditure that is called for by this amendment; and I submit that the point of order should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa wish to be heard?

Mr. HULL. If it is necessary, certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. There is no question about the retrenchment that this amendment would call for.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the gentleman's point, that the Holman rule sustains it?

Mr. HULL. The point is that under the Holman rule it is a retrenchment. It would take 1,000 additional officers to enforce the Taylor system in our present Government factories. There is no question about that. Now, if you have to pay 1,000 officers you have to increase the expenses of the Army. This is the Army bill, and it is a retrenchment under that bill. It is also a clear limitation.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. DENISON. As I understand the point, this is a limitation on the appropriation. It does not necessarily have to be a retrenchment to be within the rule. It is a limitation on the appropriation, and the point of order ought not to be sustained. It is clearly a limitation.

Mr. HUSTED rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York wish to be heard?

Mr. HUSTED. Very briefly, Mr. Chairman. This provision has been held in order so many times by Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that I supposed no Chairman would attempt to disestablish the precedents. But I believe there is good parliamentary ground for holding this provision out of order. This is a clear direction which interferes with executive discretion in the management of a department of the Government and is not really within the confines of a proper limitation. It is in effect a provision of substantive law, saying to this department of the Government: "You must not use a stop watch; you must not use any time-measuring devices; you must not pay a bonus." It does not come within the reasoning that applies to a proper limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. It is my belief that nothing is ever finally settled until it is settled right. The amendment now offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has been ruled upon a number of times during my experience in this House and has been decided both ways. The greater number, however, and all of the later decisions have been one way, holding that it is a limitation. The present occupant of the chair, quite probably, was one of those who guided entirely by recent precedent held it to be a limitation. However that may have been, he now believes in the light of a more thorough consideration that such rulings were fundamentally wrong, that it is not a limitation of an appropriation but a positive restriction upon Executive authority, and to the extent of such restriction a change of existing law.

In a decision of Mr. Speaker CANNON, to which I referred a few days ago when a somewhat similar question was pending before the Chair, the effect of the language was held to be decisive, and this became the point upon which the decision in that case turned. Fourth Hinds' Precedents, section 3935.

What is the effect of the language in the case before us? It is to prohibit the officials in charge of our arsenals and other governmental establishments from doing what they might legally do if this restriction were not in force. For instance, without a restriction of this character they could make a time study with a time-measuring device. If this amendment is added to the bill, as it has been for many years past, then it will not be permissible for these time studies to be made. This is clearly and admittedly the effect and purpose of the language.

It is not the province of the Chair to say whether the time studies ought or ought not to be made. That is a question for Congress to decide by appropriate legislation. It is the duty of the Chair to determine whether this amendment is a proper limitation on an appropriation bill under the rules of the House and to say whether the proposed language simply limits the appropriation or whether as a matter of fact it changes existing law, and is, therefore, legislation. The Chair believes that it is not a mere limitation on an appropriation but in effect is legislation, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULL. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. In order to relieve the Chairman from any possible embarrassment the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] will please take the chair.

Mr. HAWLEY took the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will ask for tellers.

The question was taken, and tellers were ordered.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and nine Members present—a quorum. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were 66 ayes and 26 noes.

So the decision of the Chair was determined to be the judgment of the committee.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 92, after line 7, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"No part of the moneys appropriated in each or any section of this act shall be used or expended for the purchase or acquirement of any article or articles that at the time of the proposed acquirement can be manufactured or produced in each or any Government navy yard of the United States for a sum less than it can be purchased or acquired otherwise."

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, it has been held in order for six years on both Army and Navy and fortification bills. I know that it does not make much difference any more whether you follow precedents or not. We seem to be setting up a new rule of running things to suit ourselves. But, gentlemen, that will not always last. It has been held in order by the best parliamentarians. It is a clear limitation and will save the Government money. There is no question about that. If you can not put on a limitation of that kind that will save money and save money on the face of it, I know of nothing you can put on in the way of retrenchment on any appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not had time to examine any of the decisions, but if the gentleman from New York has any authority or precedents he may present them.

Mr. SNYDER. I have no precedents, but it is not a limitation or reduction of expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not a reduction of expenditure; it is a question whether it is a strict limitation or whether this is a requirement as to the qualification of things to be purchased.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. The point I make is there is no possible way that it can be determined at the time the purchase is made whether it can be produced for less in an arsenal, so that the point made, that it is a saving, is clearly a guess or an estimate.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is not a parliamentary proposition; whether it can be ascertained or not I do not know, but it does not affect the parliamentary situation.

Mr. SNYDER. But the gentleman from Iowa said that it was a saving to the Government. I question that. I think it is clearly new legislation and has no place on an appropriation bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It occurs to me that it is in order as a limitation and is in order under the Holman rule.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, just a suggestion. Why is not this a limitation? Can not Congress now, if it legislates for a certain amount to be expended in general terms, put a limitation on it and say that no part can be used for the construction or building of 6-inch guns? Can not it put on a limitation by saying that no part shall be used for the purchase of articles from private persons? It is purely a limitation. I think there can be no question about it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the gentleman from Iowa has offered an amendment very similar in character to the following provision already carried in the bill. On page 92 will be found this provision:

No part of the moneys appropriated in this act shall be used for paying to any civilian employee of the United States Government an average daily wage or salary larger than that customarily paid by private individuals for corresponding work in the same locality.

I recall that when the provision which I have just read was offered as an amendment to this same Army appropriation bill in the session of Congress in which the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1923 was passed a point of order was made against it upon the ground that it was new legislation. The Chair overruled the point of order upon the ground that it is a limitation, and therefore in order. I can see but very little difference, if any, between the language which I have just read and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has made a very good argument, but as a matter of fact that is not the point that my amendment covers. This is to save money in the purchase or manufacture of articles appropriated for by this bill, and in no case can the language apply unless it saves money. The language itself says that the articles shall only be manufactured in the navy yards when it may be done at a saving to the Government.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I understand the effect of the amendment. I understand the gentleman from Iowa contends that his amendment is in order upon two grounds. One is under the Holman rule, and the other is that it is a limitation. I think the gentleman's amendment is in order, because it is a limitation and is very similar to the one to which I called attention.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] seems to be well taken. The same principle that would apply to the paragraph already in the bill would also apply to this amendment. It is a limitation because it is simply a description of a class of articles that may be purchased, if the articles to be purchased can be brought under the classification made. It seems to the Chair that it is a proper limitation upon an appropriation bill. It prescribes no new duties for any official, and it does not restrict any official except in a negative way by preventing him from expending appropriations. It seems to the Chair that it is only a limitation, and therefore is in order. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is designed to save money to the Government in the procurement of any article which may be procured under the authorizations in this bill. There are a great many Government factories making things, and there are a great many bureaus buying things. This amendment requires them to find out before they procure an article, before they make the contract, whether it can be made more cheaply out of the material already on hand in their own Government-owned factories.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman knows that the Government arsenal to-day is about 6 cents a pound on steel castings higher than private bids?

Mr. HULL. I know that the Government is making almost everything much more cheaply; and I know this, that to-day, yesterday, we had a bill asking for this very thing to be carried out in the other bureaus of the Government, and already the great manufacturers of the country are here protesting against letting the Government even make an estimate on their own work, for fear they will get the job away from them, and they claim to be efficient; and in this bill there is another provision trying to give them 25 per cent more when they buy.

Mr. BEGG. Last April the Government arsenal advertised for bids for a good many thousand pounds of castings. They received 13 bids from private foundries. One was from the Government. The Government bid was 17¼ cents and the lowest bid was 10¼ cents. Every other bid was lower than the Government. Yet the Government gave the contract to the arsenal. It is the old story of high prices for Government operation. I took the matter up with the Secretary of War myself, and his reply was that they had to give them something to do, even if it costs more, and I will give the gentleman the Secretary's letter, if he wants to see it.

Mr. HULL. That does not apply to this amendment. This amendment provides that it must be done more cheaply. I have no objection to their purchasing articles outside, if they cost less, but I do have objections to their going outside and buying when it can be manufactured more cheaply in the arsenals or navy yards. If it is cheaper, then let them manufacture it in their own arsenals. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment. I introduce the amendment from the naval bill, and the words "arsenal or Government-owned factory" should be included in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment: Page 92, after line 7, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"No part of the moneys appropriated in each or any section of this act shall be used or expended for the purchase or acquirement of any article or articles that at the time of the proposed acquirement can be manufactured or produced in each or any of the Government arsenals or Government-owned factories of the United States for a sum less than it can be purchased or acquired otherwise."

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I oppose this amendment because under the amendment, if adopted, there is not any way to stop any ambitious operator of a Government factory from advertising for bids for anything they use in the way of Government supplies, and then saying, "We can make that more cheaply in our own factories," and even though they have not manufactured an article of its kind theretofore, and, after they have made it, it costs twice as much as the Government could obtain it otherwise, the Government has no recourse.

I am not enthusiastic about the Government going into the manufacturing business beyond a very minimum point. The case cited happened last April with the Government foundries or arsenals. They advertised according to law for so many castings of various kinds. There were 18 bids submitted. The lowest bid was the bid submitted by an electric foundry, 10¼ cents a pound. The highest bid was 17¼ cents a pound. That was the Government bid. The contract was awarded to the Government. When I took it up with them, because the foundry happened to be located in my city, to ascertain why the bid was not given to the lowest bidder the answer that I received was that they had to have something to keep the men at work. I have another institution in my town that is the only institution that does centrifugal casting of steel, and it makes castings that have never been equaled by any other process. That institution gave to the Navy Department permission to use that process without the payment of royalty during the war. Yet to-day, to get a job from the Government, when he is a low bidder, we have to appeal to the highest authority and go over the heads of the men in charge.

And I know, because we did it less than a month ago. These men who were doing this business for the Government are not out to get the lowest price. They are only interested in keeping the factory going and the men employed. Now, I prefer to employ the men in private industry rather than have the men on the Government pay roll, and therefore I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BEGG. I will gladly yield.

Mr. BLANTON. One of the main obstacles in the amendment is this: Suppose the Government needs a certain lot of items and it wants to buy them, and it wants to get them right away. If the ones in charge of these arsenals will say, "We can manufacture these for less than you can buy on the outside," it would prevent the Government from buying it there.

Mr. BEGG. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. The Government would have to wait for them to be manufactured. If you will read the amendment carefully, it will prevent the Government from buying if they can be manufactured at the same or a less cost in an arsenal.

Mr. BEGG. And add to that if the men in charge of the arsenal would merely make the statement that they can make them for less than they can go on the outside and buy; and then they make it, costing twice as much, the Government is the goat.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I will yield the floor.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If there be any real merit in this proposition presented by the gentleman from Iowa, there would be no necessity for this legislation at all. If the arsenal could make the items cheaper than they could be purchased, there is no law against their buying them now; and this is but an attempt to throw into the arsenals and Government factories of the country items now being made throughout the country and sold to the Government at proper prices under extreme competition. If the very fact that he is trying to legislate was a necessity, there would be something to it, but if the Government arsenals can make these items cheaper than they can be bought for on the outside at present, they need no law to do it. They can already make them. But the gentleman from Texas has raised a potent point. Suppose the Government wants to buy some item which it needs quickly, and just as it was about to purchase the item the Government said, "We can make this cheaper, if we have the time." Under that amendment, as I understand it, and I listened to its reading, the purchase could not be made if the officer in charge of the arsenal said he could make the item, and the Government would have to wait until it was made. It is nothing more or less than trying to take into the arsenals and Government factories of this country items which could be made by private institutions of the country at fair prices, and have always been sold at fair prices and in large quantities, and deliveries promptly made as they were wanted by the Government. I oppose the amendment on that basis.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I will.

Mr. SNELL. Is it the policy of the Government to go into the general manufacturing business?

Mr. SNYDER. That is what they are trying to do, to put the Government into the general policy of manufacturing of military equipment.

Mr. SNELL. Are not those articles made in navy yards for a special specific purpose, for the manufacture of definite things for the use of the Army and Navy?

Mr. SNYDER. Everybody else except a few fellows who are trying to shift the policy.

Mr. SNELL. Shift a policy that has always been followed?

Mr. SNYDER. That is what it means, and nothing else.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not mean what the gentleman from New York says it means. It only applies to things purchased by the War Department. The arsenals operated by the War Department are intended to make things for the Army, and they should make those things for which they are equipped if they can make them more cheaply than they can be purchased from private concerns; and that is all that this amendment provides.

Mr. SNYDER. How many items for the Military Department does the gentleman think the Army buys in this country; how many different items?

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, every Government I have ever known about maintains arsenals and navy yards. They are essential parts of the military and naval establishment in time of peace. The provision that the manufacture of munitions of war in time of peace should be confined to government arsenals and navy yards is the one thing in the covenant of the League of Nations that everybody approves. If there had been a provision before this late war that no government should purchase munitions of war in time of peace, but that they should be manufactured in its own arsenals, we would not have had the Krupps and other great munition manufacturers exerting their powerful influence in trying to bring about war among the nations of the world in order to make money out of the destruction of their fellow men.

Mr. SNYDER. It does not mean merely war materials——

Mr. DALLINGER. What?

Mr. SNYDER. But everything from collar buttons to horse collars.

Mr. DALLINGER. If the arsenals are equipped to make anything the War Department needs, when you have hundreds of millions of dollars of the people's money invested in these arsenals—in real estate, in buildings, in equipment, and in machinery—and are paying a large overhead expense for running them, I submit it to the sane judgment of this committee that an amendment of this kind, which proposes that if you can get that thing made cheaper in these arsenals, that it is in the interest of the American taxpayer.

Mr. BEGG. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BEGG. The War Department needs automobiles. Would the gentleman recommend that it manufacture automobiles?

Mr. HULL. There is no appropriation here for automobiles, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. DALLINGER. The question that the gentleman from Ohio asked has nothing to do with this amendment, any more than the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] had nothing to do with the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] as to the question of automobiles, let it be said that this amendment adds nothing, nor does it propose to add anything, to the present manufacturing facilities. If I understand the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa correctly, it simply means that the existing facilities of the Government shall be utilized for the manufacture of things purchased by the War Department where they can be manufactured more cheaply in these existing facilities than they can on the outside. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question there?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Surely.

Mr. BEGG. The amendment, if I understood the reading, says that they shall not buy anything that can be made cheaper otherwise. Now, if they should decide to make automobiles cheaper, for less, could they not, under the amendment, buy machinery and start in on the manufacture of automobiles?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No. I do not think the amendment is capable of that construction.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HULL. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 46.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. HULL and Mr. ANTHONY to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 53.

The CHAIRMAN. On this vote the ayes are 52 and the noes are 53, and the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, there is one more in the affirmative.

The CHAIRMAN. That makes ayes 53 and noes 53, and the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries appropriations for construction and repairs at the Naval Academy running into hundreds of thousands of dollars, and in the first paragraph on this page that we are reading it removes the limitation as to advertising for bids. I would like to ask the chairman of this subcommittee to make a statement to the general committee and put it in the RECORD—the statement that he made to me privately that this provision does not contemplate any large contracts. Large power is granted to the superintendent and architect to let the contracts without advertising for bids, but I understand that these are for small contracts only.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman refers to the authority granted to the superintendent at West Point in certain instances to waive advertisements?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I told the gentleman that this applies largely to repair jobs, where the experience has been that where bids are asked for these affairs they are two or three times, in many instances, what it costs them to go ahead and do the work, and they made such a good showing to us as to the money expended in that way that we continued this authority.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the moneys appropriated in this act shall be used for paying to any civilian employee of the United States Government an average daily wage or salary larger than that customarily paid by private individuals for corresponding work in the same locality.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Page 92, line 8, strike out lines 8 to 12, inclusive.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this seems to be a bad day for arsenals and navy yards. The committee in its enthusiasm in looking after the contractors of the country ought not to go so far as to forget a few things that happened during the last war.

This particular amendment is unjust and unfair. I have an arsenal in my district, as you all know, and therefore I suppose I am counted as interested. But this particular amendment, which was originally offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], is unfair in its operation.

Look at it for a moment. It provides that nobody in an arsenal shall be paid an average daily wage that is larger than that customarily paid in the same kind of industry outside. It does not say he shall receive as much, but that he shall not receive more than the average daily wage.

Let me show you how it works. I only want these people that work in the arsenals to receive the same kind of treatment that other men get who work in similar institutions; but the Luce amendment, which I have moved to strike out, is unfair in this particular. Let us take the case of a man who earns $1,500 a year. Suppose he works in an institution outside of an arsenal and works an average of 26 days a month. That is a large average. In the course of a year he works 312 days. That man makes on an average $4.80 a day. Suppose he is working in an arsenal. He does not make the same number of days, because by act of Congress we have given him 30 days without work, for which he gets paid. So that you see he works only 282 days. Divide $1,500 by 282 and it is $5.30 a day, which is his average daily wage.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. In just a moment.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to make just one inquiry. Does not the gentleman think that any fair-minded board in the War Department would take into consideration the statement of the gentleman in regard to the day's wage?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. They ought to, if it were not for the express language of the law, which says that the workman in a Government arsenal shall not have a greater average wage than a similar man who works outside. The law we have made says that. Therefore, those who run the arsenals of the country are entirely justified in following the law that we have laid down. If the wages of those who work in arsenals are fixed by a labor board, as was the custom before this law went into effect, they will get the same wages as those who work outside, but under this provision they do not get it, and it is because of our law which Congress has passed.

Mr. HUSTED. Is there not an administrative reason why this should go out? It seems to me it is utterly impossible to determine with any reasonable degree of accuracy what the average civilian wage is that is paid in kindred employment in the same locality.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Oh, absolutely.

Mr. HUSTED. As a matter of administration it is an impossible provision.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It is an impracticable provision. It was offered here by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] at the close of a day, very hurriedly adopted without consideration, and has been written into this bill. It ought to go out. These men ought to have the same pay, no better, no worse; but they ought to have the same pay; and in order to avoid confusion this provision should be stricken out.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, let the amendment be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Page 92, line 8, strike out lines 8 to 12, inclusive.

Mr. SISSON. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

All material purchased under the provisions of this act shall be of American manufacture, except in cases when, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases abroad, which material shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman under the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I call on the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] to rally to my assistance in eliminating this section from the bill. A little while ago those gentlemen insisted that the Government ought to buy its supplies wherever they could be purchased most cheaply, irrespective of the fact that perhaps at the very same moment the Government might possess a plant erected at Government expense and maintained at Government expense which might be made idle by the purchase of such materials from private manufacturers. Here we have a provision that all material purchased under this bill shall be of American manufacture except in cases when in the judgment of the Secretary of War it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases abroad. What does that mean? This bill contains large appropriations for ordnance supplies; for steel and armament. It contains large appropriations for seacoast cannon of heavy caliber. It contains large appropriations for the purchase of munitions, gunpowder, explosives, chemical gases and chemical warfare supplies. What does it mean unless it means that the Secretary of War must buy his steel from the United States Steel Corporation or some of its subsidiaries? What does it mean unless it means that for munitions and ammunition he must buy those supplies from the Du Pont Powder Co., or some of its subsidiaries?

Mr. SNYDER. Or somebody else.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. "Or somebody else" the gentleman says. Yes; somebody else; but I would like to know who else in this country is engaged in the manufacture of munitions on any scale comparable or sufficient unto the needs of the Government unless it be the Du Pont Powder Co. or its subsidiaries? The gentleman does not answer, of course.

Mr. SNYDER. There are many of them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And where are we to get our oil?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. As is suggested by the gentleman from Alabama, where are we to purchase the oil consumed by the various agencies of the War Department? Of course, everybody knows where it will be purchased.

Mr. SNYDER. In Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No; it will not be purchased from Texas. The oil may come out of the ground in Texas, but most of the beneficiaries of the purchases of oil will reside in the gentleman's State. Whether it comes from Texas or Pennsylvania, whether it be purchased from people in my State or the gentleman's State, the Government ought to buy it where it can be purchased most cheaply.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, why should we pay a bonus? The Chair ruled that the Hull amendment, which would prevent the payment of bonuses, was not in order because it was not a limitation; but here the Government is going to pay a bonus on its steel purchases, on its oil purchases, on its munition purchases, and that bonus will go to American companies. I want to patronize American industry, but I want American industry to be able to compete with the industries of the world. I want to be fair to American industries, but I want American industries to be fair to the Government. And if such great combinations in this country that, according to the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] published in the RECORD of this morning, have been accumulating such enormous dividends and surpluses, are not willing to compete with similar manufacturers in other portions of the world, I am unwilling to further increase those surpluses by bonuses from the Treasury of the United States. If the section is eliminated it will not be necessary to buy materials abroad. But if we tie the hands of the Secretary of War and tell him he can not buy abroad, then steel and munition industries will fix their own prices. If they know that the Secretary of War may go into the markets of the world, domestic manufacturers will meet competition, they will meet competitors in foreign countries, and we shall not have to go abroad to make such purchases.

I want to ask the Republicans in the House of Representatives if they are unwilling to trust the Secretary of War to make purchases under the present law? Do you fear that he will not be just and fair? If you are willing to trust the Secretary of War, why do you want to put him in a strait-jacket? Why do you want to say that he may not buy in the markets of the world?

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman interpret lines 15, 16, and 17 of this section?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I shall if the gentleman will agree to abide by my interpretation.

Mr. SNELL. I will if the gentleman interprets it rightly. What does this mean, "When in the judgment of the Secretary of War it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases abroad"?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. What does the gentleman say it means?

Mr. SNELL. It means that he can if it is for the benefit of the country to do it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. All right, accept that.

Mr. SNELL. Then what is the gentleman hollering about?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I know that everybody who disagrees with the gentleman from New York is simply hollering. Everybody who has a mind that can not be precisely fitted to the procrustean standard of his own is uselessly taking up the time of the House. The gentleman emerged from the cloakroom a few minutes ago when he heard the interests of the manufacturers were imperiled by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. The gentleman rushed in to protect the interests of the manufacturing concerns. Because gentlemen have the effrontery to rise here and try to look after the interests of the American people who must pay the bills the gentlemen exclaims that we are hollering about something.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes; according to his own construction. The gentleman from New York says that when in the judgment of the Secretary of War it is for the manifest interest of the United States he can purchase abroad. If that is true, why do you want to limit him at all? If you know he will purchase it abroad only when it is for the best interest of the United States, then it follows he ought to purchase it at home only when it is for the best interest of the United States. Why hog tie him by a statute and why provide that he shall be limited at all? Let him go out into the markets of the world and let him buy anywhere. But it does not mean that. It is merely a refuge for the man who seeks to meet the argument such as I am making on the floor. It is not the intention of the gentleman who drafted the amendment to permit the Secretary of War freedom in making purchases, but the real purpose is to deliver the War Department to a noncompetitive market. Whenever there is a great contract to be let for ordnance, you will find the manufacturers and their friends will go to the War Department, with a list of fixed prices in one hand and this bill in the other hand, and they will call the attention of the Secretary of War very carefully to the language of this paragraph and to the fact that Congress intended that such purchases should be made in the United States, and, the gentleman ought to know, that that will be the case. But in order to meet the argument they say, "Except, however, in those cases in which it is for the manifest interest of the United States," and those cases will be mighty few and mighty far between. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, this provision is merely a general declaration in favor of the purchase of American goods, and nothing more than that. I do not see how any American can take exception to such a declaration. It is a declaration on the part of Congress that where American goods can be purchased by the War Department consistently with the best interests of the United States American goods shall be purchased.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is the gentleman quite sure that he is accurate in that statement?

Mr. HUSTED. I feel quite sure about it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Under existing law is it not a fact that except in cases of emergency bids are required; that the War Department when it makes a contract shall require bids?

Mr. HUSTED. That is the general policy, except in cases of emergency and of small purchases such as we have referred to here to-day.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it not the law that bids must be required?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes; but we make exceptions in cases of small items. We had a case here to-day, alluded to on the floor, of certain repairs to buildings for which we specifically provided that no public bids are required.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Congress made that exception. Now, the law of the country, as I understand it, is that bids must be asked upon these contracts, unless exception be made by the law. Under this provision you are repealing that law; you are providing that the Secretary of War may not consider bids.

Mr. HUSTED. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. He must confine his consideration wholly to American articles.

Mr. HUSTED. I do not agree with the gentleman. The Secretary of War, under this provision, in the case that goods he wants to acquire can not be purchased in this country at a reasonable price or in sufficient quantities or of the character and quality desired, must permit bids on foreign goods. There is nothing to prevent that. On the contrary, the law requires it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course not; but, under the law as it exists now, he has to consider the offering of bids.

Mr. HUSTED. After all has been said, this is simply a general declaration in favor of American goods. I do not see how any American can reasonably take exception to such a declaration. There is ample provision here, made in the very terms of this paragraph, for the acquirement of goods abroad if American goods can not be obtained in sufficient quantities or at a reasonable price or of the desired quality.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, what is the status of this? Is the point of order made or reserved?

The CHAIRMAN. It is reserved.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order.

Mr. HICKS. Let us have the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is legislation on an appropriation bill, and it is not a limitation in that it interferes with the discretion of an executive officer in the purchase of material, which he has now under existing law, as I understand it, and it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas wish to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. ANTHONY. I merely call the attention of the Chair to the fact that all of the language of the paragraph is undoubtedly in order with the possible exception of the last line containing the words "which material shall be admitted free of duty." All of the language preceding that is a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair reads this amendment, the first part of it, excepting the last line referred to, is merely a limitation, though not stated in the language of a limitation. The remaining phrase, "which material shall be admitted free of duty"——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair makes the final decision, may I make this observation?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am advised by the gentlemen of the Ways and Means Committee that that is now existing law, carried in the tariff law.

The CHAIRMAN. If it effects anything at all, it certainly is a change of law, and therefore would make the paragraph subject to a point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reoffer the paragraph with the last clause eliminated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 92, after line 7, insert: "All material purchased under the provisions of this act shall be of American manufacture, except in cases when, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases abroad."

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not a limitation; that it is legislation on an appropriation bill; and that it is not germane to this part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. As to the limitation, the Chair has already expressed his opinion.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair hear me on the subject?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be very glad to hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I thought I had before me the provision with respect to the making of contracts, but I find that I am mistaken. However, the gentleman from Kansas can correct me if I make any mistake about what the law is. Under the law now, except in cases of emergency, the War Department, in order to secure materials, is required to advertise for bids, and it is required to accept the lowest bid made under all of the conditions laid down, no matter where that bid comes from. If it be made by a foreign manufacturer, it has to be accepted if the conditions are complied with. Am I not correct in that?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think so, except in such specified instances where Congress has waived that requirement.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes. This, therefore, is a proposition on an appropriation bill to change that existing law.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Does not the gentleman think it would be entirely within the law relating to the purchase of materials by the War Department to provide in the advertisement for bids, in any particular case, that the goods on which the bid is asked must be of American manufacture?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, that is on the merits of the proposition. This is a point of order which is pending now, and not the merits of the proposition that we are discussing.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It appears that the existing statute is as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee. The act of March 2, 1901, reads in this way:

Hereafter, except in cases of emergency, or where it is impracticable to secure competition, the purchase of all supplies for the use of the various departments and posts of the Army, and of the branches of the Army service, shall only be made after advertisement and shall be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, quality and cost of transportation and the interests of the Government considered.

The CHAIRMAN. In the mind of the Chair that does not touch the question. The only question in the mind of the Chair is whether this is strictly a limitation. Suppose it were phrased in this language—suppose the paragraph read—

no part of the moneys appropriated under the provisions of this act shall be used to purchase any but American material—

We have a right to make that limitation—except in cases where in the judgment of the Secretary of War—

And so forth. Would not that mean exactly the same as the language as it now stands?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say very frankly to the Chair when you bring in the exception it will fall within the ruling the Chair made a few minutes ago on the stop-watch proposition. That is not what this provision in the bill says. With all possible respect to the Chair, the provision of the bill does not say anything about any part of the money appropriated, but says everything appropriated under the provisions of this act. This changes existing law in an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLANTON. May I make this suggestion to the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. That while it is evidently intended that this amendment should be a limitation, it is not couched in such language as would make it a limitation, and until it is so drawn in language that makes it a limitation it is certainly out of order.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will examine more carefully the exception referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman is correct in the statement that the basic law compels them to accept the lowest bid, how do you explain the illustration I gave, which happened last April, where they accepted castings at 7¼ cents a pound higher than the lowest bid and higher than 11 other bids? How do you explain that?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, I have no explanation for it; I did not do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is attempting to reduce the language in the form of a limitation and has encountered the very difficulty to which the gentleman from Tennessee calls attention, that in the exception there lurks one additional requirement that gives to the Secretary of War a discretion which the Chair understands he is not clothed with at the present time. That is the difficulty, with a more careful investigation of the exception.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary to clothe a limitation in any particular form in order to make it a limitation if when applied to the legislation and its appropriation it does place a limitation on expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thoroughly agrees to that.

Mr. MONDELL. That is what this paragraph clearly does, although it is not in the usual form of a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman go one step further and take the other point? Is not the Secretary clothed with additional power than that which he now has? In other words, at the present time would he under existing law have the authority to buy in the way that this would authorize him to buy, and if that is true, it changes the Secretary's authority to the extent that it is legislation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of War must under the law and in good conscience make purchases in such a way as he believes to be in the interest of the United States Government. We do not modify that authority or that duty.

The CHAIRMAN. But is not the gentleman widening his authority—an authority he would not have now under the law?

Mr. MONDELL. Not at all, because except for this limitation that is exactly what the Secretary would have to do now under the law. He would be compelled to make his contracts with the lowest and best bidder in the interest of the United States, and now we are making an exception to that, and we say that he shall purchase in the United States, except he must still have regard for the interest of the United States in the matter.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. If I have the floor.

Mr. HUSTED. Is it the contention here that the Secretary of War is compelled to accept foreign-made goods if he does not want them and does not believe it is in the best interest of the Government to buy them? I do not believe there is such a thing in the law.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the only logical construction you can place on the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman; under the law, as I read it, the Secretary of War would have ample authority to make it a condition of any public letting if in his judgment the best interests of the United States Government required it, and specify right in the bid itself that the goods must be of American manufacture.

Mr. MONDELL. If the Chair will allow me again for a moment to call his attention to the language referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee, "except in cases when in the judgment of the Secretary of War it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases abroad"; the law at the present time requires the Secretary of War to make purchases as it appears to the interest of the United States to do. Now, we make an exception in the first part of the paragraph by providing that the Secretary shall purchase materials in the United States unless—and the word "unless" could be used in lieu of the word "except," the meaning would be the same—unless he finds it to the interest of the United States to buy abroad. It does not change the character of the limitation by adding that additional language.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, while I am opposed to the point of order, so far as it strikes at the merits of the proposition, I believe it is subject to a point of order from the parliamentary standpoint. This amendment gives to the Secretary discretionary powers that he does not now possess. By granting him functions in addition to those now enjoyed it is legislation under our precedents and under our rulings. This limitation, so called, is so in form, but in substance it is legislation, and is put into this bill for the purpose of allowing certain things to be done that can not now be done. This makes it legislation. Therefore I think it is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is entirely in error. A limitation may add to the authority or discretion of the Secretary; it may take from.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, it is manifest that the Secretary of War, if he properly performs his duty to our Government, must exercise his own best business judgment. The claim is made that under the language of this provision the discretion of the Secretary of War would be broadened. I fail to see how it is broadened in the slightest degree.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. HUSTED. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Just what is the purpose of this paragraph?

Mr. HUSTED. The purpose of this paragraph is to make a general declaration in favor of American goods. It is really wholly ineffective except as viewed from that standpoint. It does not grant any additional discretion. It does not limit any authority. It is simply a reenactment of the general power of the Secretary of War coupled with a specific declaration in favor of American goods. It is a declaration of a policy, and nothing else. There is no limitation placed on the Secretary of War. There is no increase of his discretion. The paragraph provides that the Secretary of War may purchase foreign goods if, in his opinion, the interest of the Government requires such action. He can do that now. Wherein is there a limitation on his authority or discretion?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] is very candid about this proposition. He admits that the amendment is no limitation. He says its only effect is to make a declaration of a general principle, a glittering generality. If it is not a limitation, then it is not in order.

Of course, it does not come under the Holman rule, because it does not reduce expenditures; but, on the other hand, in all probability it will increase expenditures, because the present law requires competition by bids. This amendment destroys that, because it limits competition to the United States, except in certain particular cases.

Now is it a limitation?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman read that part of the law?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The present statute is—

Hereafter, except in cases of emergency, or where it is impracticable to secure competition, the purchase of all supplies for the use of the various departments and posts of the Army and of the branches of the Army service shall only be made after advertisement, and shall be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, quality and cost of transportation and the interests of the Government considered.

Now the present statute requires the Secretary of War to buy under advertisement where he can buy cheapest. But if this amendment is adopted, that law, to the extent of the limitation, if it be a limitation, must give way.

Now, the Chairman this afternoon very courageously overruled a long line of decisions in passing upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], and the Chairman said that it was the duty of the Chair to look beyond the clouds and the dust and to see what was the real purpose of an amendment, whether it be a limitation or legislation, when offered to an appropriation bill.

What is the purpose, whether it is avowed or admitted? What is the purpose? The purpose is to prevent the Secretary of War from purchasing any goods except American goods, with the little exception made in this provision. The Chair knows that that is the purpose of it. The Chair knows that the gentlemen who offered this amendment are not concerned with the limitation merely as to the expenditure of funds.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose it simply said, "No part of the appropriations in this act shall be used for the purchase of articles made abroad." Would not that be a limitation?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. In all candor to the Chair, I really think that would be a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. No. I wish to have the gentleman from Texas help the Chair, in order to creep around these points.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I say that would be a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. Now show what would happen.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Unfortunately that has not been offered. We are passing only upon what has been offered. If this is not in order it seems to me it is the duty of the Chair to rule on what is before the House, and then, if the gentlemen in their anxiety to put this through will offer something else, we can meet that when we come to it. But the difference between that provision and this provision is that at present the Secretary has a discretion to purchase at home or abroad. At present he has that discretion in that he must consider not only the interests of the Government, but he must buy where it is the cheapest.

The CHAIRMAN. That is just the point the Chair wishes to hear the gentleman upon.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am glad that in stumbling around I finally ran into what the Chair was trying to put in my mind. Under the present law the Secretary of War is required by law to buy where he can buy the cheapest, and if this amendment is adopted, unless American prices are lower than abroad he can not buy at all. The law would still require purchases in the cheapest market, but a limitation, such as the Chair suggests, would deny to him the money with which to pay for the purchase, except in the case of the purchase of American goods.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. Is it not in order on an appropriation bill to make a declaration in favor of a protective tariff? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that is a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LONDON. That is what it amounts to.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is the intention of the gentleman from Kansas to move that the committee rise, the Chair will ask the privilege of reserving his decision until morning, because the Chair realizes that this is an important matter.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13559. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to the following:

To Mr. MORIN, for the remainder of this week, on account of illness.

To Mr. FUNK, for one week, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, January 19, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 19, 1923.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, January 16, 1923.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

SPEECH OF MR. BOYDEN BEFORE REPARATION COMMISSION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present from the Committee on Foreign Relations, in reply to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the authentic text of the remarks of Mr. Boyden on January 9, 1923, together with a memorandum showing the differences between that text and the version contained in the New York Times, which was printed in the RECORD. I ask that the text I present may be printed in the RECORD in the usual RECORD type, and the matter indicated in parallel columns.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The errata and the text are as follows:

TEXT OF MR. BOYDEN'S REMARKS ON JANUARY 9, 1923.

Mr. Boyden stated that not being one of the official judges, as were his colleagues, it would be easy for him to remain silent, but he preferred to assume his own responsibility in his personal capacity, as they assumed theirs in their official capacity. In English and American courts it was not uncommon for a person of judicial education to sit with the official judges as an "amicus curiæ," who, though in fact not a judge, expressed his own personal view. Mr. Boyden had endeavored to form an opinion upon the judicial aspect of the situation.

Paragraph 17 of annex 2 referred to default and paragraph 18 referred to voluntary default. Mr. Boyden was in agreement with the decision of the commission that in both cases voluntary default was intended.

What was voluntary default? One excuse for nonperformance would be recognized by all, viz, "force majeure," but in Mr. Boyden's view the expression "voluntary default" included other excuses. It meant the doing or the failure to do something with the knowledge at the time that the action or the failure of this act might reasonably have the effect of resulting in default.

There was in Mr. Boyden's view a very considerable difference between the question then under discussion and the question as it had arisen in connection with deliveries of timber. The demand for timber was a single demand. The main reason for the timber default seemed to consist in the difficulties which arose from the depreciation of the marks. These difficulties were of an extraordinary nature such as had never before arisen in Germany and it was easily conceivable that the persons who had to meet them did not at once see how to meet them and did not realize at the time that their failure to do certain things promptly would result in default. Nevertheless, Mr. Boyden was inclined to think that even in connection with wood there had been a voluntary default within the meaning of the treaty. The difference between the timber question and the coal question lay in the fact that the coal requirements were monthly requirements. The Germans, faced with deficits in any month, ought at once to have taken whatever precautions were necessary to see that those difficulties, whatever they had been, were avoided during the next month. They had failed to do this and the deficits had continued month after month.

One further juridical point arose to which Sir John Bradbury had referred in connection with the purpose of paragraph 17. In Sir John Bradbury's opinion the purpose of that paragraph was to enable the commission to appeal to the governments only when the measures at its command had proven inadequate to enforce obedience. That was a perfectly comprehensible interpretation and explained in a large part the difference between Sir John Bradbury and his colleagues as to the action to be taken. Mr. Boyden's own reading of paragraph 17 was, however, different. In his view the commission was required to report any voluntary default forthwith, partly for the information of the governments and partly to enable the governments to take such action as they thought fit. Mr. Boyden recognized that the previous action of the commission with respect to coal defaults had not been consistent with that interpretation, for the commission had not automatically reported defaults as they had arisen. Although this previous practice did not, in his view, represent the waiver of a right, it was, nevertheless, a practical fact which should be taken into account, particularly by the governments themselves, in whatever action they might take.

From the juridical point of view, he was of opinion that the argument put forward by the German delegation to the effect that in private contracts a deficiency of 10 per cent did not constitute a default was of no value. The treaty did not contemplate the application of any such commercial custom to its provisions.

With regard to the letter of March 21, Mr. Boyden considered that the commission did not by its terms abandon its right under the treaty to report a voluntary default. At the time when the letter was drafted he had called the attention of his colleagues to the danger which existed from the language used which had been quoted. He did not remember exactly what views his colleagues then held, but it might be taken for granted that the language would not have been accepted by certain delegates if they had thought it eliminated the possibility of reporting a voluntary default.

The argument to which the German delegation attached the most weight was that concerning the needs of Germany as indicated by her importation of nearly as much coal as she was delivering to the Allies. Legally that argument seemed to him to be applicable not to the question of a voluntary default but to the decision of the commission as to the demands made on Germany.

The argument would have weight if urged to show that the commission's decision upon the amount of coal which Germany could supply without undue interference with its industrial requirements was incorrect. But the commission's decision remained a decision unless changed and Germany's industrial requirements had nothing to do with Germany's obligations to carry out the decision so long as it was not changed.

But having expressed his view of the legal situation Mr. Boyden desired to add that several of the foregoing considerations, particularly Germany's need for coal and her importation of coal from abroad, the previous practice of the commission with respect to coal default and the commission's letter of March 21, had a practical bearing on the situation which would naturally be taken into account by the governments after the commission reported a default.

The report by the commission of the wood default seemed to him to be very defective. When reporting a voted default it was of the utmost importance for the commission to report the extent of the intention which had entered into that default. The commission was the tribunal which found the accused guilty; punishment would be meted out by another tribunal. It was therefore of the greatest importance that the exact nature of the crime should be reported by the commission so that the punishment by the governments might fit the crime. Mr. Boyden agreed with Sir John Bradbury that the word "punishment" was not appropriate, and that the real purpose of the provision was constructive. The real point was that the report should be made in such a way as to aid the governments in adopting methods which would lead to constructive results. But it was of equal importance that the quality of the crime should be made plain in the report whether the results were to be punitive or constructive. The commission in its report on coal deliveries should set forth not only the fact of default but also the causes of the default and all extenuating circumstances. It was only upon such a basis that the governments could fairly perform their duty in the matter.

If Mr. Boyden were asked to express in a few words what Germany had failed to do, he would say that Germany had failed to take those exceptional and rather extraordinary measures month by month which were necessary to cope with the difficulties which the experience of previous months had shown would arise.

It was understandable that Germany's opinion of her own requirements should affect her attitude. Her opinion on this point and the facts on this point were both of great importance in connection with the extent of her culpability. In that connection it would seem, with all fairness to Germany, that the report should emphasize the percentage which expressed the real extent of the default. While the default was important from the financial point of view, as Mr. Delacroix had explained, the percentage of demand which Germany had not supplied was small, and this must be recognized as proving that Germany had made a very considerable effort in a very difficult matter and had attained a very large measure of success.

Mr. Boyden had hitherto confined himself to the voluntary default on the part of Germany and the reasons which tended to lessen her culpability. If, however, he were making a report, he would go further and would deal with the whole question of the failure of Germany in the execution of her obligations under the treaty and would explain that the conditions imposed by the treaty had been demonstrated by experience to be impossible and that that impossibility had affected not only Germany's financial situation and her financial obligations to the Allies but also her obligations like these in respect of coal and wood. He would further express the opinion which he had already expressed before the commission that the continuance of these conditions had already resulted in a great loss of money to the Allies and would result in still further loss so long as they were maintained.

SOME RURAL CREDIT CONTROVERSIES.

WALL STREET VERSUS THE FARMERS.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, on November 22 I addressed this body relative to activities in connection with rural credits legislation. Prof. Samuel McCune Lindsay, president of the Academy of Political Science, has taken some exceptions to what I said. He has released his letter to the press and has suggested that I place his letter in the RECORD so that it may have the same recognition as had my speech. I request unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the letter of Professor Lindsay, together with a news item in reference to same which appeared in the Washington Star on January 15, 1923, and my reply to Professor Lindsay, together with a short editorial from the Manufacturers Record for January 4, 1923, entitled "Propaganda of New York banking interests to control the appointment of a new governor of the Federal Reserve Board," and that these may be printed in the usual 8-point type.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

THE ACADEMY OF POLITICAL SCIENCE
IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK,
January 10, 1923.

Hon. EDWIN F. LADD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LADD: On November 22 you addressed the Senate in order, as you said, "to raise a warning voice" concerning the meeting of the Academy of Political Science which was to take place on November 23 and 24 at the Hotel Astor in New York City. You also said that you addressed the Senate in order to warn it in time before it was "too late" to appreciate the "tremendous import to the people of this country" of the discussion of the money problem, under the auspices of the academy, which might lead to recommendations to the Senate concerning the purport and origin of which the Senate ought to be forewarned.

As a scientist, teacher, educator, former college president, and editor, you might be supposed to be better informed as to the purposes and impartial scientific character of meetings like those of the academy and also to know that no resolutions or recommendations are made at such meetings, neither do they lend themselves to propaganda of any kind, but have for their sole purpose untrammeled public discussion looking to the enlightenment and education of public opinion on economic, social, and political problems of national interest and concern.

As proof of the dangerous character of this meeting and of others which you imagine are being planned and engineered by what you call the influence of bankers and Wall Street, you cited the personnel of the committee on program and arrangements, which, according to your description, consisted of 10 economists, college presidents or professors, one Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, the president of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, a lawyer and former Postmaster General of the United States, the governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, a Congressman from New York, a journalist, a retired banker, three bankers [Mr. Lamont, Mr. Catchings, and Mr. Warburg], "and a son of another financier," George W. Perkins, jr. You sum up your comment on these persons by saying:

"It seems to me * * * that anyone who had given any serious study to economic conditions in this country would find no hesitancy in reaching the conclusion that this committee on program and arrangements—with the possible exception of a few who might be mingled in for 'trimmings'—is constituted of minds entirely in accordance with the banking interests. Any program arranged by this committee for the discussion of the money problem would naturally be arranged with a viewpoint of developing the ideas of the big bankers."

If that conclusion is justified, it is very strange that none of the three bankers you mention took any part themselves in the program of this meeting.

You then single out for special comment the program of one session of the meeting presided over by Prof. Edwin R. A. Seligman, the program of which you cite in full, as follows:

"1. Introductory address of the presiding officer.

"2. Agricultural financing. Eugene Meyer, jr., managing director War Finance Corporation, Washington, D. C. SYDNEY ANDERSON, Congressman from Minnesota, chairman Joint Commission on Agricultural Inquiry.

"3. Fall in agricultural prices, causes and remedies. George E. Roberts, vice president National City Bank, New York City.

"4. Should the farmer have additional credits to enable him to hold his crops for better prices? Jesse E. Pope, Washington, D. C.

"5. Discussion. Thomas P. Gore, former United States Senator from Oklahoma."

You state that you are "heartened that the name of former Senator Gore appears" and "to learn that the farmers will have a friend in court * * * because of his presence."

It would not seem that any fair-minded person should find cause for alarm in that program with such a background. I am, therefore, prompted to ask myself what was the real reason for your warning to the Senate and your lengthy address at an unusually busy time in the Senate, devoted to what is obviously a phantom of your imagination. It can hardly be accounted for by lack of information nor as a willful attempt to deceive. The proceedings of the meeting will be published in full, as is customary, and, in fact, are now in press. That volume will best answer the insinuations which you so unjustly make concerning the program and the men connected with it. It will include speeches of some men like Prof. Irving Fisher, who discussed the theory of "the stabilized dollar," with which most bankers are wholly in disagreement. You may be interested to know that Henry Ford was invited to speak at this meeting or to send a representative of the staff of the Dearborn Independent, in order that his views of the money problem should be authoritatively presented for consideration. From the whole trend of your speech I am led to assume—but would be glad to be corrected if I am mistaken—that you are in sympathy with Mr. Ford's theory that the solution of agricultural financing is to be found in the issue of "soft" money. In fact, you say in one place:

"I wish to place the farmers on guard at this time that if they are to get any legislation which will be of lasting benefit to them it must be on a basis of real money. No system of loaning of bank credits or rural credits, or whatever alluring name that will be offered, will serve to do anything else than to push the farmer into the quagmire of debt."

Following the usual methods of the Dearborn Independent you begin an attack upon Paul M. Warburg and Eugene Meyer, jr., in an attempt to show that the work that both of these gentlemen have done as servants of the public has been done or is being done in the interests of Wall Street by misstatement of facts, insinuations, and fallacious reasoning based on assumed false premises. You introduce Mr. Warburg as "a prince of the house of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., another money-trust firm of international bankers. It is asserted Warburg is the father of the present financial system known as the Federal reserve system. He is the gentleman who devised the trap into which was led the entire American Nation," and so forth. You may know, because it is a matter of public record, that Mr. Warburg left the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. eight years ago when he entered the Federal Reserve Board.

I am informed that he has had no connection or interest in Kuhn, Loeb & Co. since he withdrew from it in 1914. You may also know that he left the Federal Reserve Board in 1918, and has devoted himself for a year and a half to the development of an acceptance corporation. He had urged the creation of corporations of this type for many years as essential to the development of our foreign trade and our discount market, and the chief function of such a corporation is to facilitate the transportation of American farm products to foreign countries. You know, of course, how easy it is to awaken the farmer's suspicion and antagonism by reference to Wall Street, and so you have rehashed the threadbare tale of the wicked Money Trust and the international bankers, headed by J. P. Morgan & Co. and Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and have not hesitated, untruthfully, to associate Mr. Warburg's name with the latter in order to discredit him with the farmer and also to fan the farmer's distrust of the Federal reserve system and of banks in general.

It is useless to answer your attack on the Federal reserve system when you reiterate arguments so often contradicted that the collapse of prices for agricultural products is due to operation of the Federal reserve system. How often has it been pointed out that the prices for farm products rose and fell simultaneously in all markets of the world? Canadian and Argentine wheat, not subject to the policies of the Federal Reserve Board, fell in price at the same time as American wheat. All began to decline long before the Federal reserve system began to contract its loans. I think the American farmer is beginning to see that he is suffering chiefly from the crippling of European markets which can not absorb our surplus and from a maladjustment of wages. All the credits in the world can not permanently boost prices unless the purchasing power of the world is restored. If it had not been for the protection afforded by the Federal reserve system both business men and farmers of the United States would have been exposed to far greater suffering. Our quick return to the gold standard and the placing of business on a solid basis in which the forces of supply and demand are working unhampered, while Europe is still in the throes of violent economic disturbance, is largely due, in my judgment, to the excellent functioning of the Federal reserve system. It is also true that the bulk of complaints concerning lack of credit comes from sections of the country served by country banks unwilling or unable to make use of the Federal reserve system.

To the best of my knowledge Mr. Warburg has never claimed to be the "father of the Federal reserve system." Together with many others, he has contributed his share in its creation, and he has every reason to be proud of it. I am told, however, that he may lay claim to a more exclusive right of authorship when it comes to the War Finance Corporation, which, it is said, was substantially his creation. Shortly after the armistice, and after he had left the Federal Reserve Board, in a speech before the United States Chamber of Commerce in November, 1918, he was one of the first to advise the conversion of the War Finance Corporation into a peace finance corporation. Not all the banks were in sympathy with the organization of the War Finance Corporation and most of them opposed very openly and strenuously the continuation of its operations after the conclusion of the peace. Whether they were right or wrong, the fact remains that it was an instrument of Mr. Warburg's creation under Mr. Meyer's active operation, which has rendered substantial aid to the farmers during a period of acute distress, and the farmers have expressed themselves as highly appreciative of this.

One of the outstanding progressive moves made by the farmers has been the development of cooperative selling of agricultural products, and in this Aaron Sapiro is said to have been one of their most helpful advisers. The banks are not at all unanimous in support of this idea; indeed, there is a good deal of skepticism and distrust with regard to the scheme. You go out of your way to stigmatize Mr. Meyer—"another Wall Street manipulator"—and Mr. Sapiro—who took no part in our academy meeting—as men of whom the farmer should beware because they might be instrumental in delivering control of these cooperatives to the banks. "Forbid the time may ever come when the unseen hand of Wall Street or any special group of financiers has the control of organized farmers in their grasp. If such come true, then their organization will prove a boomerang to come back and strike, a viper to curse and wound them in their adversity."

I have gone into these details at such length because, unless you were talking in amazing ignorance, an analysis of your arguments leads to the conclusion that in attacking these three men you could not honestly have singled them out because they represented the banks, nor that you could have attacked the program committee because you really believed that it formed the background for some dastardly attempt to be made on the farmers by the bankers. It seems more logical to suppose you desired to attack three men whom the Dearborn Independent would single out as representatives of what it calls "international finance" of the Hebrew faith. I am writing this letter in order to put the question point-blank to you, so that you may answer it and so that the Senate that you addressed and the farmers for whose benefit—or misguidance—your speech was made should not be left in any doubt as to what you really meant. Are you a proponent of Mr. Ford's theory that strives to supplant interest charges by the issue of "soft" money, and do you think that the country is best to be served by attacks on men of the Jewish faith, when such attacks are based entirely on the propagation of malicious lies?

In your future speeches if you should wish to draw on the Dearborn Independent for the statement of facts, let me warn you in advance that it is a good source of reference for willful or negligent misstatements. Let me give you only two illustrations so that you may have no doubt as to the correctness of my statement. The Dearborn Independent told the farmers that Paul Warburg took part in the peace negotiations at Versailles on the American side, while his brother was a representative on the German side. This is an absolute lie. Paul Warburg did not go to Europe during the war, and not until long after the conclusion of the treaty of Versailles. In a similar manner the Dearborn Independent, in order to prove its thesis of the danger of the world domination to be exercised by the Jews, has stated to its innocent readers that Millerand, Kerensky, and many similar prominent Gentiles are Jews.

I am frank to admit that I am using this opportunity of stating these facts to you because, I hope that in doing so some of those may be reached whose minds have been willfully poisoned by the Dearborn Independent and also because I think that men in Congress should be warned to watch and fight attempts of this sort to stir up class and race prejudice. If I should be mistaken in my assumption and should you disapprove of the policies of the Dearborn Independent as much as I do, nothing would give me greater pleasure than to have you state this on the floor of the Senate.

Inasmuch as your speech, with its unfair interpretation and incorrect statements concerning the purposes and character of our academy meeting has been given wide publication in the columns of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and has been reprinted elsewhere, as I note in the columns of the Call Magazine (New York Call, December 17, 1922), I am giving copies of the letter in reply to the press, and you are at liberty to publish it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD if you wish to bring it to the attention of the Senate in the same manner as you raised a voice of warning.

Yours truly, SAMUEL MCCUNE LINDSAY.

CHARGES SENATOR LADD BACKS "FORD THEORIES"—REPLY TO SPEECH AGAINST FARM-CREDIT LEGISLATION BASED ON FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM.

NEW YORK, January 15.—Replying to a speech in the Senate last November by Senator LADD, Republican (North Dakota), in which he warned against any farm-credit legislation based on the Federal reserve system and favored by the large banking interests, President Samuel McCune Lindsay, of the New York Academy of Political Science, suggested in an open letter to the Senator that the latter's alarm was occasioned evidently by his "sympathy with Henry Ford's 'soft' money theories" and his adoption of Mr. Ford's "unwarranted attacks" on international bankers of the Hebrew faith.

Pointing out that Senator LADD referred to the program of the annual meeting of the academy, then about to take place, which provided discussion of agricultural financing among other things, Mr. Lindsay said:

"As a scientist, teacher, educator, former college president, and editor, you might be supposed to be better informed as to the purposes and impartial scientific character of meetings like those of the academy and also to know that no resolutions or recommendations are made at such meetings, neither do they lend themselves to propaganda of any kind, but have for their sole purpose untrammeled public discussion looking to the enlightenment and education of public opinion on economic, social, and political problems of national interest and concern."

REPLY TO PROFESSOR LINDSAY.

MY DEAR PROFESSOR LINDSAY: In response to your very interesting communication of the 10th instant, wherein you take issue with a certain speech delivered by me in the Senate on November 22, 1922, in which I took occasion to point out to the Senate and the country a certain conference called by the Academy of Political Science in the city of New York for the purpose of considering "The money problem," and in which I also discussed certain of the problems facing the farming interests of this country, I make this hasty reply in order that you may clearly understand that I take great pleasure in replying to you. It is quite interesting to note that it took you two months to prepare and post your letter of exceptions to my speech. Also I might note that it seems a strange coincidence that at about the same time I received other communications from other parties relative to the same matter and couched in somewhat the same vein of argument. But, of course, my dear Professor, it is a mere coincidence, and I do not mean to imply that you have been in conference with anyone relative to the subject matter of your communication. In the due course of events I would expect it to take about two months for the big banking groups of this country to formulate a reply to the speech about which you seem to be so unnecessarily sensitive. If you do not choose to drag our correspondence, it might be that we can develop a very profitable discussion for the American people. Due to the press of other official matters, I regret that I am compelled to make a limited reply to you at this time.

You seem to be interested as to the manner in which I have reached some of my conclusions. I will say that when I commenced my study of the money question I approached the study with no view of proving any particular theory or advocating any special cause. My single purpose was to find out where the trouble lay. I wanted to know what was fundamentally wrong. I had no ax to grind and no pet theories to defend; I simply wanted the truth.

Shortly after my election to the United States Senate, and before coming to Washington to take the oath of office, I was casting about trying to ascertain the causes that were responsible for the economic conditions that have played such havoc to the agricultural interests of this country. First, I started out with the idea that our transportation facilities were largely responsible for our troubles. With that in view, I made several trips to different points in the country in order that I might study the situation in detail. I did not follow that lead very long before I became convinced that I was on the wrong track, and that the banking system of the country was, more than any other factor, responsible for the situation in which we now find ourselves—a condition in which the agricultural interests of the greatest Nation on earth are almost reduced to a state of peasantry while certain banks are piling up untold wealth.

Acting upon my convictions, I arranged for conferences with representative bankers in the Twin Cities and in Chicago for the purpose of canvassing the situation. From the standpoint of a layman, I prepared a series of questions that I wanted to ask the bankers, which questions—being honestly answered—might throw light upon the situation. Before I had finished talking with the bankers of the above-mentioned cities my suspicions had become verified, and from that time on I have felt that I was following the right lead.

After coming to Washington I continued to investigate and study the money and banking problem and am now fully convinced that our financial system, and especially as it has been administered, is at the bottom of the major portion of our troubles. In order to bring the question squarely before the public I introduced a bill bearing on the subject early in the special session of the Sixty-seventh Congress. It is Senate bill 2604. I am somewhat surprised that you have not known my position on the matter since my bill has been before the Senate for so long a period, and since that is so do you not think it is either a confession of ignorance on your part or a matter of presumption to seek to define my position on the question as other than the record shows it to be? I have made several speeches on the subject, and I do not see how they have escaped the attention of one who claims to be so thorough in his study of current issues and economic questions. I might add, the bill is still before the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate.

Shortly after the bill was introduced I noticed through press reports that the President of the National City Bank of New York was becoming somewhat alarmed with regard to the possibility of legislation of that kind. In an address before the Chamber of Commerce in Boston, Mass., he referred to the legislation and appealed to members of the chamber of commerce to use their influence to counteract any movement along the line indicated in the bill. His position was simply another confirmation of the fact that I was on the right track. Incidentally, he mentioned the names of Mr. Ford and Mr. Edison in connection with the same subject. I think this was the first time I ever knew that Mr. Ford was interested in the money question.

Since that time I have noticed a great many statements in regard to Mr. Ford's position on the money question, but I have not seen where he himself has taken any definite stand as to a complete monetary system for the United States. Therefore it is impossible to answer your question as to whether or not I am in sympathy with Mr. Ford's theory. I do not know what his theory is. I understand he is in favor of the abolition of the present false gold-basis standard, with that I am in thorough accord. As to the clever reference to "soft" money we will pay a little more attention. It occurs to me that a great many people are trying to define Mr. Ford's position for him, just as you evidently tried to do with me in your letter to me, but I am more interested in knowing just what Mr. Ford's position is rather than what you or anyone else say it to be. There can be but little doubt that Mr. Ford has caused a great deal of worry in the camps of special privilege and predatory interests. It would seem to me that his success should recommend his methods to other industrial leaders instead of a constant attempt from all sources at their command to destroy him. Since you choose to line yourself up with those who would destroy him, it is no concern of mine, and is really a matter of small moment. You attempt to prove to me the fairness of your organization in dealing with your recent discussion of the money problem and seek to leave the impression with me that the conference was for the purpose of developing information and learn something of the problem, and you cite the fact that Mr. Ford was invited to join in the discussion, yet in the same remarkable document you declare, in effect, that Ford is all wrong and you attempt to ridicule him. Indeed, it seems that Mr. Ford showed rare wisdom in refusing to come before a jury stacked against him. Had he come I suppose you would hold him up to the public as an illustration of your "broadmindness," just as you sought consolation in the statement relative to Prof. Irving Fisher, although I am at a loss to understand just what satisfaction you get out of his connection with the conference.

My speech called for no criticism from you, or anyone else, relative to the racial or religious issue. My criticism of Mr. Warburg and others was a criticism of their acts and connections, and without thought of race. You evidently would like to sidetrack the issue to a question of race and religion. I have found that to be one of the favorite weapons of those who dare not face the real issue. I want you to distinctly understand that I have treated the money problem and the problems of the farmer with a view of the economic issues involved and without reference to race or creed. You, the international bankers, or any of the representatives of their system, will not sidetrack me upon a racial or religious issue, no matter how fascinating it may be to you. I want it fully and definitely understood that you are the gentleman who has raised this question, apparently as a subterfuge for lack of argument, and it is to your everlasting discredit and to the discredit of your organization that you should resort to such methods. I do not wish to appear harsh, but I do want you to understand, my dear Professor, that since you have attempted to raise this issue, which can be for no other purpose than beclouding the real issue, you must bear the responsibility for it. As for your defense of Mr. Warburg, Mr. Meyer, and others, I will have more to say. It matters not to me whether they are Warburgs or Morgans, whenever I feel that their policies and actions are detrimental to the American people I expect to voice my protest and do not propose to be scared off by any bugaboo of a subterfuge argument. Since receiving your communication I have had on my desk several of the back numbers of the publications of your society. I am absolutely unable to agree with you that you do not indulge in propaganda. You warn me against depending upon the Dearborn Independent for my facts. I have never yet done so. But your letter also caused me to look over some of the back numbers of that publication, and I am quite free to admit that it strikes me as being an authority of less prejudice, and of more sound facts than the publications of your society.

You seem to be worried about the statement relative to Mr. Warburg's connection with the Federal reserve system.

I wish to quote the introduction to one of the publications of your organization—the same being a compilation of Mr. Warburg's "Essays on banking reform in the United States." The introduction was written by your noted friend, Prof. Edwin R. A. Seligman, and I feel sure you will accept him as an authority. It is as follows:

"The essays which are here collected and published in book form not only are valuable in themselves, but form a landmark in the history of American contributions to the banking problem. It is in a general way known to the public that Mr. Warburg was in some way connected with the passage of the Federal reserve act, and his appointment to his present responsible position on the Federal Reserve Board was acclaimed on all sides with a rare degree of approval and congratulation; but I fancy that it is known only to a very few exactly how great is the indebtedness of the United States to Mr. Warburg. For it may be stated without fear of contradiction that in its fundamental features the Federal reserve act is the work of Mr. Warburg more than of any other man in the country.

"Up to a very few years ago, virtually all the efforts of the banking reformers in this country were directed to securing what was called elasticity of the currency through the abolition of the bond reserve for bank-note circulation. Neither the report of the Indianapolis monetary conference nor the schemes of the committee of the New York Chamber of Commerce a decade later attempted to do anything more than that; and no single plan seemed to approve itself to the country. The two new ideas which were injected into the discussion by Mr. Warburg were, first, the shifting of the emphasis from the currency problem to the reserve problem, and, second, the advocacy of the principle of rediscounting a new kind of commercial paper.

"The first point is fully explained in the essay on the United States Reserve Bank of the United States. Mr. Warburg recalled to our mind what had been forgotten by most of us, that the real pith of modern banking is the question of the reserve, and that the essential weakness of the American system was the extreme decentralization of resources, resulting in the time of stress or trouble in every individual bank attempting to secure its own solvency in disregard either of the welfare of other banks or of the needs of the business community. In essay after essay Mr. Warburg hammered on this one idea until he got it firmly fixed in the opinion, first of the experts and then of the general public. Without some method of combining the scattered resources of the individual banks it was clear that no essential progress could be made.

"The second point was equally new to the American public, although, like the first, it was a familiar achievement of modern banking reform abroad. Mr. Warburg pointed out that the absence of proper two-name commercial paper and the nonexistence of any central bank or banks at which such paper could be instantly rediscounted for cash, compelled the banks either to invest their money in illiquid securities or to loan the funds on the stock exchange, thus producing the remarkable variations in the money rate and bringing about the periodical stringency in the money market.

"After his lucid exposition of what might be accomplished by a rediscounting and thus introducing into the United States the so-called discount policy of European countries, it was gradually realized that this was the second essential feature of banking reform.

"Mr. Warburg also called attention to the advantages of a new currency not based upon the deposit of Government bonds, but he made it clear that this reform, which was the sole objective of all previous schemes, was of only minor importance and that it would follow as a necessary consequence from the adoption of the two fundamental points mentioned above. These two principles form the real backbone of the new Federal reserve law. When the Aldrich commission was appointed it was not long before Senator Aldrich—to his credit be it said—was won over by Mr. Warburg to the adoption of these two fundamental features. The Aldrich bill differed in some important particulars from the present law. It went further in the direction of centralization and it involved less control by the Government of banking operations. The new act is in some details superior to the Aldrich bill; in others inferior. The concession in the shape of the 12 regional reserve banks that had to be made for political reasons is, in the opinion of Mr. Warburg, as well as of the writer of this introduction, a mistake, for it will probably, to some extent at least, weaken the good results which would otherwise have followed. On the other hand, the existence of the Federal Reserve Board creates in everything but in name a real central bank, and it depends largely upon the wisdom with which the board exercises its great powers as to whether we shall be able to secure most of the advantages of a central bank without any of its dangers.

"In many minor respects also the Federal reserve act differs from the Aldrich bill, but in the two fundamentals of combined reserves and of a discount policy the Federal reserve act has frankly accepted the principles of the Aldrich bill, and these principles, as has been stated, were the creation of Mr. Warburg and of Mr. Warburg alone.

"It is this fact which gives especial interest to the present collection of essays which are printed just as they were originally published and which show the gradual development in unimportant points of Mr. Warburg's thought. In weighing the merits of these essays it must not be forgotten that Mr. Warburg had a practical object in view. In formulating his plans and in advancing slightly varying suggestions from time to time it was incumbent on him continually to remember that the education of the country must be gradual and that a large part of the task was to break down prejudices and remove suspicions. His plans therefore contain all sorts of elaborate suggestions designed to guard the public against fancied dangers and to persuade the country that the general scheme was at all practicable. It was the hope of Mr. Warburg that with the lapse of time it may be possible to eliminate from the law not a few clauses which were inserted, largely at his suggestion, for educational purposes.

"As it was my privilege to say to President Wilson when originally urging the appointment of Mr. Warburg on the Federal Reserve Board, at a time when the political prejudice against New York bankers ran very high, England also, three-quarters of a century ago, had a practical banker who was virtually responsible for the ideas contained in Peel's bank act of 1840. Mr. Samuel Jones Lloyd was honored as a consequence by the British Government and was made Lord Overstone. The United States was equally fortunate in having with it a Lord Overstone. And while it is not the custom for America to confer peerages upon its distinguished citizens it is fortunately beginning to become the practice to induce them to accept positions of great public responsibility in which they can at once serve the community and honor themselves.

"It is my special pleasure to be able to write these few words of introduction because it was in my study that Mr. Warburg first conceived the idea of presenting his views to the public. When he began to chat familiarly on the subject he at once impressed his listeners by the importance and novelty of his views. His modesty and his shrinking from public controversy were so pronounced that it was only with the greatest difficulty that he was persuaded to put his ideas on paper. But having once set out on the task, there was no stopping, and from year to year essay upon essay flowed from his facile pen, giving more precision and point to his fundamental principles, until he was recognized as the real leader in the new movement. The Federal reserve act will be associated in history with the name of Paul M. Warburg, and the Academy of Political Science deem it a rare privilege to be able to present to the public this volume of his collected essays."

It seems to me that this should satisfy you on this point. However, evidence is cumulative. Professor Seligman apparently made every claim he could for Mr. Warburg without offending the sensibilities of those who thought they had some real part in developing the fundamentals of our present currency system.

It is worthy of note, however, that Mr. Warburg, in testifying before a Senate committee on his nomination to the Federal Reserve Board, said that "I have had the success which comes to few people, of starting an idea and starting it so that the whole country has taken it up, and it has taken some tangible form."

It is also worthy of note that in that same hearing Mr. Warburg refused repeatedly to give the committee any information concerning the affairs of his partners, but did testify that different members of his firm supported all three candidates for the Presidency—Wilson, Taft, and Roosevelt. Did that not strike you as being a policy of "safety first."

A BANKERS' TRUST.

Referring to my criticism of certain bankers you state "If that conclusion is justified, it is very strange that none of the three bankers you mention took any part themselves in the program of this meeting."

It is not "strange that none of the three bankers mentioned took any part themselves in the program of this meeting." International bankers have never been known to come out personally and tell the people their real plans or ulterior purposes, and as a rule act through agents and mercenaries, hoping to avoid personal responsibility.

You also state, "You know, of course, how easy it is to awaken the farmers' suspicion and antagonism by reference to Wall Street, and so you rehashed the threadbare tale of the wicked Money Trust and the international bankers, headed by J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and have not hesitated, untruthfully, to associate Mr. Warburg's name with the latter in order to discredit him with the farmer and also to fan the farmer's distrust of the Federal reserve system and of banks in general."

Professor, you have evidently overlooked the fact that a committee, appointed by the Congress of the United States, found that a Money Trust did exist, controlling the money and credits of the United States, composed of the following banks: J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the First National Bank, the National City Bank, all of New York; and Lee Higginson & Co., of Boston and New York; and Kidder, Peabody & Co., Boston and New York. You have also overlooked the fact that Paul M. Warburg was one of the principal members of the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. at this time.

In your anxiety to defend Paul M. Warburg and Eugene Meyer, jr., and the fraudulent gold basis Federal reserve system, you make a gratuitous attack upon Henry Ford, saying that Mr. Ford has "a theory that the solution of agricultural financing is to be found in the issue of 'soft' money." I know of no such statement being made by Mr. Ford, but since you have used the term "soft money" I should like you to explain what you mean by "soft money."

The time for "soft concealments" on the money question has passed. International bankers will have to face the issue of real money against false money. Will you answer the following questions?

Do you believe in real money; that is, lawful money issued by the Government of the United States? Or do you believe in false money, bank credits, created and loaned by banking corporations for their private gain?

A frank answer will show whether you stand on the side of the banks or the side of the people.

QUICK RESULTS.

I notice your statement, "Our quick return to the gold standard and the placing of business on a solid basis, in which the forces of supply and demand are working unhampered." Professor, it would seem that you and your organization have not realized that over 90 per cent of the debts placed upon the resources and people of the different countries of the world have been created by banks and banking corporations creating debts by the loaning of a bank created and bank controlled false and fictitious substitute for lawful money; called in Europe "money of account," and in this country "bank credits," which means money having no existence, and represented only by credit and debit figures on the books of banks.

It would seem that you gentlemen are looking so hard at the gold fly on the barn that you fail to see the barn of "bank credits," and that gold is the fly in the ointment of civilization.

You do not seem to realize the fact that the value of the dollar, or money, is not in the gold but in the purchasing power of the dollar.

Irving Fisher, professor of political economy at Yale University, whom you mentioned, after teaching for many years that gold was the standard of value and "that 25.8 grains of gold fixes the purchasing power of the dollar," has made the following admission: "In fact, I am very strongly of the opinion, based on considerable study, that the present high cost of living is largely ascribed to this check inflation, which is going on all over the world. They are increasing daily all over the world. I believe the rise in price is about half due to that alone. I am very glad you mentioned that, Senator, because, while I think the expansibility and contractibility of the currency, of the money, is important, the expansibility and contractibility of the 'credit' is the much more important."

To refresh your memory and to prove that the dollar and not the 25.8 grains of gold is the unit of value, I will quote from the law that established the dollar as the money unit of value in the United States, passed by Congress April 2, 1792, section 9: "Eagle, each to be of the value of $10 or units; half dollars, each to be of half the value of the dollar or unit.

"And be it further enacted, That the money of account of the United States shall be expressed in dollars or units, dimes or tenths, cents or hundreds, mills or thousands. A dime being the tenth part of a dollar, a mill a thousandth part of a dollar, and that all accounts in the United States shall be kept and had in conformity to this regulation."

This act establishes $1 as the legal unit of value in the United States, and says that when gold is coined into a dollar, or money unit, it shall contain 25.8 grains of gold, and that this gold shall be weighed according to the standard used at the mint for weighing gold before being coined into money units or dollars.

There is only one standard of value in a money system, and it has been fully recognized by all honest and reliable authorities on money. Plainly stated, the standard of value in a money system is regulated by the number of dollars, or money units, in circulation in the monetary system of the country issuing them. "The value of money in any one country is the present quantity of the current money in that country in proportion to present trade."

Your expression "Our quick return to the gold standard" is erroneous, as there is no such thing as a gold standard; you evidently meant our quick return to the gold basis of our money system, which enables banks, under the pretext of protecting their gold reserves, to limit the supply of money in actual circulation and say how much or how little credit the people shall have. This puts our money system absolutely in control of international bankers and banking corporations.

Gov. W. P. G. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, exercised this infamous power and plainly stated to the representatives of the farmers that he could do nothing to help agriculture, because the gold reserve had fallen to 40 per cent and that he had to protect it as provided in the Federal reserve act. This meant that deflation had to go on to protect this fraudulent gold basis of our present money system. In other words, about $8,000,000,000 in the value of farm products had to be destroyed; yea, more than this, the entire legitimate business of over a hundred million people had to be paralyzed, followed by bankruptcy and ruin, to protect this fraudulent gold basis Federal reserve system.

You refer to Europe still being in the throes of violent economic disturbance. These disturbances are due to the efforts of international bankers to put Europe back on the fraudulent gold basis and protect the billions of debts that have been dishonestly created upon the people of Europe by the loaning of bank credits, a fictitious substitute for money.

The best way for the United States to help Europe is to establish an honest money system, as provided in the Constitution of the United States, and call upon the people of Europe to follow our example.

SERVANTS OF THE PUBLIC.

You speak of Mr. Warburg and Mr. Meyer as "servants of the public." Mr. Warburg admits that he started his public work for financial reform in this country in 1906, and admits that he did not become an American citizen until 1911, filing his first papers in 1908. That fact does not seem to me to be consistent with your testimony of his great public-spirited Americanism. It was officially found that since Mr. Warburg became a member of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. in 1902, up until 1912, that Kuhn, Loeb & Co. acquired an interest in 23 banks and trust companies, in addition to what they already held. Was Mr. Warburg engaged in great public service when he was engaged in this amalgamation, or was he after the dollar and its power? Was he engaged in great public service when the Pujo committee found his firm to be one of those that constituted the Money Trust? The elections of 1910, 1912, 1918, and 1920 did not seem to indicate that the people held the situation as lightly as you seem to when you speak of "the threadbare tale of the wicked Money Trust." The elections of 1922 should also bear some message to those who persist in those same kind of policies.

You deplore any effort to "fan the farmer's distrust." You economists, theorists, and bankers have held the financial destiny of this Nation in your hands for over half a century. To where have you led the farmer? Since the inauguration of the Federal reserve system in 1914 the mortgage indebtedness of the farmers in this country has increased over 25 per cent, and the farmers are less able to pay a debt to-day than they were in 1914; on the other hand, the assets of the banks have increased in an amount in excess of our war indebtedness. Do you not think it time that the farmer begins to look with suspicion upon his "financial saviors"? If that is the kind of help you propose for the farmer, it is high time that some one "fan his distrust."

How do you account for the increasing prosperity of the banks, prosperity on such a large scale, while at the same time, under the same law, the farmer is consistently going into debt and now faces a condition where papers all over the country are carrying full-page advertisements of notices of foreclosures on farm property? Even now the authorities on the Federal reserve act are admitting that it was not framed to meet the needs of the farmers, and there are even those who decry any amendment the purpose of which is to meet the needs of the farmers. Do you believe in denying him on every hand? What have you offered him that is constructive? Yet you seem to think that instead of warning him against his enemies that we should lull him into security.

For fear that you may think I am ignoring it, I will state that I do not agree with your conclusions that the War Finance Corporation has been such a tremendous aid to the farmer. I am glad to get your admission, however, that it is the creature of Mr. Warburg. Some time I hope to give that organization a full discussion, and think that I will be able to show that primarily it has been operating for the benefit of the banks. Neither do I agree with your conclusions about the little State banks. It is a great pity that all of our banking institutions are not imbued with the same spirit of service as are these little State banks.

As evidence of Mr. Warburg's continued interest in the Federal Reserve Board, I refer you to the Manufacturers' Record for January 4, 1923.

If you have any doubts about the connections of certain financiers and about the present existence of a Money Trust, I invite your attention to a resolution introduced by Representative SINCLAIR, of North Dakota, which proposes and investigation of that very question. If the bankers feel that they have been maligned, why do they not get behind the passage of this resolution, instead of being content that it slumber in the committee?

Can it be possible, Professor Lindsay, that you have again been looking through the colored glasses until your vision has become more distorted than when you appeared before the Lockwood committee in the interests of the New York landlords, maintaining there was no serious housing problem in New York? Certainly as a propagandist you are now rendering greater service to Wall Street bankers and financiers than was given the landlords, for which propaganda they should give you a far more substantial retainer than that alleged to have been allowed by the landlords.

I assure you, my dear professor, I should not have made any reference to propaganda had you not sought by implication at least to indicate that I had, "as a scientist, teacher, educator, former college president, and editor," deserted my former high standard to employ propaganda.

You may criticize my humble effort in behalf of the farmers as bad propaganda and myself as a disciple of worthy men who, like both of us, from time to time may be misguided by well-greased and insidious propaganda where we had least expected it.

[From the Manufacturers' Record, January 4, 1923.]

PROPAGANDA OF NEW YORK BANKING INTERESTS TO CONTROL APPOINTMENT OF NEW GOVERNOR OF FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

On December 15 the presidents of some national banks in the South, possibly most of the leading ones and probably others throughout the Union, received the following telegram, incorporated in a letter asking them please to take action along the line suggested:

(Copy.)

"Have received following telegram from Mr. Paul Warburg, which I most heartily indorse, and hope you will act accordingly:

"'Saw Harding here yesterday, who stated to me that in view of congressional situation we must consider his name as definitely eliminated. Under these circumstances think it is most important that letters or telegrams be sent to Mr. Mellon, or possibly to the President, urging the vital importance of appointing to the board and to the governorship a man who would have the confidence of the people as being conversant with and trained in the handling of large banking affairs. A man of independence and strength is an absolute necessity unless the confidence in the system and its integrity is to be entirely destroyed. There is growing alarm concerning this amongst all business men and bankers, and I think the Secretary, and possibly also the President, ought to be immediately advised as to this. I suggest that you send telegrams yourself as chairman of the council on these lines, and also communicate with the other council members to take prompt steps in their districts.'"

The council referred to in this telegram is the advisory council of the Federal Reserve Board. To any man of intelligence the telegram explains itself. It should be remembered that it was sent by Mr. Paul Warburg, an international banker of New York, and to a southern member of the Federal reserve advisory council. This telegram shows that Mr. Paul Warburg is definitely, continuously, and aggressively attempting to perpetuate his practical domination over the banking situation in the United States as far as that is feasible through the Federal reserve system. It shows that having despaired of landing Mr. W. P. G. Harding to succeed himself as head of the Reserve Board, Mr. Warburg has been endeavoring to obtain some substitute who, if he under Mr. Warburg's influence should be put at the head of the Federal Reserve Board, would naturally be subservient to Mr. Warburg's wishes.

It will be remembered that this Mr. Warburg has a rather interesting history in connection with the Federal Reserve Board. When the reserve board act had been passed the country suddenly became filled with a propaganda emanating apparently from New York, and through New York newspapers, to the effect that the only man in this country who was sufficiently acquainted with international banking affairs to become the governor of the Federal Reserve Board was Mr. Paul Warburg. Mr. Warburg, it may be remembered, had only recently become a citizen. Indeed, he had not been a long resident of this country. He was a brother of the Warburgs, the great banking firm of Germany which was so largely identified with the financing of Germany during the war. It was an amazing proposition that this country in the organization of its great banking system, supposed by the public to be for the purpose of freeing the country from the domination of international banking interests, should select as the first governor of the Federal Reserve Board and the active man in its organization work a former German banker so recently a citizen of this country and so intimately identified with a German banking firm, which for many years has been one of the most conspicuous banking houses of Germany.

When the most amazing propaganda which we have ever seen put forth in behalf of any one man flooded this country in behalf of the nomination of Mr. Warburg, the Manufacturers' Record expressed its astonishment and marveled that the newspapers of this country should so easily fall into the trap of accepting such propaganda. Among the things said of Mr. Warburg, whose citizenship was of such recent origin, was that though he had an income of $500,000 from his interest in the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., he was, out of a spirit of patriotism, willing to give up that princely income and take a salary of $12,000 as a member of the Federal Reserve Board. There are some things that happen in this world that tax credulity and which on the very face one would think would cause newspapers to refuse to swallow such stuff; and yet that statement was published by some American papers. We can not for a moment imagine that Mr. Warburg could have been responsible for putting forth so asinine a statement, and yet it was published and some people believed it.

During Mr. Warburg's term of office in the Federal Reserve Board he was able very largely to shape the operations of that board. Indeed, the record shows that Mr. Warburg was particularly active in the formation of the Federal reserve act and that from the day of the institution of the Federal reserve system until the present time he has either directly or indirectly been a large factor in controlling its administration.

Mr. Warburg's telegram, sent to a member of the council in order that he might send it broadcast to bankers and urge them to wire or write to the President and Secretary Mellon, is a piece of impertinence to the President and to the country. Perhaps Mr. Warburg had the idea that the public would not know that the letters and telegrams which would be sent to the President and to Secretary Mellon were the outcome of his propaganda, and were worth less than the paper upon which they were written. It was an insult to the President to undertake in this way to create a propaganda in order to give the President an impression that the country was insisting that he should be guided by the views of Mr. Warburg and his associates who had so largely dominated the Federal reserve system. Indeed, it looks as though Mr. Warburg and his friends having found that it was impossible to have Mr. W. P. G. Harding confirmed if renominated, have been seeking to impose upon President Harding. Perhaps they desired to secure some other man who would pose as a patriot willing to sacrifice large financial interests for the sake of public service, whom Mr. Warburg might indeed have put forward to save large and avaricious groups who have thrived, and who doubtless hope to continue to thrive, in manipulating the finances of this country.

The administration of the Federal reserve system is not so much a training in large banking affairs, as Mr. Paul Warburg suggested in his telegram, as it is one of common sense and common honesty. Unquestionably this view has been presented to the President by men who are sincerely interested in stopping the wave of distrust which has manifested itself throughout the country as to the administration of the reserve system in the past few years. Many leading bankers as well as business men everywhere realize that the Federal reserve system is at stake, not for the reasons stated by Mr. Paul Warburg, but because of the mismanagement of that system, now almost universally recognized by the leading economists of this country and Europe as having been responsible for the business chaos of the world.

Mr. Warburg need not worry about "the confidence in the system and its integrity" being destroyed unless he should succeed in naming the governor of the board. That is the one thing that would destroy whatever confidence is left in the system. The public has had all it wants of Warburg control and all it wants of the management of the Federal Reserve Board in the interests of the big international banking houses of New York whose influence over the board has aroused such a storm of protest as to endanger the very existence of the whole system. The W. P. G. Harding régime, following shortly after the control of the board by Paul Warburg, who still is chairman of the Federal reserve advisory council, has well-nigh destroyed all faith that the American people had at the start in a Federal reserve system as a method to relieve the Nation from the domination—and we might say, damnation—of the international banking houses of New York.

We repeat that Mr. Warburg's telegram seeking to have bankers throughout the country write or wire the President is a piece of impertinence and an insult to the President and to the country.

INTEREST RATES OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS (S. DOC. NO. 291).

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a communication from the Acting Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, transmitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 335, information relative to interest charges of Federal reserve banks located in Atlanta, St. Louis, Dallas, and Kansas City, was handed down yesterday and now lies on the table. I ask that it be printed as a public document.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have not had a chance to examine the report. I wrote to the acting governor of the board, telling him what sort of minute detail I wanted him to go into in making the report; that I did not want averages given as to the per cent charges of the banks but I wanted the specific information in each particular instance. I have not had an opportunity to see whether that has been done or not. Of course, that would not interfere with the request made by the Senator from Utah. If the reply is not what I wanted, I can take it up later and require the Federal Reserve Board to obtain the information desired.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator will find it is most complete.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does it give the names of the banks and the rate of interest charged to each bank on loans and discounts?

Mr. SMOOT. It gives the amounts charged but it does not give the names of the banks. I think it would be very unwise to do that. The Senator, I suppose, could get the names of the banks. In fact, if the names of the banks were given in the report submitted here, I think it would cause a panic in the cities in which they were located, so far as the particular banks were concerned. I know the Senator from Alabama does not want to bring on any trouble in any bank, no matter where located in the United States.

Mr. HEFLIN. No; the trouble has already been brought on, and that is what I have been saying here for months, that the financial distress and business disaster were produced by the taking of money out of circulation and calling loans, and also by charging high and oppressive interest rates during the terrible drive of deflation.

Mr. SMOOT. The report will speak for itself. I think it is worthy of publication, and I think the Senate will be very much interested in it.

Mr. HEFLIN. What I was seeking and what I have in mind is that if the report is not as full as I want it to be and does not comply fully with the resolution, I am going to make an effort to have a resolution passed to make the board comply and give all the information that was sought. I am frank to say to the Senator from Utah that I intend to seek to have the money wrongfully collected from various individuals and banks paid back to them.

Since I condemned the unconscionable rates charged to people in Alabama and other States of the South and West in some instances, the interest above 12 per cent has been returned. It ought to be returned in all cases.

Mr. SMOOT. The money has already been paid back to the banks.

Mr. HEFLIN. No. I understand the interest charged above 12 per cent has been paid back in several cases.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is wrong again, but I do not want to get into any discussion with him about that now. I ask that the communication may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be printed.

DEPARTMENTAL USE OF AUTOMOBILES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, as chairman of the Council of National Defense, in response to Senate Resolution 399, agreed to January 6, 1923, relative to the number and use of automobiles by the Council of National Defense, which was ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE presented the petition of Michael Cashman, mayor, and sundry citiens of Newburyport, in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to admit Armenian refugees to the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution of Lodge No. 1212, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Coffeyville, Kans., protesting against the passage of legislation amending the immigration laws so as to admit foreign labor until the unemployed in the United States secure employment, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. LADD presented the petition of Mrs. Adolph Samuelson and 20 other citizens of Sheyenne, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation, so as to stabilize the prices of wheat, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Powers Lake National Farm Loan Association, of Powers Lake; Dunn Center National Farm Loan Association, of Dunn Center; and Central Farm Loan Association, of Dickinson, all in the State of North Dakota, protesting against the passage of the so-called Strong and Norbeck bills amending certain sections of the Federal farm loan act, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4370) granting a pension to Clara Morilon (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 4371) granting a pension to Margaret Hardesty (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4372) granting a pension to Emma J. Berry (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4373) granting a pension to M. L. Ralston (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4374) granting a pension to Albert F. Ponath (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4375) granting an increase of pension to Caroline Bemore (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4376) granting an increase of pension to Harvey C. Myers (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4377) granting a pension to Jesse Dobyns (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LENROOT:

A bill (S. 4378) granting a pension to Fannie N. Brooks; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 4379) to amend section 1709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LENROOT:

A bill (S. 4380) granting a pension to Emma L. Perry; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 271) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT OF RURAL CREDITS BILL.

Mr. McNARY. I submit at this time an amendment intended to be proposed by me to Senate bill 4280, which is pending. The amendment I submit is on page 10, line 18, to strike out "$250,000" and to insert "$150,000," so as to read:

SEC. 7. That no corporation organized under the provisions of this act shall be permitted to commence business with a paid-up capital of less than $150,000.

I simply submit the amendment at this time and ask that it may lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

STANDARDS FOR HAMPERS, BASKETS, ETC.

Mr. KING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7102) to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS OF INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted an amendment providing for the construction of a national archives building in Washington, D. C., on square east 88, including mechanical equipment, and the drafting of plans and specifications, which plans and specifications shall provide for a building not to exceed $2,500,000 in total cost, $500,000 of said sum to be disbursed and the building to be erected under the direction and supervision of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13696, the independent offices appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 to enable the United States Geographic Board to begin the preparation of a gazetteer or dictionary of place names in the United States and Alaska, to comprise the names of mountains, rivers, valleys, canyons, and other natural topographic and relief features, and also the names of all towns, cities, counties, and political divisions, and so forth, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13696, the inpendent offices appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF CROP INSURANCE.

Mr. McNARY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 413), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolved, That the time for making report required of the committee appointed under Senate Resolution 341, agreed to September 9, 1922, is hereby extended to January 1, 1924.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 3177. An act declaring a portion of the West Fork of the South Branch of the Chicago River, Cook County, Ill., to be a nonnavigable stream;

S. 4031. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Little Calumet River, in Cook County, State of Illinois, at or near the village of Riverdale, in said county;

S. 4032. Mr. WILLIS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. POMERENE] is absent on account of illness. I ask that the announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained on account of illness. I will let this notice continue through the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PROBLEMS RELATING TO REFORESTATION.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, conservation of our natural resources is vital to the life of the Nation. No natural resource is more susceptible to depletion or destruction than is our supply of timber. Within the last half century our forests have been cut with recklessness and magnitude experienced by no other country. Certain sections that once embraced vast, beautiful, and valuable forests have been denuded; other sections, with a supply of timber once thought to be inexhaustible, are being invaded and destroyed without thought of present or future.

It is estimated that five millions of acres of forests in the United States are cut and ten millions of acres are burned annually. It is estimated that in the United States there are 460,000,000 acres of forest lands, and that already 70 per cent of it has been logged of its virgin timber; that 24 per cent contains to-day only a partial and irregular growth of culled timber of useful sizes; 29 per cent has been stripped clean of merchantable products; and that 17½ per cent of our forest area, or an aggregate of 81,000,000 acres, has been stripped of its merchantable timber, burned over, and is lying practically idle, being known as unproductive land.

Sawmills that once operated in the great northern section and in New England found it necessary more than two-score years ago to move their base of operations to the States bordering along the South Atlantic and Gulf coast, and have now found it necessary to remove into the great forests of the far West. At the present rate and the present policy it will be only a few years until the supply of timber in this once wooded country will be exhausted and our home builders and industries will be compelled to go to Siberia or South America for their supply of timber. Under these circumstances the question of the conservation of our forests and of reforestation looms up as one of the big and pressing problems of to-day.

Our Government has done less than any civilized country in the world toward the conservation of our forests and the adoption of a comprehensive and wise policy of reforestation. We have had in the Department of Agriculture a bureau on forest service, and that bureau, with the funds that have been allotted to it, has performed the responsibilities incident to it in a very praiseworthy manner. The situation does not grow out of the fact that the Forest Service has not performed its mission. The trouble is, and has been, that this great Government, rich in its vast natural resources and the ability and ingenuity of its people—a country that has led all others in so many lines and in the development of industries and the broadening of influence and the advancement of civilization—has never adopted, so far as our timber resources are concerned, any fixed policy of conservation and reforestation.

The Forest Service of the Agriculture Department has procured much valuable data with reference to the progress made by other countries in conserving their timber resources; but it has in the most part confined its operations to the administration of our national forests. What this Government must do is to realize the necessity of dealing with this great problem in a large, comprehensive way, and to adopt a policy that will meet the approval of economists, as well as persons who are interested in the timber, and that will appeal to the good sense, justice, and progressive spirit of all the States. It is a question that should appeal to the Federal Government in a larger degree than to any State, because the question of a supply of lumber or timber or wood pulp affects those citizens of the United States who live in sections that were never or may not now be possessed of any forests the same as those who live in the great forest States of the country. It affects the person who reads his newspaper, or builds his home in a city, or the railroad magnates who construct their railroads through the plains of the great Middle West the same as it does the man who might be interested directly in the forest from which the wood pulp, or crossties, or timber, or lumber is cut.

Although it has been demonstrated that through a policy of planting new trees, keeping forest lands free of débris and accumulations, or fire protection, a forest can be maintained through its gradual growth at high value and, at the same time, insure large returns from economic cuttings, there are few States that have given any thought to the matter of legislation, either to protect the forests from fire, or tending toward a policy of reforestation. There is no better time than to-day for the Congress to begin a thorough investigation and study of the many questions involved in this great problem, and to recommend a comprehensive and broad and wise economic policy of conservation and reforestation, so that the National Government can cooperate with the States, and those States in which forests are located can enact uniform laws, so far as the conditions will warrant, toward conserving the timber we have and making possible more in the passing of the years.

The delay thus far has cost the timber owners and the home builders and the lumber users and the American people as a whole billions of dollars. I tremble at the thought that the day may come when we must depend on foreign countries for the lumber to shelter our people and the materials that go into the maintenance and development of our many industries.

The resolution submitted by me some days ago, and which has received the unanimous approval of the committee, will come before the Senate to-day or to-morrow, and I hope that it may receive the unanimous indorsement of this body, so that this great problem may be studied, that the recommendations of any committee appointed under the resolution may be adopted by the Congress, and that a fixed policy upon the part of this Government of conservation and reforestation may be inaugurated.

RURAL MARKETING AND CREDIT FACILITIES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4280) to provide credit facilities for the agriculture and live-stock industries of the United States; to amend the Federal reserve act; to amend the Federal farm loan act; to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds and other securities; to provide fiscal agents for the United States; and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, in line 13, after the word "market," it is proposed to strike out the period, insert a comma, and add—or upon a note secured by a mortgage on real estate, in an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the value of said real estate.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, the amendment submitted by me proposes that mortgages upon real estate in an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the value thereof shall be acceptable as an additional class of security by the banks created by the pending measure. As stated on yesterday, the bill in its present form, without such an amendment, will restrict the proposed banks to the acceptance of warehouse receipts upon nonperishable products—that is one class—and to the acceptance of chattel mortgages upon live stock which is being fattened for market. Those are the only classes of securities which the banks that are contemplated under the provisions of this measure will be allowed to accept as collateral upon which to make advances to the agricultural interests of the country. I submit that the bill restricts too greatly the character of collateral which may be accepted by the proposed banks.

As stated yesterday, the measure is heralded as one designed to provide financial facilities to assist the agriculturists of this country, and yet there is not a line or a provision in the entire measure which will render any assistance whatever to those engaged in the production of perishable products. I could see some reason for such a discrimination if it were true that those engaged in the production of perishable products could not furnish ample security upon which to obtain advances from the banks contemplated under the proposed system, but such condition does not exist. Those engaged in the growing of fruits and of vegetables, which of course are perishable products, have their real property which is utilized in connection with their operations and which furnishes ample security for advances that might be made to them through this system.

I have proposed that they may give mortgages upon their realty, making the maximum amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the value of such realty, and in that way receive some assistance in carrying on their agricultural industry through the system which is proposed. I can not comprehend why such a plan should meet with opposition. If we shall not adopt a measure of this character, we will leave absolutely without any assistance those who are engaged in the production of fruits and vegetables.

The growing of fruits and vegetables is not a great industry in some States, but in others it is the principal agricultural industry. In my State, for instance, when we refer to agriculture we embrace thousands and thousands of growers engaged in the production of citrus fruits and vegetables. Considerable staple farming is done in Florida. These farmers are deserving of encouragement.

In the northern part of the State, where there is as fine farming lands as are to be found in any of the States, cotton is produced to a considerable extent. This measure, I hope, will assist the cotton growers in that part of the State. It will assist them to the extent, at least, of enabling them to obtain advances when they have produced their cotton and placed it in warehouses and received warehouse receipts for it; but probably 80 or 90 per cent of all those engaged in agriculture within the borders of my State will derive no benefit whatever under the system proposed to be established by the pending bill.

They are precluded entirely; and this will apply in many other States where the production of nonperishables constitutes a very large part of the agricultural industry.

I think the security authorized under my amendment would be just as good security as any that is required under the other provisions of the bill. To authorize a bank to accept security of such a character would in no way impair the stability of the bank, and instead of detracting from the system in localities where they have diversified industries, as in my State and in many other States of the Union, it would help to strengthen and build up the system, because it would bring in a much greater number of those engaged in agricultural pursuits. It would help to develop those industries. Those engaged in the production of nonperishables would cooperate with those engaged in the production of perishables, and a strong, stable institution would be built up; whereas, upon the other hand, if we limited the benefits to furnishing advances upon nonperishable products after they are produced, we probably would have a weak institution.

I have been unable to see, also, why the measure denies the privilege of securing loans to those who are engaged in the production of nonperishables during the period of the planting, the growing, the producing, and the harvesting of those nonperishable products. In some States it takes practically a year to produce a crop. In fact, in some States, referring to staple crops, it is said that it takes 13 months to produce a crop. If the farmer is left during all that period without any financial assistance, he is very greatly hampered in the matter of producing the products to the point of harvesting and depositing them in a warehouse so that he may come under the system proposed by this measure and obtain advances from the banks authorized by the bill.

We say, "We will not assist you financially until after your crops have been harvested and stored in the warehouse." The farmer, unless he is a man of means and has a lot of idle capital, necessarily has to obtain financial assistance during the time that he is growing the crop. If he can not go to what are called the farmers' banks to be created under this measure and obtain advances during that period upon ample security, then necessarily he is forced to go into other financial channels for the purpose of obtaining the money to produce and harvest his crop. Then he would be subjected to the payment of such interest as may be required in financing his crop through other channels; he would be subjected to the greed of the speculator and the buyer who makes advances with a view to purchasing crops, and frequently purchases them while they are in course of production. We would say to him, regardless of his security, that security is not made eligible for an advance through the banks contemplated by this system throughout the entire period of production. Then, we only extend that privilege to him after the crop has been harvested and deposited in the warehouses. Even upon a perishable crop, during a period of more or less financial depression and hardship to the farmer, by the time he reaches the time for marketing his crop he is very largely crippled. He already is probably bound down hand and foot with his financial obligations necessitated in the production of that crop, and we refuse to throw him a lifeline, even at the eleventh hour, under the provisions of this bill.

That is what it amounts to. In many instances it will not be a life line until the eleventh hour has passed, who has been compelled to go through the most trying and distressing time because he has had to finance his entire operations during the period that he is creating the wealth represented in the crops which later on we say we will accept as security. Under the amendment proposed by me, if he has realty, and it is ample security, he will be authorized to go to the bank and get an advance, of course being subjected to the requirements and the regulations of the bank, to assist him in carrying on his operations during the period of production.

I am unable to discern the difference between making an advance during that period and making it after the crop has been harvested and has been placed in the warehouse. Certainly the advance should be authorized when he can furnish ample security.

This is not a question of any gift by the Government to anyone. The Government is not engaged in making charitable donations and contributions to the agricultural interest of our country under this bill. The agricultural interest of this country does not seek any such policy on the part of the Government. The farmer has to pay interest when he gets his loan, and it is contemplated under the provisions of this bill that he shall pay interest at the legal rate required in the State in which he is doing business. He is not given a loan at any less rate of interest than that provided by law for all other banking institutions within the State. So, if we are making him pay for what he gets, and then if we are going to announce that we are enacting legislation to facilitate the financing of the agricultural interest of this country, let us take some action worth while, some action that will really benefit the farmer and assist him in carrying on his agricultural pursuits. We will give him a very small measure of relief if we restrict it to the character of securities authorized and made negotiable under the provisions of this bill; so why not give him an opportunity to get an advance upon his real estate, secured by a mortgage, which constitutes as good security as can possibly be furnished?

On reading the bill, I find that the committee is not so adverse to the idea of mortgages on real estate. Some contention was made here yesterday in opposition to the idea of real-estate mortgages, probably on account—it was so alleged—of the length of time that it would take to foreclose and make collections. The committee, however, did not seem to find that objection in writing a certain clause in the bill on page 8, when they referred to securities given for herds of cattle. We find, in the paragraph to which I am referring on page 8, that it is provided that if the herd of cattle upon which the chattel mortgage is given represents in value an amount equal only to the amount of the loan, additional security can be given in the way of a mortgage upon real estate; so it is recognized already in the provisions of the bill that a mortgage upon realty constitutes at least some character of security that shall be recognized under those circumstances.

I should like to ask, How is a mortgage upon realty to be enforced under those circumstances? If it is to be contended that we should not have a mortgage upon realty on account of the delay in enforcing it, then why should the committee ever have recognized the policy of accepting mortgages upon real estate under any circumstances? The committee has recognized it in the instance of mortgages upon herds of breeding cattle. What I desire is for the Congress to pass some legislation of real help and benefit to the great agricultural interests of the country; and we can do it, in my opinion, without jeopardizing sound financing. We can do it without jeopardizing the interests of the Government in the least. Then why not do it? Why should the Senate try to hedge about this measure so as to give but a very limited degree of relief to our agricultural interest? Why establish a system of banks for the purpose of assisting agriculture, and then so circumscribe that institution with provisions with regard to the character of securities that will be accepted that the banks can not perform their full function and give the relief which should be given to the American farmers?

Take the West, with its great territory engaged in the production of grain. I do not imagine that the farmer of the West is going to feel that Congress has quite measured up to the full demands of his industry when we pass legislation that does not authorize him to use a mortgage upon his farm to secure advances with which to produce his crop. I should like to know why it was that the committee would not give him that opportunity and privilege through this banking system that they claim is for the interest of the agriculture of the United States.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator was present yesterday when the chairman of the committee and others answered several times the question which the Senator has just propounded. These organizations are not created for the purpose of handling investment paper, real-estate loans. They are created for the purpose of financing these cooperative marketing associations and individuals who have crops that are marketable. If the Senator will turn to page 38 of the bill, he will find a provision which authorizes the Federal reserve bank to purchase the acceptances of these corporations.

I would like to ask the Senator how many of these acceptances he thinks Federal reserve banks would purchase if they were secured by real-estate mortgages?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, among the securities that are made eligible for rediscount by the Federal banks of the country under the present Federal reserve banking system are mortgages upon real property. That class of security is acceptable. Has it been held it was not acceptable? I would like to know if the Federal reserve system has held that loans secured by mortgages upon real property are not acceptable for rediscount purposes?

Mr. McLEAN. As collateral for the issuance of Federal reserve notes?

Mr. TRAMMELL. No; they are acceptable through the banks for rediscount.

I do not know about the details. That is just what I am trying to get away from. The banking system of this country has been very largely carried on upon the policy of accommodating commercial interests only, and not the agricultural interests of this country. If we are going to depart from that and try to give the agricultural interests of the country a system which will facilitate the financing of the agricultural industry, as the title of the bill seems to indicate is the purpose, I say let us do so, and practice no deception. That is the whole situation. Let us do something to assist the farmer instead of trying to carry on this magic-wand performance, telling our farmers that they have something when they have not. They will find out later they have but little relief. The title of the bill says the purpose of the bill is to facilitate the financing of the agricultural interests of the country. While there has been such eagerness in guarding against a provision authorizing the farmers to obtain loans except in the restricted way provided under this bill, I find it has been recommended in an amendment proposed to the pending measure that the Federal reserve regional banks shall be authorized not only to obtain 6 per cent interest upon their investment but an additional 3 per cent. I do not know that the necessity for that has been explained. It looks as though this bill in part may be termed a measure for the relief of the Federal reserve regional banks. They have heretofore been authorized to make 6 per cent. Under the provisions of this bill that has been increased so that they can accumulate an additional 3 per cent, giving them 9 per cent.

I do not see how a provision of that character would assist agriculture or any other industry, except the regional reserve banks, which have in many instances already been making rates of interest which are astounding. It was startling when it was developed here upon the floor of this body some few months ago that they were making rates of interest that permitted them to build palaces in New York and in other cities throughout this country, spending money with such a lavish hand that it constitutes a disgrace upon those who have been guilty of doing it; spending money that has been exacted from the people. Yet some seem to think there is not enough interest being paid now, and we find that there are amendments to the bill permitting increases. On page 32 we find an amendment proposed by the committee providing that when net earnings exceed 12 per cent, an extra dividend of not to exceed 3 per cent may be distributed to the stockholders of these Federal reserve banks. I do not see how agriculture gets anything out of that proposal.

This Federal reserve banking system is a great financial institution. Within it we have found stability that has tided us over one of the greatest and most distressing financial storms in the history of the world, and the American people very greatly appreciate the system. But, as I understand, the purpose and object of the Federal reserve system, it was never intended to be set up as a money-making institution. That is what it has been turned into, however, a money-making institution, and an institution to provide funds for lavish expenditures in the way of building palaces in New York and other cities, in the way of paying exorbitant salaries, salaries which are indefensible, increasing the salaries of men who were receiving $4,000 a year to $10,000, and of some who were receiving $2,400 to $7,000 and $8,000 a year. The American people, who have necessarily to do banking business, have been required to contribute money to carry on these extravagant and high-handed expenditures.

The banking institutions of this country, outside of very few that are manipulating, are not in sympathy with such conduct on the part of the Federal Reserve Board. I have had more than one successful banker tell me that the banking people of this country did not approve any policy which enabled those who were controlling the situation to gather in the millions and millions of money throughout the Nation for the purpose of expending $25,000,000 on a building in New York, for the purpose of paying some man a salary of $25,000 a year, who never before in his life made $10,000 a year. Such conduct as that meets with the commendation of very few people, I dare say, except those who have been participating in the benefits. Yet we find in this same bill, where any large measure of relief is denied to the farmers a provision which authorizes an increase in the rate of interest to regional banks of 3 per cent, to be distributed to the stockholders. I think we should enact legislation along sound financial lines; that we should be doubly sure that the banking system authorized under a measure of this character would be secure and would be a safe institution.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator knows that, in round numbers, there are about 10,000 national banks, and double that number of State banks. The committee was anxious to frame the bill so that it would be as inviting as possible to the State banks to come into the system. It was for that reason that we inserted the provision to which the Senator objects. After the surplus required by the law has been earned by these banks, then a certain portion over 12 per cent—that is, 3 per cent—may be added to the 6 per cent rate, making it 9 per cent. The Senator knows that that would probably be below the average of the dividends earned by the banks throughout the country; and we felt that it might be inviting to the State banks to come into the system, and if it should operate as anticipated, it would be a very great benefit to the farmers of the country, because the one difficulty with the system is that it has not been inviting enough to the State banks. There are some 20,000 outside. If they should enter the system by reason of this provision, it would permit them to earn 9 per cent instead of 6, as is now the case with member banks, and they would then have the advantages of the Federal reserve system, rediscount advantages, and it might be of great benefit to the farmers.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I do not know how permitting these banks to come into the system and get a greater rate of interest would benefit the farmers. How many banks did the Senator say are already in the system?

Mr. McLEAN. About 10,000.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Does not the Senator think the increase in the rate from 6 to 9 per cent will benefit the 10,000 already in the system far more than it will serve as an inducement to State banks to enter the system?

Mr. McLEAN. Certainly; and that is advisable, because there are reports that some of the banks in the system are reorganizing under State laws because of the advantages which they think the State banks have. We want to remove those advantages, and we want to get State banks into the Federal reserve system. The Senator knows that if they join the system it adds to their loaning capacity, and to that extent it will be a benefit to the farmers who need and desire accommodation.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, in my own State I have lots of friends engaged in both national banking and State banking, and it is rather a controverted question as to which system affords the greatest facilities for agricultural interests. The State bankers say they can afford better facilities; the national bankers say they can afford better facilities. As a matter of fact, I really do not know which does, but I know that a great many of the banks have incorporated as State banks for the very reason that they felt they had a greater latitude and opportunity for affording facilities to the farming interests and fruit growers in my State than the national banks.

I do not really know which has the better system, or which has the greater latitude within reasonable and sound financial banking limits. One thing I know, no State has better or more stable and strong banks than we have in Florida. I do not know that the amendment would afford any particular inducement, but it does seem to me that in an effort to try to induce State banks to nationalize, if that is the idea, we should not provide for an increase in the interest rate from 6 to 9 per cent by the regional banks, many of which have been making startling incomes and have accumulated already a hundred per cent under the present law in addition to the 6 per cent. That is the point I am making. I want to see the banking institutions of the country treated absolutely fairly, but I do not care to have undue privileges and benefits extended to them which will be placed as a burden upon the American people, necessitating them to have to meet further and more onerous financial obligations in carrying on the other industries of the country, and particularly agriculture, which is the subject under consideration at the present time.

I would like to see the bill so amended that agriculture can get the full measure of benefit to which it is entitled. It seems to me we could make eligible for security mortgages upon real property. If we do not do that, then we are only helping the farmer who is fortunate enough to produce his crop, to harvest his crop, and deposit it in the warehouse and get a warehouse receipt. That is the sole aid provided by the pending bill, except so far as the live-stock industry is concerned. There seems to have been a little more consideration for those engaged in cattle raising. I am heartily in sympathy with that portion of the bill, so far as it goes, but it does not go far enough even in assisting them. The amendment proposed by me would be of even far greater assistance to the cattle industry of the country, because it would enable those engaged in the cattle industry to use their real property as security upon which to obtain advances to carry on their cattle operations.

I very much hope the amendment will be adopted. If it is not adopted, we will have only very partially assisted the producers of nonperishable products, and the Congress will have withheld, unless we adopt my amendment, absolutely any relief whatever for the great agricultural interests of the country carrying on the production of perishable products. I see no reason why there should be discrimination against them, why they are not entitled to relief just the same as the others who are engaged in a different character of agricultural industry throughout the country. They can furnish ample security, security that is recognized by those who loan money as among the very best of collateral; and yet, if the amendment is not adopted, Congress will have absolutely refused to allow them any benefit whatever under a system, so called, for furnishing facilities to finance the agricultural industries of the country. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I think there are few men in the Senate who have given more attention to the question of creating some facility to loan money on improved real property than myself. As chairman of a special committee of the Senate, I conducted a rather wide investigation of the subject two years ago.

The pending bill is for the purpose purely of encouraging credits for agriculture. It seems to me the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] proposes to put these organizations in the business of loaning money on improved real estate in the cities and villages of the country. I can not for the life of me see how we can justify a provision of that kind in a measure like the bill now before us. We ought to keep the bill in the line it was intended from the beginning if we hope to have it of real value to agriculture.

The Senator from Florida made a statement in his remarks a moment ago about the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. I have taken the pains to examine the plans of that building, I will say to the Senator, and I am sure from my knowledge of him, because I have served with him some six years, that he would not designedly create the misapprehension he may have by his remarks. That bank building will not cost $25,000,000. When the plans were first drawn it was expected it would cost about $15,000,000. Through competition the cost is going to come down to about $12,000,000. It is not a great palace like the Congressional Library here in Washington or like some other great buildings erected purely because of their beauty and architecture. As I recall, it is a 14-story office building, built with the greatest of care and with the idea of being valuable only for the purpose intended. In my consultation with the officers of the bank I have learned that in the beginning it is the intention to rent a very large portion of the building for office purposes. They have no immediate use for perhaps more than three-fourths of the building. But with the great growth of the Federal reserve system, particularly in the financial center of New York, where the great market place and financial center of the country is located, we must not build for to-day but for next year and the year after, so that in 3 or 4 or 10 years from now, when property in the great financial center of New York City becomes exceedingly valuable, we shall have a building that will meet the needs of the banking interests of the country.

It is a plain office structure erected for the purpose intended. I should be very glad at some time to go very carefully over the whole subject with the Senator, because I am sure I could convince him that the money is not being extravagantly spent.

It is worthy of note that the building in New York City will cost 80 cents per cubic foot, while the building in Richmond, for instance, much more of a palace, has cost in the neighborhood of $1.35 or $1.40 a cubic foot.

I repeat that while I thoroughly sympathize with the purposes undoubtedly intended by the Senator from Florida in endeavoring to do something to increase the banking and credit facilities where money can be obtained on improved real estate, I doubt very much the wisdom of placing his amendment on the pending measure.

Mr. STANFIELD obtained the floor.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. STANFIELD. I yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. There is just one point I want to bring out in connection with the Federal reserve banking system. Under the language that is proposed, it apparently was not deemed satisfactory to make the bill apply to the future, but the amendment is to be retroactive. It goes back to 1922, having reference to the amendment with regard to interest. It works back to 1922. How will that bring any State bank into the system? The State banks are not national banks. We can not bring them into the system and give them the benefits of it when they were not members in 1922. Therefore, that part of the provision specifically in the interest of those already in the system retroactively covers the year 1922.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me a moment?

Mr. STANFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. Referring to the statement of the Senator from Florida just made, the purpose of increasing the interest upon the stock in the Federal reserve banks was to encourage the smaller State banks to enter the system. I am quite confident, I will say to the Senator from Florida, that if we could get the smaller State banks throughout the country into the Federal reserve system we would solve the whole question of additional credits for the farming interests of the United States.

The trouble is that when the farmer needs credit to plant or harvest or move his crop, or to do as he may find necessary to relieve his financial needs, the little banks in the outlying sections of the country have not the money with which to help him. The Committee on Banking and Currency have been trying to find some way to induce the smaller banks to come into the Federal reserve system. It seemed that this was a good way, and if we could show where it was more profitable to come into the system than to remain out of it, then much good would have been accomplished.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Admitting that that was the purpose and object, and doubtless it was, though I disagree with the methods by which the Senator is seeking to attain the object, why was it that the amendment has been so framed as to apply retroactively to 1922 when those banks were not in the system and could not get the benefit of it? The amendment says it shall apply to the year 1922.

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President, I do not care to yield for any extended debate, though I am willing to yield for a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon is entitled to the floor and will proceed.

Mr. STANFIELD. I have some amendments which I propose to the pending bill. The first amendment is on page 6——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Oregon that there is an amendment pending.

Mr. STANFIELD. I intend to offer the amendments and have them lie on the table, but I would like to discuss them briefly at this time.

The first amendment which I offer is in paragraph (c), on page 6, line 10, after the word "nonperishable," to strike out the words "and readily marketable." The language of the section now reads:

(c) Are secured at the time of discount, purchase, or acceptance by warehouse receipts or other like documents, conveying or securing title to nonperishable and readily marketable agricultural products.

If there is any time when credit is needed, it is when a market is not ready and when the products would not be readily marketable. The time that they need the credit is to enable them to carry the products along until there is a ready market. Therefore I offer the amendment proposing that those words be stricken out and ask that the amendment lie on the table.

I now offer another amendment, which I ask to have lie on the table, proposing to reduce the minimum capital provided for in the bill.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me right there——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. STANFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. McLEAN. There may be no opportunity to discuss these amendments before they are voted upon unless I do it now. I would like to call attention to the fact that the words "readily marketable" refer to any staple product that has a large consumption. It is naturally assumed that such products are marketable products within the meaning of the act. I do not think that the amendment offered by the Senator is necessary. On the contrary, I think they should be designated as readily marketable products that are recognized as marketable in normal times under ordinary circumstances. It does not mean that they shall be marketable at a profit to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. STANFIELD. Oh, yes, Mr. President, "normally marketable" is the idea exactly, but this is to provide for an unusual time, and I maintain that there are times when the products are not readily marketable.

Mr. McLEAN. Yes; but if credit conditions are not normal that will not affect the character of the security. The products that are ordinarily readily marketable will be eligible as security for these notes. There is no question about that.

Mr. STANFIELD. Why should the language then prescribe something that will be interpreted differently than the author of the bill intends?

Mr. McLEAN. It does not say they shall be secured by products that are already sold.

Mr. STANFIELD. The language is "readily marketable."

Mr. McLEAN. That are readily marketable under normal conditions of consumption.

Mr. STANFIELD. In my experience with staple products I can recall many times when there was not a market for the products, and that is the very time when credit was needed. I understand the purported object of the bill is to extend and liberalize the credit.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not think the Senator can instance a case where a bank would refuse a loan upon the theory that the law did not permit it because the particular product at that time could not be sold at a profit satisfactory to the producer.

Mr. STANFIELD. No; I do not think so, either. I think the wording of the bill should be as concise as we can possibly make it.

Mr. McLEAN. I will say to the Senator that this is the language used all through the Federal reserve act. I am confident that it is a mistake to strike out the words referred to by the Senator from Oregon, but if the author of the bill, who is present, thinks they ought to be stricken out, I do not propose to stand here and fight the friends of the bill. The bill was carefully drawn and conforms to the language used in the Federal reserve act.

Mr. STANFIELD. I desire now to make an inquiry of the Senator. He says that he knows that the bill was carefully drawn and who drew the bill. May I ask the Senator who did draw the bill?

Mr. McLEAN. The author of the bill is present, and he can tell the Senator from Oregon who drew the bill.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, there is no secret about that. The bill was originally drawn by Mr. Meyer, the managing director of the War Finance Corporation. The bill, of course, has been quite materially revised by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency after careful consideration. I think the bill a good bill.

Mr. STANFIELD. I think the Senator from Kansas has correctly stated the history of the bill. I think it was drawn by Mr. Meyer, who has been the director of the War Finance Corporation, whom we empowered a year and a half ago or thereabouts to make loans for the relief of agriculture to the extent of about $1,400,000,000. Mr. Meyer has gone over the country and held himself up as having done a wonderful act; but I wish to maintain at this time that he has done only one-fourth of the good which he could have done, because he has only loaned about $350,000,000.

Mr. McLEAN. The correctness of the statement of the Senator from Oregon depends upon whether or not a greater total of loans was necessary.

Mr. STANFIELD. They were necessary, because the country was suffering, and suffering most severely. I have witnessed on all the principal live-stock markets of the United States undue liquidation and sale of live stock that should not have been sold.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Meyer was handling money which was taken from the pockets of the people in taxes and put into the Treasury of the United States, and undoubtedly he thought it was wise to insist upon security for the loans he made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator from Oregon know of any legitimate application for a loan which had adequate security back of it which the War Finance Corporation after investigation refused?

Mr. STANFIELD. I know of many cases where, in my estimation, loans were improperly refused, where the War Finance Corporation set up such requirements as to securing the loan that the relief could not be granted, and where the live-stock industries of the country, by reason of the inability to meet the conditions, have suffered very materially.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to say that I have had occasion to look into a good many applications which were made for loans to the War Finance Corporation, and to consult from time to time with officials of that corporation as to those loans; and I have found their attitude has been most liberal on the side of the borrower, still keeping in mind, however, the necessity for having some measure of security which in the end would protect the people of the country who contributed the money. I may say that the Senator from Oregon is the first person I have heard who in a public place has expressed a criticism of the kind which he has just uttered, and I have talked with any number of cattlemen on this very subject. In fact, I think it will be found that the cattlemen of the great West have very generally commended Mr. Meyer.

Mr. STANFIELD. It may be and is true that a great good was done, but what I say is that those who have commended him have overlooked the fact that a much greater good could have been brought about than that which has been accomplished. It is not a matter of the doing of good, but what should be considered is the measure of good that could have been done and yet has been denied.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, let me add, in connection with the inquiry as to the origin of the pending bill, that, as a matter of fact, the American National Livestock Association had probably more to do with the framing of the bill than had anyone else. Probably the Senator from Oregon is aware that the American National Livestock Association appointed a special credit committee nearly a year ago, of which the president of the National Livestock Association, Mr. Bixby, was chairman. On that committee were some of the strongest and best known cattlemen of this country. They gave very careful attention to the whole subject of credit legislation, especially for the live-stock industry. They came here to Washington; they spent several weeks with Mr. Meyer and others here who were studying the subject. As a result of their inquiry and study the pending bill was developed.

As I said a few moments ago, the actual work of drafting the bill was done by Mr. Meyer, but it was done in cooperation with the credit committee of the National Livestock Association. They came before the Senate committee; they unqualifiedly indorsed the bill, and expressed the desire and the hope that the Senate would see fit to enact it into law practically along the lines drafted by Mr. Meyer and those associated with him.

Mr. STANFIELD. I do not question the Senator's statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. May I interrupt at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. STANFIELD. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency if Mr. Meyer, who drafted the bill, did not attend the meetings of the Finance Committee almost continuously while the bill was under consideration, and if he did not evince great interest in maintaining the bill just as he had written it?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, Mr. Meyer appeared before the committee at the invitation of the committee, as did the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Interior. I do not remember that Mr. Meyer was insistent that the bill should not be amended; I do not think he was particularly interested, except to express his general approval of the bill and his desire that it be sound in principle. I am sure that he wanted the corporations created by the bill to be of benefit to the farmers. He did not want to create corporations that would handle investment securities. He wanted them formed for the purpose of assisting farmers and cooperative marketing associations and discount their paper based upon farm products.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee further if Mr. Leffingwell, who occupies a very important position in the Treasury Department, who has been the adviser of the Secretary of the Treasury in financial matters, to my knowledge, ever since the beginning of the World War, and who is a very great authority upon financial questions, a man of broad grasp and comprehensive information in reference to all questions pertaining to finance, was not also notified by the chairman of the committee to appear before the committee?

Mr. McLEAN. We did notify Mr. Leffingwell.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Leffingwell came and testified and went back to the Treasury Department; but did not Mr. Meyer come and testify, and then stay with the committee from day to day, injecting himself into the committee hearings, replying to witnesses who appeared before the committee, and making suggestions to the committee about the proposed legislation, showing the interest of championship and advocacy and resisting efforts in any direction to enlarge and increase the powers of the system so as to give the banks or the corporations which it sets up the privilege and the power to grant loans not only to the stock raisers, not only to the farmers upon their products already made, but to grant farmers accommodations for the purpose of enabling them to make their crops?

Mr. McLEAN. I think the Senator from North Carolina has an exaggerated view of Mr. Meyer's interest in the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator that I was present at a great many of the hearings, and the impression created upon my mind was that Mr. Meyer not only had written this bill but had become its champion and wanted to preserve its integrity.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I know that on several mornings I telephoned Mr. Meyer and expressed the hope that he would be present, if convenient, as there were a good many questions coming up which he might be able to answer with regard to the operations of the War Finance Corporation. I think the information he gave the committee was valuable as it pertained to the work of the War Finance Corporation. Of course, he did not insist that the committee should not give impartial consideration to the provisions of the bill and amend them in any way it saw fit.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not mean to say that he did.

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, may I say a word further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. STANFIELD. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I did not mean to impugn or impeach the motives of Mr. Meyer; but it has developed here that he wrote the bill; it has developed that he championed it before the committee, and that he remained with the committee after he had given his testimony in response to their invitation. Mr. Meyer, I think, has served the country well on the War Finance Corporation; I have the very highest opinion of his ability as a financier. I am sure he is connected with some great financial institutions in one way or another, or, at least, he is deeply interested in big business of a certain character in New York, and that his experience has been very great and his abilities are commensurate with his experience; but it seems to me that he has had a very big hand in this matter. I regret very much that Mr. Meyer has never shown the same sympathy for financing the farmers as he has for financing the stock raisers, or the same sympathy for financing the farmer for the purpose of making his crop as he has shown for financing him for the purpose of selling his crop.

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President, I should like—and my time is limited—to ask the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency if any representatives of the live-stock loan associations, or men who have been engaged exclusively in the live-stock loan business, appeared before the committee during the time the hearings were held in considering the pending bill?

Mr. McLEAN. The committee heard a good many witnesses, but my impression is that our information with regard to the activities of live-stock associations and loan companies was largely received from the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], who is a member of the committee, as the Senator knows, and is very familiar with the situation. I think the committee relied upon his experience and advice.

Mr. STANFIELD. But there were no cattle loan men who appeared before the committee?

Mr. McLEAN. I think so; I do not remember as to that.

Mr. STANFIELD. The Senator does not recall that there were. I hardly think that there were.

Mr. McLEAN. I wish to say to the Senator that we did hear several representatives of the cooperative marketing associations. Mr. Sapiro, I remember, was one such witness. He had been instrumental in organizing a great many cooperative associations, and was heartily in favor of this bill.

Mr. STANFIELD. Did he testify as to the live-stock loan features of the bill? Did he have any experience along that line?

Mr. McLEAN. Not especially; I do not think that he did.

Mr. STANFIELD. I am inclined to think that he has not had any experience along that line.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in response to the query of the Senator from Oregon, I will remind him that Mr. Sheehan, a banker, testified before the committee and stated that he represented 60 per cent of the bank deposits in the State of Nevada, and appeared in behalf of the American Livestock Association in support of the bill.

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. Sheehan is a banker, and he probably appeared as a banker; but I am speaking of the live-stock loan companies with which this bill largely deals.

Mr. McLEAN. If the Senator will pardon me, while I am on my feet—I do not want to interrupt the Senator, because the time is getting short, but I want to call his attention to the fact that in the new section, 13a, which we add to the Federal reserve act, on lines 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24 of the bill, page 36, we use this language:

Provided, however, That notes, drafts, and bills of exchange with maturities in excess of six months shall not be eligible as a basis for the issuance of Federal reserve notes unless secured by warehouse receipts or other such negotiable documents conveying or securing title to readily marketable staple agricultural products—

And so forth. So that term is used throughout the bill.

Mr. STANFIELD. It is used in the two places, and I shall later propose an amendment to strike it out in that section of the bill.

Referring to the author of this bill, and as to its conception, I think the bill was drawn by Mr. Meyer, and that Mr. Meyer did invite Mr. Bixby, the president of the American Cattle Growers' Association, to come here and consider the bill with him; but I can not agree with the Senator from Kansas that the bill was seriously and well considered, because I find in it so many things that tend to restrict the credit of the live-stock men. The tendency of this bill is not to liberalize credit to the live-stock industry but to restrict it, to place around it such restrictions that the existing live-stock loan companies will be compelled to go out of business or will be compelled in many instances to reduce their loans. It is all good and well to say that the live-stock loan companies are not compelled to come under the terms of this bill. It is true that there is nothing in the bill that is mandatory that they should come under it, but the psychology of it is that the present market for live-stock paper, largely with eastern bankers, will demand that the paper they receive shall come through live-stock loan companies that are under Federal supervision. Therefore these loan companies will automatically be compelled either to come under Federal supervision or to pass out of existence. The present bill provides for a capital stock of $250,000. I am going to propose an amendment, to lie on the table, to reduce the minimum to $100,000.

Most of the present live-stock loan companies in the United States have a less capital stock than $100,000. It is through these live-stock loan companies that the live-stock industry is largely being financed to-day. If they are unable to increase their capital stock to $250,000 I maintain that it will be necessary for them to go out of business, because they will be unable to find a rediscount market for their paper, and the credit of the live-stock man will be curtailed to that extent, and it will mean enforced liquidation of the securities that are back of the loans that are now outstanding. It will mean adding more handicaps to an already unduly disturbed market situation, it will mean more marketing, and it will mean the lowering of the prices of the live stock that are already below the cost of production.

I am going to propose another amendment and ask that it lie on the table, and that is that the limitation upon the amount that this loan company may loan to an individual or corporation be changed so as to read "50 per cent of their capital stock" instead of "20 per cent of their capital stock." I call your attention to the fact that this is not a concern that is loaning simply the money that it has on hand, but it is acting as a rediscount agency. It is only an intermediary between the borrower and the real creditor of the borrower.

Many of these live-stock loans are far in excess of any such limitation as that, because the policy of the present live-stock loan companies is to loan as much as 100 and 200 and 300 per cent of their capital or to indorse paper that bears that proportion to their capital. If they come in under this act, they will necessarily be compelled under this limitation to reduce these loans to 20 per cent of their capital stock. If it is the minimum capital, $250,000—which is a large capital to be raised in a community for the purpose of creating a live-stock loan company—it naturally would follow that the loans would have to be reduced, and that means a liquidation of the security. It means more marketing of live stock.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STANFIELD. I do.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that with a capital of $250,000 a loan of $125,000 ought to be made to any one individual or any one corporation?

Mr. STANFIELD. Yes; I do, because the loan corporation herein provided for is simply a rediscount corporation.

The argument has been used that they may divide these loans. I am going to say to the Senator from Utah that no one buying the paper of the live-stock grower wants to take a divided loan. He wants to have the entire loan there, and thereby have entire control; and it is a long-established rule and principle among live-stock loan companies that a 50 per cent limitation is extremely conservative. I never heard of such a limitation until the recent hard times and panic developed, and then the more conservative live-stock loan companies said that they would reduce their loans to a point where no single loan that they were underwriting was in excess of 50 per cent of their capital and surplus.

Again, I want to reiterate that while this law is not mandatory that these loan companies shall come under the act, the psychology of it is such that they will be compelled to come under the act. This is not a bill in the interest of the live-stock grower. It is not a bill to liberalize credit for the live-stock industry. This is a restrictive bill, and it is going to restrict the credit of the live-stock industry; and I can see—and I view it with grave apprehension—a considerable disaster that is going to come to the live-stock business if we enact this bill.

There is one thing in the bill that is commendable and favorable, and I dare say that it has been the largest factor in securing an indorsement of the bill or any provision in the bill, and that is the provision for the extension of the rediscount period of agricultural paper to a period of nine months.

I say to you, Mr. President, that that is like a bait in this bill, and it has perhaps induced live-stock men to favor the bill; but otherwise than that this bill is mainly a banker's bill, and not a live-stock banker's bill, either. There is no limitation as to the interest rate that may be charged under this bill by one of these corporations excepting the statutory limitation in the State where the loan is made. It is true that large interest rates are charged on live-stock loans. The rate of interest is commensurate with the hazard attached thereto. While this will tend to remove any hazard of live-stock loans—that is to say, that is the purpose of it—there is no provision here to make an interest rate that is commensurate with the hazard that is attached to it.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. STANFIELD. I do.

Mr. McLEAN. Has the Senator read the amendments that have already been submitted?

Mr. STANFIELD. Have I read all the amendments?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes. I notice that the Senator has just sent some amendments to the desk. Are they the amendments to which he referred? Have they been read?

Mr. STANFIELD. Yes; I have read them.

Now I am going to propose another amendment and ask that it lie on the table, and that is a limitation of the interest rate—an amendment that will read as follows: On pages 9 and 10, beginning with line 24 on page 9, strike out:

the rate allowed by the laws of the State in which such obligation is by its terms made payable—and insert in lieu thereof—

a rate not in excess of 3 per cent more than the rediscount rate then being charged by the Federal reserve bank of the district in which such obligation is by its terms made payable.

Mr. KING. Why does not the Senator make that 2 per cent?

Mr. STANFIELD. Three per cent would be a reduction over the rate that could be charged to-day. Most of the live-stock States have a statutory limitation of either 10 or 12 per cent. The prevailing rediscount rate to-day is, I think, about 4½ per cent, and the difference between 4½ per cent and 12 per cent is 7½ per cent. There is a vast difference between the 3 per cent that I have proposed and the 7½ per cent that might be charged.

The history of the conduct of loan companies is that it costs about 1¼ per cent to do business. The difference between 1¼ or 1⅝ per cent and 3 per cent, if this provision should be enacted, would be the profit that these rediscount concerns would make on their loans.

A corporation of $250,000 capital stock may receive rediscounts to ten times the amount of its capital, or $2,500,000. Of course, we can not conceive of those concerns rediscounting to the full extent that they are permitted to rediscount under the law, but it is fair to presume that they will carry at least $2,000,000 of rediscounts. That would mean that on an investment of $250,000 they would have an income of $35,000, or about 14 per cent return, which is not unreasonable nor very much out of line with the profits that are being made by banks and other institutions in the loan business.

Mr. President, I am going to vote for this bill with a great deal of reluctance, even though the amendments that I have proposed are accepted by the Senate, and I most sincerely hope that these amendments will be accepted. I am sorry, indeed, that it is not in order at this time for me to make a motion to recommit this bill. It should be recommitted and further hearings should be held on it, for I am certain, and I speak from a knowledge which extends over a lifetime—for the greater part of my lifetime I have been engaged, directly or indirectly, in the live-stock loan business—it has been my lifelong undertaking to develop the live-stock industry, and I say again that I view this bill with the gravest of apprehension. I fear that it is going to destroy to a large extent the avenues of credit that the industry is at present enjoying.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STANFIELD. I do.

Mr. KING. The Senator has just stated that he was sorry he could not move to recommit. I think under the rules, notwithstanding the unanimous-consent agreement to vote at 2 o'clock to-day——

Mr. TRAMMELL. Not to vote; to close debate.

Mr. KING. Even if it were to vote, a motion to recommit would be entirely proper.

Mr. STANFIELD. If a motion to recommit is in order, I should like to make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a motion pending at this time, but at the proper time a motion to recommit will be in order, or the Senator can make the motion to lie on the table and be acted upon at the proper time.

Mr. STANFIELD subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to have two telegrams inserted in the RECORD immediately following my remarks to-day when we were considering, and just before the passage of, Senate bill 4280.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PORTLAND, OREG., January 18, 1923.

C. L. MCNARY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

If you find the Capper bill has a chance of passage do not fail to amend the capital requirement of loan companies authorized, reducing same to one hundred thousand. Larger capital requirement means organization of very few companies in the West.

W. L. THOMPSON.

UNION STOCK YARDS, ILL., January 19, 1923.

Senator ROBERT N. STANFIELD,
Washington, D. C.:

In my judgment, 20 per cent limitation of the capital stock as a maximum amount that can be loaned to one person or corporation, as I understand is provided by Capper bill, is impractical and would seriously limit or practically destroy any possible benefits of bill. If attempting to pass a bill of psychological rather than practical benefit, then let 20 per cent limit stand. Have discussed this matter with Traylor, who agrees fully with me on this point, and is wiring Myers, of corporation, accordingly.

S. T. KIDDOO,
President Live Stock Exchange National Bank.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, referring to the amendments offered by the Senator from Oregon, in the order proposed:

First, the amendment to reduce capitalization. In the interest of the borrower such capital should be increased rather than decreased. The effect, or fair effect, would be a proportionate reduction in cost of administration. It would tend to strengthen financially the organization and would thus result in increased confidence on the part of those who purchase its securities in the way of notes and debentures.

For more reasons than one increased capital would mean a proportionate increase of credit facilities and confidence in the corporation. For the benefit of the borrowers of my State I would greatly prefer to have one corporation organized with a capital of $500,000 than to have two corporations with a capital of $250,000 each.

The amendment to increase the amount of outstanding acceptances or other forms of credit to any person or corporation in an amount exceeding 20 per cent of the paid-in, unimpaired capital or surplus of such corporation is, in my opinion, inadvisable, if not dangerous. The Senator suggests there is no parallel to such provision of law. I call his attention to the fact that this bill is to be under the supervision of the Federal Government, and under the banking act 10 per cent of the capital and surplus earnings represents the limit which may be loaned to either an individual or a corporation.

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENDRICK. I would rather not yield, because I have only a few moments of time in which to discuss the different phases of the bill.

No doubt the Senator would suggest that in one case the bill has to do with banks of deposit and in the other with loan companies. Even in that event I believe he will agree that the element of safety is increased, other things being equal, when there are numerous borrowers, rather than where excessive loans are made to a limited number of borrowers. In other words, it is unsafe to lend too large a proportion of the liquid assets—that is, the capital—of a bank or loan company to one individual.

I have been more than surprised at the criticisms of this bill. I have been unable to believe that those who have indulged in such criticism have carefully studied the bill. It has been charged that even the stockmen themselves do not favor the legislation. While the incident occurred during my absence from Washington, I am informed that a delegation of the representatives of some of the principal live-stock associations of the West, including the president of the American National Livestock Association, came to Washington and recommended the preparation and introduction of such a bill and then approved the provisions of the bill after it had been prepared.

Even a superficial study of this measure will disclose the fact that it calls for no appropriation; it imposes no burden of either expense or tax upon the Treasury; it even requires the corporations to pay the Federal Government for such examination and inspection as the Government may find necessary to make in the administration of the law. It does not establish a new agency of credit, but its purpose is to make more reputable an agency already existent by placing such increased safeguards around the conduct of the business as will more adequately protect the investor of stock in such corporation and bring not only increased confidence but security to those who purchase and deal in its notes and debentures.

The intent and purpose of this bill are to enable the credit system of this industry to put its house in order.

Everyone knows that under favorable conditions this industry has no difficulty whatsoever in financing itself, but it is only in the emergencies that the sacrifices must be made, when through the arbitrary withdrawal of credit there is enforced liquidation, oftentimes resulting in congested markets and ruinous prices.

It is hoped by surrounding this system of credit with reasonable safeguards that in the future in this kind of emergency the credits of this industry may compel the same confidence as the credits of any other form of securities.

The Senator from Oregon has pointed out that the restrictions imposed by this law would serve to limit rather than promote the extension of any form of credit on live stock and farm products.

Mr. President, in connection with the restrictions which may be imposed, I would remind the Senator that if there is one piece of counsel we could safely give to the bankers of this country, and particularly those bankers who have endeavored to finance the live-stock industry of the West, it would be an injunction to exercise more of caution in times of easy credits and more of courage in times of financial distress.

In spite of all that may be said to the contrary, anyone familiar with the facts must know that both live stock and marketable farm products constitute liquid assets. They are liquid for the reason that they may be readily and even quickly converted into cash, even under enforced sale.

The important features required by stockmen and farmers in connection with credits are, first, a dependable supply of legitimate credits; second, reasonable rates of interest; and, third, an extension of time over the old system sufficient to include the full period involved in the process of production.

If you make your security good and if you make your security liquid, you will not fail to have the same avenue of satisfactory credits for this industry that is extended to any other industry. If you fail in that, the entire purpose of your legislation is ineffective.

In the discussion of this legislation doubt has been frequently expressed as to whether or not this legislation, because of its permissive character, would prove far-reaching in its effect or general in its application. This all depends upon how far those who promote loan companies already organized, and those to be organized in the future, are willing to go in the way of assuming increased obligations and rational restrictions for the purpose of bringing to the whole credit situation a more wholesome and satisfactory condition.

The eligible banks which continue out of the Federal reserve system do so because of, as they term them, the irksome and unnecessary restrictions.

To illustrate, there has been some criticism here this morning as to the provision for increasing the interest rate to the Federal reserve bank. I think everybody who listened to that discussion must have been impressed with the fact that, after all, the best available source of unlimited credits in this country would be found through increasing the facilities of the Federal reserve bank. Such potential credits for every line of industry would be vastly increased through any change that would induce the banks of the country eligible to membership to join the Federal reserve system.

If these live-stock companies and corporations, providing for loans on live stock and farm products, refuse to come in and accept this opportunity to benefit the situation, to increase the security, and bring confidence to the whole condition of things where there is now distrust, the benefits of the bill will be limited in that proportion.

As stated before, the law provides for no new agency; it will not conflict with any other financial form of credits whatsoever. It is in no sense of the word mandatory; it is merely permissive. It is simply a plan to improve and change the system of credits already existing, and for such reasons it could hardly be harmful, but will be extremely helpful.

I hope the amendments here proposed will be rejected and that we shall have favorable action upon the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement further debate upon the pending bill and amendments is suspended. The question is upon the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	McCumber	Simmons
Bayard	Hale	McKellar	Smoot
Borah	Harreld	McKinley	Spencer
Brookhart	Harris	McLean	Stanfield
Bursum	Harrison	McNary	Sterling
Calder	Heflin	Moses	Sutherland
Cameron	Hitchcock	Nelson	Swanson
Capper	Johnson	New	Trammell
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Underwood
Couzens	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Wadsworth
Culberson	Kellogg	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Kendrick	Oddie	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Keyes	Overman	Warren
Elkins	King	Phipps	Watson
Ernst	Ladd	Poindexter	Weller
Fernald	La Follette	Reed, Pa.	Williams
Fletcher	Lenroot	Sheppard	Willis
France	Lodge	Shields
George	McCormick	Shortridge

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, at the end of line 13, and before the period, insert the words:

or upon a note secured by a mortgage on real estate in an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the value of said real estate.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCKINLEY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]. He being absent, I transfer the pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I inquire if the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have a pair with the Senator from New Jersey, which I transfer to my colleague [Mr. MYERS] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. POMERENE], who is absent on account of illness. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ERNST. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Ashurst	Harrison	McKellar	Swanson
Brookhart	Johnson	Norris	Trammell
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Underwood
Fletcher	Ladd	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
George	La Follette	Shields	Williams

Dillingham	Myers	Reed, Mo.

So Mr. TRAMMELL's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] has an amendment lying on the table which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The junior Senator from Oregon offers the following amendment: On page 6, after the word "nonperishable," in line 10, strike out the words "and readily marketable" in lines 10 and 11.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I do not believe that Senators generally know precisely what is the question before the Senate. I ask that the pending amendment may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, line 10, after the word "nonperishable," it is proposed to strike out the words "and readily marketable," so that the paragraph if amended as proposed would read:

(c) Are secured at the time of discount, purchase, or acceptance by warehouse receipts or other like documents conveying or securing title to nonperishable agricultural products.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCKINLEY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote in reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before relative to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I transfer my pair as announced upon the preceding roll call, and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair with my colleague as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ERNST. Making the same announcement as before in reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] has a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. FLETCHER. Making the same transfer of my pair as on the preceding roll call, I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 51, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Ashurst	Heflin	Ransdell	Swanson
Brookhart	Johnson	Sheppard	Trammell
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Shields	Underwood
Fletcher	Ladd	Simmons
Harris	La Follette	Stanfield
Harrison	McNary	Sutherland

NAYS—51.

So Mr. STANFIELD's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 10, line 18, it is proposed to strike out "$250,000" and in lieu theerof to insert "$100,000"; on page 11, line 19, to strike out "$200,000" and to insert "$100,000"; and, on page 25, line 4, to strike out "$250,000" and to insert "$100,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 9, line 9, before the words "per cent," it is proposed to strike out "20" and to insert in lieu thereof "50," so that it will read:

in an amount exceeding 50 per cent of the paid-in and unimpaired capital and surplus of such corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Oregon.

Mr. STANFIELD. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment offered by the junior Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The READING CLERK. Beginning in line 24, on page 9, it is proposed to strike out the words "the rate allowed by the laws of the State in which such obligation is by its terms made payable" and to insert in lieu thereof "a rate not in excess of 3 per cent more than the discount rate then being charged by the Federal reserve bank of the district in which such obligation is by its terms made payable."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand that some amendment has already been made to the language of the bill at that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is true. The amendment heretofore agreed to will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The amendment heretofore agreed to was, on page 10, line 1, to strike out the words "such obligation is by its terms made payable" and to insert "its principal office is located."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquire of the Chair if I am right in the supposition that the amendment is to strike out the provision as already amended and to insert?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the proper procedure. The question is upon the amendment of the junior Senator from Oregon.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. McKINLEY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called.) Making the same announcement as on the previous votes with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement concerning the absence of my colleague [Mr. POMERENE] and the transfer of my pair with that Senator, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 48, as follows:

YEAS 23.

Ashurst	Heflin	Lenroot	Sheppard
Borah	Johnson	McKellar	Stanfield
Brookhart	Jones, N. Mex.	McNary	Trammell
Bursum	Kendrick	Nicholson	Walsh, Mass.

So Mr. STANFIELD's amendment was rejected.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The senior Senator from Oregon sends to the desk the following amendment:

On page 10, line 18, strike out "$250,000," the amount of the paid-in capital, and in lieu thereof insert "$150,000"; and the same amendment on page 11, line 19.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President, at this time I should like to move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. STANFIELD. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill was passed.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. GLASS] has been unavoidably detained from the Senate to-day. If he were present, he would vote for the passage of the bill.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I offered an amendment to the title the other day, and the Chair held that that could be considered only after the bill had passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. NORBECK. The bill having reached that stage, I wish to offer an amendment to harmonize the title with the rest of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the following words from the title as printed:

To provide credit facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries of the United States—

And insert in the title, in lieu of those words, the following:

To provide for the incorporation and supervision of corporations formed for the purpose of making agricultural and live-stock loans.

The amendment was agreed to.

TEMPORARY RED CROSS BUILDINGS IN WASHINGTON—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. FERNALD submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) to grant authority to continue the use of the temporary buildings of the American Red Cross headquarters, in the city of Washington, D. C., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

BERT M. FERNALD,
J. S. FRELINGHUYSEN,
HENRY F. ASHURST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SIMEON D. FESS,
ROBERT LUCE,
FRANK PARK,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up House bill 13696, the appropriation bill for the independent offices.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive office and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that the bill may be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I make no objection, providing the full text of the bill is read for amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That includes the reading of the text. If there is no objection, the formal reading of the bill is dispensed with and the committee amendments will be first considered.

The Secretary will read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

PROBLEMS RELATING TO REFORESTATION.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably, with amendments, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, Senate Resolution 398.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the report will be received. Does the Senator desire immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CALDER. I should be glad to have immediate consideration of it, if there is no objection.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to have it read. I sought to get a copy of it awhile ago and was unable to do so. That is a matter of some concern to us.

Mr. WARREN. Reserving the right to object, I have no objection to its being read.

Mr. BORAH. Reserving the right to object, I will ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The resolution (S. Res. 398), submitted by Mr. HARRISON on January 5, 1923, reads as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate appoint a committee to consist of five Members of the Senate, three from the majority party and two from the minority party, to investigate problems relating to reforestation, with a view to establishing a comprehensive national policy for lands chiefly suited for timber production in order to insure a perpetual supply of timber for the use and necessities of citizens of the United States. The committee shall make a final report of its investigations with recommendations to the Senate not later than December 2, 1924.

At this point the committee proposes an amendment to make the date April 4, 1924.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee is authorized to sit and act at such times during the sessions or recesses of the Sixty-seventh and Sixty-eighth Congresses and in such places within the United States, to hold such hearings, and to employ such clerical and stenographic assistants as it deems necessary. The cost of stenographic service to report such hearings shall not be in excess of $1.25 per printed page.

Which it is proposed to amend to read "25 cents per folio."

The committee is further authorized to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to take testimony. The expenses of the committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, has the Senator from Mississippi any objection to this resolution going over for a day?

Mr. HARRISON. None.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to look at it a little.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I inquire from what page the Secretary is reading?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. LADD in the chair). Page 2.

Mr. HARRISON. Are the committee amendments being considered first?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They are. That order has been made.

Mr. HARRISON. Then any amendment I may offer will have to wait until after the committee amendments are disposed of?

Mr. WARREN. It should wait, if the Senator please, until the committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, before we proceed further I just want to say that "day by day in every way," so far as the country leaning toward the Democratic Party is concerned, it is getting better and better.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Just as soon as I have told the Senator how his party is being defeated as the days come and go.

In November of last year up in the great State of Pennsylvania in one of the districts where two gentlemen were contesting for the right to serve the people of that district in the Pennsylvania State Senate there were some twenty-odd thousand votes polled. In that district in the race between the present junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and the Democratic candidate, Mr. Shull, Mr. REED received 12,682 votes and Mr. Shull 10,317 votes, about 2,500 majority. In the race between the Republican and the Democratic candidates for the State senate there was a tie, both receiving approximately 12,000 votes. They ran off this tie yesterday. I have waited now some three hours to-day to hear an explanation of the result from some one on the other side and for the information of the returns to be given. In the race yesterday between these two candidates who tied a short while ago for the State senate the Democrat received 2,500 majority; and thus it is that the Republican Party "day by day in every way" is getting deader and deader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Executive Mansion and grounds," on page 3, line 19, after the word "grounds," to strike out "(within iron fence), $5,000" and insert "$10,000," so as to read:

For improvement and maintenance of Executive Mansion grounds, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 24, page 3, the last paragraph read being:

For extraordinary repairs to and refurnishing the Executive Mansion, $20,000.

Mr. KING. I would like to inquire of the Senator from Wyoming whether the evidence before the committee showed the necessity of $50,000 for the refurnishing of the Executive Mansion, and also $20,000 for extraordinary repairs and refurnishing?

Mr. WARREN. Fifty thousand dollars is the sum usually spent in taking care of the ordinary wear and tear and providing for the repairs, refurnishing, and so on. Now necessity has arisen for making the building as nearly fireproof as possible. They will have to go through the roof of the building, which is said to be a fire trap, and the $20,000 is for extraordinary repairs to put it in better shape. At the time the White House was rebuilt the upper part of the structure was scarcely touched, and when Mr. Wilson was about to become President some money was spent in the upper story, but at the same time all of the underroof and some of the upper story were unfinished, and the $20,000 is for finishing that part of the building, and also to bring heat over from the State, War, and Navy Building.

Mr. KING. Then $20,000 is to be spent solely for repairs and for furnishing of a part of the building which heretofore has not been furnished?

Mr. WARREN. It is not for furnishing, but it is for repairing and reconditioning. Fifty thousand dollars covers all of the refurnishing.

Mr. SMOOT. Ten thousand dollars of the $20,000 is for the purpose of putting a heating system in by running a tunnel from the State, War, and Navy Department Building over to the White House and heating the White House and the offices there from that one boiler. Two thousand one hundred dollars a year will be saved by expending this $10,000 of the $20,000. Four thousand dollars is for the construction of an ice box and refrigerator, which is now located in the passage between the offices and the White House. This would provide for a permanent improvement of the refrigerating system used in the White House, instead of having the refrigerator in that passage, which the Senator has no doubt seen a number of times. That would make up the $20,000.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 3, after the figures "$5,000," to strike out "Provided, That this work shall be done by the Office of the Supervising Architect," so as to make the paragraph read:

For preparing plans and estimate for fireproofing the Executive Mansion, including plans for the renovation of the second and third stories and the roof, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 2, page 5, the last paragraph read being:

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN.

For expenses of the Alien Property Custodian authorized by the act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, as amended; including personal and other services and rental of quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, law books, books of reference and periodicals, supplies and equipment, and maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $280,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia if suitable space is provided by the Public Buildings Commisson.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether or not there has been an increase in this appropriation for the use of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; and, secondly, if there is any necessity for furnishing the Alien Property Custodian vehicles of the character referred to? It seems to me that a vice has been developed in the Government service of furnishing automobiles to too large a number of Government employees and too large a number of Federal agencies. A large number of the employees of the Government feel that they must have automobiles. I think we should restrict the number to the President, the Vice President, Cabinet officers, the General of the Army, and a few others, but this indiscriminate employment by Federal officials of automobiles, it seems to me, is a vice which ought to be corrected, because the use of the automobile carries with it the employment of a chauffeur, a large sum annually for repairs, and a large amount annually for the purchase of gasoline, so that in the aggregate a very large burden is imposed upon the Treasury of the United States by our providing motor-propelled vehicles for the hundreds of Federal employees who enjoy the luxury of their use.

Mr. WARREN. Replying to the inquiry of the Senator as to the Alien Property Custodian, that particular appropriation has not been increased. It is the same as before. The general appropriation for that institution is greatly decreased. However, they have a great many industries, really, which have to be superintended and visited, and there is considerable running about to be done. They have to have some means of transportation, and it would require still more expense in travel in the way of taxis and other means of transportation if they did not have the automobiles.

As to the general observation in his zeal in these matters, which I acknowledge, the Senator probably will hardly spend a tenth of the time I have spent in opposition to any increase in the number of automobiles, the expense for them, and so forth. Nevertheless it comes down to the fact that we must either maintain them or spend still more money in other directions. Formerly, commencing, I think, at the time Andrew Jackson rode to the White House on horseback, there were appropriations for horse-drawn vehicles for various departments, and they were very much more expensive than motors. Another thing: Formerly the activities of the Government of the United States were carried on in very few buildings, covering a very small area of the city. At the present time it would seem as though the departments and Congress together had insisted upon making a crazy quilt of the Government buildings. They are located in all parts of the city, and I might say outside of the city proper, and in sending papers from one to another to be signed, and doing the work that has to be done, a great many more men even than the number we have now have been required.

We have been cutting down the supply of help very largely. As to whether we are giving too much, the Senator must judge, the same as I do.

We have not increased a single item in the bill as it passed the House regarding that. The Senator from Tennessee has offered six or eight different amendments in regard to motor-driven vehicles, to cut out all expenses of automobiles, the expense of the care of them, and other expenses. I do not see that Senator in the Chamber now, but I am perfectly willing to submit every one of those amendments to a vote of the Senate, although, of course, if that means of locomotion is done away with, there will have to be some means of transportation provided. But when the amendments come up I shall not object to their coming to a vote.

Mr. KING. In view of the information conveyed by the able Senator from Wyoming to the effect that the Senator from Tennessee has offered a number of amendments dealing with this subject, I shall pretermit any further discussion at this time and wait until those amendments are offered.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 16, page 5, the last paragraph read being as follows:

BUREAU OF EFFICIENCY.

Salaries and contingent expenses, including traveling expenses; per diem in lieu of subsistence; supplies; stationery; purchase and exchange of equipment; not to exceed $100 for law books, books of reference, and periodicals; and not to exceed $150 for street car fare; in all, $144,500: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum except the following: One $7,500, 1 at $6,000, 3 at $4,250 each, 8 at $4,000 each, 3 at $3,600 each, 1 at $3,500, 2 at $3,250 each, 5 at $3,000 each, 2 at $2,750 each, 3 at $2,400 each, and 5 at $2,000 each.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to direct an inquiry to my colleague, because I know he has given a great deal of attention to this particular agency of the Government. I would like to inquire of him whether, in view of the passage of the Budget law and the fact that the Budget organization is functioning, he believes it is necessary to perpetuate this organization, and whether he believes the benefits so far derived, and those which possibly may be obtained in the future, warrant this expenditure. It seems to me the number employed is rather large, and the compensation for some of them seems to be rather excessive.

Mr. WARREN. That question has come up a number of times, and I will say that this is one of the most efficient bureaus we have in the entire Government service. In connection with the various bills handled by our committee, covering many interests, we have to consult the bureau. I will ask the Senator's colleague, the senior Senator from Utah, to reply to his inquiry, as in his line of duty he has more to do with the Bureau of Efficiency than has any other Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to my colleague, I will state that I know of no agency of the Government which, in proportion to the amount of money appropriated for it, saves to the Government what this bureau does. I thought I had here a statement of the savings made in the last year in the different departments of the Government through the recommendations of the Bureau of Efficiency. It is not $100,000, but it is hundreds of thousands of dollars, and it runs every year to three and four and sometimes ten and twenty times the amount appropriated.

In order to find out really whether those savings have been made, I have taken occasion to go to the department and check up the reports, and I know, not from the Bureau of Efficiency, but from the department heads, that the recommendations made by the Bureau of Efficiency have saved the amounts of money given in their statements. The Budget Bureau is using the Bureau of Efficiency for the very purpose of securing the information necessary to enable the Director of the Budget to make recommendations to the President of the amounts that should be carried in any recommendation he may make to Congress.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand my colleague, in a number of bureaus and executive departments of the Government recommendations, after investigation made, have been offered by this Bureau of Efficiency which have been accepted by the governmental agencies examined and which have resulted in savings?

Mr. SMOOT. In great savings. In relation to the salaries, of course the salary of the director is $7,500. The salary of Mr. Graves is $6,000. I do not know whether my colleague has met Mr. Graves or not, but I want to say that he is one of the brightest men in the public service, and his whole heart and soul are in this work. I know of no one who is doing better work or working more hours in the Government service than Mr. Graves, of the Bureau of Efficiency. I want to say that much for a man who I do know is working early and late, and I know of no man who has a greater interest in his work than has Mr. Graves.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of my colleague whether the number of employees has been increased?

Mr. SMOOT. It has been decreased.

Mr. KING. Is the compensation allowed each the same, substantially?

Mr. SMOOT. It is the same as under existing law.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that a year or two ago complaints were made by some members of the Bureau of Efficiency, with which I sympathized, that in their efforts to get into the departments for the purpose of examining the modus operandi of conducting business, and making recommendations, if they found recommendations were necessary, they encountered a great deal of hostility. May I inquire whether or not that hostility still exists, or has the Bureau of Efficiency been permitted free opportunity for a full and exhaustive investigation for the purpose of making recommendations?

Mr. SMOOT. Instead of that opposition existing to-day, Mr. President, the heads of the departments have realized what the work of this bureau has done for other departments in the Government in the past, and every member of the bureau is kept busy all the time responding to requests of the heads of the various departments.

I want to give credit here to a former Postmaster General, because he was the first man who really realized the importance of the work of the Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator refer to Postmaster General Burleson?

Mr. SMOOT. I refer to former Postmaster General Burleson. He asked the Bureau of Efficiency to come into his department and study the organization from every standpoint, with a view of cutting out all classes of duplication and doing away with unnecessary work. That was done. I wish I had now the letter which I received from former Postmaster General Burleson telling of the results of the work of the bureau and commending it to every department of the Government.

I want to repeat what my colleague has stated, that in the inception of the organization of the bureau there was opposition. The head of every department and every division and every bureau of the Government thought that he knew more about how to run his particular department than somebody else who would come in and tell him what to do, but I do not think any of them feel that way now. I am very much pleased to say to my colleague that the work of the bureau has been all and more than was expected when we first created it by law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Are we now reading the bill regularly?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; for action on the committee amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the items for salaries, Civil Service Commission, on page 6, line 3, after the word "each," to strike out "Custodian force: Engineer, $840; general mechanic, $840; telephone switchboard operator, $720; 2 firemen, at $720 each; 2 watchmen, at $720 each; 2 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 3 laborers, at $660 each; 4 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $305,420" and to insert "; telephone switchboard operator, $720; in all, $296,480"; so as to make the paragraph read:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Three commissioners, at $5,000 each; chief examiner, $3,500; secretary, $2,500; assistant chief examiner, $2,400; chiefs of divisions—1 (who shall act as assistant secretary) $2,400, 2 at $2,000 each; certification clerk, $2,000; examiners—7 at $2,400 each, 3 at $2,000 each, 6 at $1,800 each; clerks—6 of class 4, 28 of class 3, 39 of class 2, 52 of class 1, 34 at $1,000 each, 22 at $900 each; messenger, $840; assistant messenger, $720; skilled laborer, $720; 4 messenger boys, at $420 each; telephone switchboard operator, $720; in all, $296,480.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator having the bill in charge whether there has been a transfer of the officials provided for in lines 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, page 6, to some other part of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. I expected the Senator to make that inquiry, and I am very glad to advise him that that amendment reduces the amount from $305,420 to $296,480, although it is a small reduction. In the bill as we go along we shall cover four or five different departments which have been a care in the way of watchmen and janitors, and so forth, and have now been turned over, the same as some of the departments before have been, to the department presided over by Colonel Sherrill, Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds. He has shown great economy and excellence of service. There is carried a reduction in the bill of some forty-odd thousand dollars in all. There are two of the departments provided for by lowering the total sum like this one, but there are four as to which we state in the bill that there shall be paid back to the Treasury a certain amount of money from the surplus funds.

Mr. KING. I am not sure that I followed the Senator, but as I understand his explanation it was that heretofore some of the agencies and bureaus in Washington have had the care of their own buildings, whereas now the care of the buildings has been consolidated under the head of one man, Colonel Sherrill.

Mr. WARREN. Yes. The head of the department. Colonel Sherrill will probably be followed by an equally good man when his tour of duty has expired, as that is always provided for by appointing an Engineer officer.

May I state to the Senator, correcting my former statement, that two of the departments have been lowered in the main sum. We have stated it in what appears to be an amendment, though it is really the same general subject, but we strike it out in order to make it plainer in the way we have now incorporated it in the bill. In four or five of the departments we save $40,508. I think in this connection I ought to insert in the RECORD a brief statement coverng the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

Saving effected by Senate committee amendments.

Buildings.	Salaries.	Bonus.	Fuel, lights, etc.	Total.
Department of Commerce	$5,520	$2,880	$950	$9,350
Department of Labor	5,760	2,352	900	9,012
Wardman-Justice	3,860	2,688	4,750	11,298
Civil Service Commission	180	96	1,700	1,976
Interstate Commerce Commission	3,760	2,112	2,800	8,672
Total	19,080	10,128	11,100	40,308

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 6, lines 3 to 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand it, we are merely passing over the various sections of the bill. I have an amendment I want to propose to the second paragraph under the heading "Civil Service Commission," but it is an independent amendment and I presume I shall have the right to offer it later on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may offer the amendment later.

Mr. KING. It may avoid offering an amendment to strike out the entire paragraph if the chairman of the committee would make an explanation now as to the item on page 6, lines 10 and 11:

For additional employees for the Civil Service Commission, $107,500.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator will remember that about a year ago the President of the United States and the heads of departments associated with him made it the duty of the Civil Service Commission to examine postmasters reappointed or newly appointed. It is necessary for them to have this appropriation largely for that purpose. It is considerably smaller than they thought they ought to have for the additional work. We have appropriated heretofore even much more than we are appropriating now for the work. We put the item in the bill as for special work because, after this flood of changes has taken place, we hope we may cut down expenses much more. As long as it is additional, it is much easier to get it out than it would be if it were associated with the other and larger regular appropriation.

Mr. KING. May I invite the attention of the able Senator to the provision found in lines 1 to 4, page 8, which carries $32,500 for examination of presidential postmasters, including travel, stationery, and so forth, additional examiners and investigators, and other necessary expenses of examination?

Mr. WARREN. That is for travel, stationery, contingent expenses, and so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will notice that we have reduced the item further down on the page from $45,000 to $39,540, and we have increased the amount referred to by the Senator; that is, we increased the amount of the estimate of the Budget from $90,000 to $107,500, so it is a transfer from page 8, so far as the amount of increase is concerned. We are not taking the exact Budget estimate into consideration.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask my colleague or the chairman of the committee, in view of the very large staff possessed by the civil service organization and the rather generous appropriations which have been made, what is the necessity for giving $107,500 for additional employees, and also $32,500 for the examination of presidential postmasters?

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator know how many postmasters have to be examined? They constitute a tremendous number.

Mr. KING. I do not know, but I imagine it would be in the neighborhood of between 7,000 and 10,000 that will have to be examined from now on.

Mr. WARREN. That would nowhere nearly cover it.

Mr. McKELLAR. From now on it would not be anything like that.

Mr. KING. I think that I am within the bounds not only of reason but of accuracy when I say it will not exceed 10,000 postmasters to be examined for the coming year. I am not complaining, but our Republican friends have managed to get rid of a large number of Democrats, and I think 10,000 will cover the number that will be gotten rid of in the next year, because that will comprise substantially all.

Mr. WARREN. Would it be any comfort to the Senator's feelings if I should say to him that a great proportion of this is for investigation of character; that is, they propose to determine not only the educational qualifications of the candidate but his character, because it has developed—and I say this without any political bias—that we have found convicts released from a penitentiary holding post-office appointments at times. Instances of that sort have caused a revulsion of feeling. That part of the examination is, I think, very valuable and adds to the needs of the commission, and of course we have to provide accordingly.

Mr. KING. May I make one further observation? I do not think, because a man has been convicted of some offense, that he ought to be debarred from becoming a candidate for any position, for that matter. If the bar which a conviction would raise to his holding the office is removed by pardon or some other method, I think he ought to be given an opportunity to become an applicant for a position. In other words, I do not think it should be held against a man forever that he has made a mistake and been convicted, if by his subsequent course in life he has exemplified to the world a penitent spirit, if he has made reparation, and if he is pursuing an honorable course in life. If that be true, progress and position ought to be accorded him.

Mr. WARREN. May I say to the Senator that I feel very much about that as he does, so far as he has gone; but I think the Senator would do as I would do in a case like that. He would want to find out something about the man and what his conduct was afterwards. He would desire, through some agency, to examine the doings of the man. That is exactly what the Civil Service Commission proposes to do and is instructed to do. I do not believe anything has occurred yet that would bar those who may have been considered sufficiently penitent, who have exempted themselves from further suspicion; but a great deal of money has been lost and a great many loose things have been done in connection with the post-office service itself.

Mr. SMOOT. May I call my colleague's attention to what the House did? On page 8, the item referred to by my colleague is for examination of presidential postmasters, including travel, stationery, contingent expenses, additional examiners and investigators, and other necessary expenses of examination, $32,500. The existing law carried $75,000 for that purpose. The Budget estimated $50,000. The House took $17,500 off of the $50,000 and added it to the Budget estimate for additional employees of the Civil Service Commission, making the item on page 6, lines 10 and 11, a total of $107,500. So my colleague will see that the amount appropriated for the coming fiscal year for the examination of presidential postmasters is less than half of what it was this year, or $75,000. As I said, the Budget cut that to $50,000, and the House cut it to $32,500, but took $17,500 and put it in the item for additional employees of the Civil Service Commission, making $107,500, or a reduction from existing law, but an increase over what the Budget allowed because of the transfer of employees.

Mr. KING. Let me inquire of the Senator if it is not a fact that the provision for additional employees of the Civil Service Commission is intended to give temporary employment to individuals, or at least employment for the current year only, and to employ individuals who are not upon the general roll and are not provided for in the general law?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the existing law reads as follows:

For additional employees for the Civil Service Commission, $100,000.

That is the existing law to-day. The existing law for examination of presidential postmasters provides $75,000. The existing law provides $175,000 for the two purposes.

Now, the House gave $32,500 for examination of presidential postmasters and $107,500 for additional employees in the Civil Service Commission, and that makes only $140,000 instead of $175,000, as carried in the existing law.

Mr. KING. When was the existing law to which the Senator has called my attention enacted?

Mr. SMOOT. It was enacted on the appropriation bill of a year ago, and continues in effect until July 1 of this year.

Mr. KING. The point which I attempted to make, but perhaps I did not make myself clear, was that this provision for additional employees was made during the war.

Mr. SMOOT. No. It has been carried in the bill ever since the law was passed, which was, I think, about 10 or 11 years ago, authorizing and directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to begin the valuation of the railroads of the country. Ever since that time the appropriation bill has invariably carried a great deal more than the sum now proposed to be appropriated for additional employees. The reason for that is that more employees may be needed at one season of the year than at another and in that way may be used to advantage. That is the reason also why the appropriation has been made as a lump sum. I am happy, however, to state to the Senate that the officials of the Interstate Commerce Commission have advised the committee that at a very early day they are hopeful of winding up the work of the valuation of the railroads, which they began so long ago.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask one other question which seems to me to be pertinent. If the Interstate Commerce Commission and other commissions do not call for additional employees, then this entire amount of $177,500 plus $32,500 may not be expended?

Mr. SMOOT. If they do not need the employees, certainly the appropriations will not be expended.

Mr. KING. Do I understand that the Civil Service Commission, under the authorization found in lines 10 and 11, page 6 of the bill, makes temporary appointments as the exigency arises, and when the exigency ceases the employees are separated from the service?

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely.

Mr. KING. They do not, then, remain on the permanent roll of the department from year to year?

Mr. SMOOT. No; and that is why they are appropriated for in the manner now proposed.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from Utah know whether from the appropriation which has been made for the current year there will be any money covered back into the Treasury?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that there will not be. An increase of $7,500 was asked for in order to enable the work to be completed, if possible. So there will be nothing covered back this year, for which only $100,000 were appropriated.

Mr. KING. Of course the Senator will perceive that in the next paragraph, found at the bottom of page 6, there is a field force authorized for the Civil Service Commission for which an appropriation of $272,000 is proposed?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. KING. Is not that field force employed in conducting examinations?

Mr. SMOOT. That field force will always have to be appropriated for because it is used for the regular work of the commission.

Mr. KING. I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. And we shall never get rid of that so long as the Civil Service Commission exists.

Mr. KING. It occurred to me that with that very large field force, in view of the fact that there are so many employees in the Government service, with the understanding that some will be separated from the service, the ordinary field force would be competent to deal with all examinations that may be made during the coming year.

Mr. SMOOT. The Civil Service Commission say that that can not be done. I will say, further, to the Senator that $272,000 is the exact amount which we appropriated for this purpose for the fiscal year 1923.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] shall offer an amendment to strike out the provisions of the bill from line 10 to line 18, inclusive, on page 6, and lines 1 to 4, inclusive, on page 8, I shall support the amendment.

I make that statement because the examination of third, second, and first class postmasters by the Civil Service Commission is an entirely useless and vain thing. I was interested in the statement made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] a moment ago that one of the reasons why it took so many employees for this service was that they were going into the character of the applicants. Mr. President, the Civil Service Commission does not in all cases go into the character of the applicants; neither does the Senate consider the character of nominees. For instance, there was a man who was recommended by the then patronage dispenser of Tennessee, John W. Overall, himself collecting money from various applicants for post-office appointments in Tennessee and assessing charges against them. Checks were submitted showing that he had received the money, but he claims that it was to reimburse him for expenses incurred in coming to Washington to arrange concerning the appointments. I recall also the case of Mr. Overall's nephew, a man by the name of Whaley, who was alleged by his neighbors to be a man of bad character. I think it was alleged he was guilty of all kinds of offenses and that he had been prosecuted a number of times and probably convicted once. I have forgotten the exact circumstances, but some of his neighbors testified as to his bad character. Nevertheless he was appointed postmaster. The Civil Service Commission did not find out anything about him and made no report, as I recall; in fact, the Civil Service Commission did not pay any attention to the matter when it was called to their attention, and the Senate confirmed that man afterwards, over my protest, of course. So if the Civil Service Commission are searching into the character of applicants it is a useless and vain thing; there is no use to do it. There is no use of our furnishing money to do it.

I believe that what we ought to do would be to strike this provision out entirely. The Republican Party is in power, and they ought to have the right to appoint postmasters. I, for one, should not object to their doing so. Let them appoint the best men.

The Civil Service Commission is supposed to select three eligibles; but if there are two Democrats and one Republican, it makes no difference what the character of the Republican may be, it makes no difference what his qualifications are, it makes no difference what the facts and circumstances about his efficiency may be, the Republican will be appointed. So why should we spend this vast sum of money for the purpose of establishing an eligible list, when no attention is paid to the eligible list, even if they have all Republicans on it?

I will give the Senate an illustration of the situation. At the little town of Gainesboro, on the Cumberland River in my State, there were quite a number of candidates for postmaster. That county is fairly evenly balanced between Democrats and Republicans, there being good people in both parties. There was an eligible list of three, as I recall; at least two of them were Republicans, and, indeed, I think all three of them were Republicans, but a man was first appointed acting postmaster who was not on the list, and then the department turned down all three of the eligibles and appointed a man who had failed utterly in his examination. I think he made about 60 per cent out of a possible 100, while the other candidates all made over 70 per cent. He was wholly disqualified, but it seems that at one time he had been a rural carrier and under some sort of a rule he was appointed over the three eligibles because it was claimed he was already in the civil service.

Mr. President, any such system as that is worse than a farce, and we ought not be parties to it. As reasonable men, we ought to disregard it, and we ought not to appropriate the money to establish eligible lists under such circumstances. The majority party appoints the officers; it is their duty to do it; it is their right to do it; it is their privilege to do it. All we ask that they appoint decent and honorable men. Do not, however, let us resort to the miserable subterfuge of pretending to be fair about it and having examinations held, all to no purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the same practice was followed all during the last administration, when the Democrats were in power. Let me say further I was quite surprised to hear the Senator refer to a man of very poor character being confirmed by the Senate, although I recall that during the last administration a man was appointed a postmaster in a certain State as to whom there was no question that he had raped a little 14-year-old girl. That, however, did not cut any figure at all, and he was confirmed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was he confirmed by a Democratic Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. He ought never to have been confirmed by a Democratic Senate, by a Republican Senate, or by a Senate of any political complexion.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I say.

Mr. McKELLAR. But two wrongs do not make a right.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. McKELLAR. My proposition is that there is no use in our spending the people's money for the purpose of establishing eligible lists when no attention is paid to such lists. To give another illustration, at the little town of Rutherford, in my State, a Democratic community where I believe there are very few Republicans, there were a number of applicants for the position of postmaster. When the eligible list was established it was found that there were two Democrats and one Republican on the list, but the Republican was not the kind of Republican that those in power wanted to have in the office. There was, however, another Republican whom it was desired to place in the office. So that Republican got Mr. Overall—and I presume paid his expenses—to come here to Washington and make application for reexamination, and on the reexamination the wife of this applicant for postmaster who had failed to get on the eligible list was put at the head of the list and given the appointment.

Why should there be resort to proceedings of that kind? The Republicans are putting their friends in office. I do not object to that; they ought to do it; but why spend the people's money for a purpose which, while on its face it seems to have some evidence of fairness, in reality is a mere subterfuge? Why make the claim that the appointments are nonpolitical, when every appointment that is made is political?

If the Senator from Utah does not offer an amendment to strike out the two provisions to which I have referred, I am going to offer such an amendment, for the provisions ought to be stricken out. I do not know that it will do any good, for the majority party may continue to resort to this subterfuge. I do not think the Civil Service Commission is particularly to blame in this respect. They do not appoint. They go ahead and establish an eligible list; but, after the list has been established and certified to the department, I think it is reprehensible for them to permit one of the applicants who has failed in the examination to come to Washington and ask to be regraded and put first on the list merely because he or she is backed by the Republican boss who is selling the office. We ought not to agree to the continuation of any such system. We are paying out the people's money for purposes for which we ought not to pay it out.

Numerous instances of the kind to which I have referred have occurred in my State. So far as I know, no Democrat has been appointed. So far as I can now recall, in nearly every instance in my State a Democrat has been first on the eligible list—I doubt if there have been a score in the whole State where a Democrat has not stood first on the list if any took the examination—but never in any instance has the Democrat received the appointment, so far as I recall, if there was a Republican on the list. Is that a proper administration of the civil service? If it is, God save the mark! Is that the kind of civil service that we ought to have if we are going to have one? The civil service, so far as these postmaster examinations are concerned, is a miserable farce.

I have heard here a great deal about the Committee on Civil Service Reform and their demand that we should have an honest, efficient, and straightforward civil service; but if what we have now is such a civil service, I do not understand what an honest and efficient civil service is.

I want to say to the Senator from Utah that I am not complaining. I think the party in power should have the offices and should make appointments to them, but I do not think we should spend the people's money to determine eligibles when no attention is paid to the eligibles after they are determined, and even the three on the list are disregarded and persons who have failed are appointed, as in the case of Mr. Dudney at Gainesboro. He utterly failed. There were three eligibles declared. They were all disregarded and the man who had failed was appointed, and his nomination is pending now. It ought not to be confirmed, but, of course, the Senate will go ahead and confirm him regardless of his character, regardless of his failure, regardless of his inefficiency. It is going to be done. Then, why spend the people's money in a matter of this kind? I do not think it ought to be done, and I hope it will not be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 8, line 11, to increase the appropriation for necessary traveling expenses, Civil Service Commission, including those of examiners acting under the direction of the commission, etc., from "$18,000" to "$20,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 15, after the word "charges," to strike out "fuel, heat, light, and power; window washing"; in line 23, after the word "rent," to strike out "maintenance and repair of electric conduit"; and on page 9, at the end of line 2, to reduce the total appropriation for contingent and miscellaneous expenses, Civil Service Commission, from "$45,000" to "$39,540," so as to make the paragraph read:

For contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the Civil Service Commission, including furniture and other equipment and repairs thereto; supplies; advertising; telegraph and telephone service; freight and express charges; street-car fares not to exceed $200; stationery; purchase and exchange of law books, books of reference, directories, newspapers, and periodicals, not to exceed $500; charts; purchase, exchange, maintenance, and repair of motor trucks, motor cycles, and bicycles; maintenance and repair of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle to be used only for official purposes; garage rent; postage stamps to prepay postage on matter addressed to Postal Union countries; special-delivery stamps; and other like miscellaneous expenses not hereinbefore provided for; in all, $39,540.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "General Accounting Office," on page 14, after line 6, to insert:

The General Accounting Office is hereby authorized to destroy all paid United States Government checks that have been issued three full fiscal years, after all unpaid checks have been properly listed as outstanding as now required by law. Hereafter all claims on account of checks appearing as having been paid shall be barred if not presented to the General Accounting Office within three full fiscal years after the issuance thereof.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I do not think I desire to oppose the amendment. I should, however, like to ask a question of the Senator in charge of the bill, the able Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

In the course of business with different departments I happen to have in mind just now two or three cases in which the existence of these old checks became very material in protecting the rights of the Government. I wonder whether the committee has fully considered that?

Mr. WARREN. Fully; but this is a matter of checks, and thousands of cubic yards of these checks—all the pension checks and all others—have accumulated to such an extent that they give rise to danger of fire not only for themselves but for their surroundings. It is considered that after the three years additional here and the three years that we have heretofore provided there will be hardly any opportunity to make use of them in any valuable way. In fact, the records would show everything that the checks could show.

Mr. WILLIS. I am disposed, of course, to accept the judgment of the experienced chairman of the committee; but one of the cases I had in mind was just such a case as this would apply to—that is to say, under this provision, if it had been the law, the very evidence that was relied upon successfully to protect the interests of the Government would have been destroyed. I understand, of course, the difficulty presented by the accumulation of these old checks. It is quite a problem; but it does seem to me that it might destroy evidence of great value to the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that we are now holding every pension check that was issued from the day the first check for the first pension became a reality. We have not simply a room like this full of them, but we have rooms full of them; and since the law was passed requiring the payment of these pension checks monthly, with the great number now being paid, we shall have to find space somewhere to take care of them. If they are going to be of any use at all they must be in a fireproof building, or else there is danger of all of them being destroyed by fire; and I think there will not be one case in ten million such as the Senator is referring to.

Mr. WILLIS. I think that is true; but I submit for the consideration of the Senator whether the relief which he very properly seeks from this accumulation of old papers and documents can not be obtained without making the limitation period quite so brief—say 5 years or 10 years?

Mr. SMOOT. The period is six years under this provision. The existing law requires that they shall be published the first three years, and this is in addition to that.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no desire to be contentious about it. I just call attention to the matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee or of my colleague in regard to the matter that has just been considered, the General Accounting Office. As I recall, for the current year a very liberal appropriation was made because it was contended that this organization was new, and that a good deal of work was involved in getting all of the machinery into efficient operation. I wish to inquire whether or not there has been any reduction in the pending bill over the appropriation for the current year? The expenses of the Government ought to be less next year than this year, because we are receding from the war period.

Mr. WARREN. They are less. I think I ought to say to the Senator that this bill carries a great deal less—in fact, more than $10,000,000 less—than the estimates, and the estimates in the first place cut down former appropriations very materially. In some cases they did not cut them, but generally speaking, all of the expenses have been cut, and that applies to what the Senator has just brought up. It has been cut down as low as the Budget seemed to think it could be cut down—something between thirty and forty thousand dollars—$36,904, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] says.

Mr. KING. I can not see how you can readily get an estimate of the cost, because some of the appropriations here have been heretofore carried in a number of bills.

Mr. WARREN. That has all been figured out. Formerly we undertook to provide in a lump sum for this rather new matter, under the late changes, of general accounting. As the Senator knows, that office assembles all the auditors that we formerly had to appropriate for in detail. The auditors for all of the departments are now in that one establishment, and we have cut it down, as I say, $36,904, which is all that the House and all that the Senate committee felt it could be cut down at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Speaking of transfers from other sources that are appropriated for in existing law, I want to say that there was $211,477 of deficiencies and transfers, and the existing law is $175,261; and, as the Senator from Wyoming says, there is a saving this year over last year in all of the items mentioned of $36,904.

Mr. KING. Does not my colleague think there ought to have been a greater reduction in view of the decreased expenses of the Government and the smaller amount of business that has to be carried on because we have liquidated so many of the War Department's activities?

Mr. SMOOT. That is a reduction of about 12 per cent, and I will say to my colleague that I wish we could have reduced them all in the same proportion.

Mr. KING. Yes; I regret that we can not.

I want to say, in reply to the Senator from Wyoming about estimates, that I think predictions were made when the Budget bill was passed, and predictions and statements have been made frequently upon the floor of the Senate, that whatever economies are effectuated in the Government will be largely the result of the work of Congress itself; that the executive departments, no matter how they may be flagellated and condemned and criticized, will always ask for more than they ought to have, and more than Congress will give; and my experience here in the Senate, short as it is, has revealed the fact that, extravagant and wasteful as Congress may be, it is still more economical than the executive departments of the Government. If it were not for the earnest work of a number of Senators upon the Appropriations Committee—and I commend them for their courage and their zeal—the appropriations would be very much larger than they are. I think the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], my colleague [Mr. SMOOT], and others are entitled to great credit for their assiduous efforts to keep down the expenses; but let me say that with all of their zeal I think they ought to have made deeper cuts in the recommendations of the Budget. I think the expenses, notwithstanding the reductions which may be reflected in the various bills, are too high, and the burdens of taxes resting upon the people are entirely too great.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, in the next paragraph, the committee offers the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 14, line 17, after the word "Memorial" and the comma, it is proposed to insert the words "to be immediately available," so as to read:

GRANT MEMORIAL COMMISSION.

For printing and binding report on construction and dedication of the Grant Memorial, to be immediately available, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there is no amendment called for in the next item—the Housing Corporation. I am going to trouble the chairman of the committee to give an explanation in regard to that activity. A number of Senators have asked me to do so. They are not on the floor, but they will want the information and will be glad to read it in the RECORD. May I say to the Senator that several Senators have said to me that in their opinion this organization ought to be abolished, that it ought to go into voluntary liquidation—and if it will not voluntarily liquidate, involuntary liquidation—and whatever of these houses and properties are now controlled by the organization ought to be disposed of, the proceeds covered into the Treasury of the United States, and the organization cease entirely.

Mr. WARREN. I agree with the Senator perfectly. That is exactly what they are doing, with the exception of this inn keeping here in the city, which has been made inevitable, we may say, by the lack of housing in the city—that is, for the present. The houses are being sold and, of course, some of those that have been sold have been taken back under mortgage because of the changes that were bound to happen. They had an extensive hearing before the House committee, and that evidence was also before the Senate committee, but we had the chairman of that board before us; and I have sent now for the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], the Senator who makes this his particular business.

Of course this appropriation covers not only the handling of these buildings, which house nearly 2,000 women and girls, but there are some thousands of houses and some business properties which have to be cared for. On the other hand, this end of the housing proposition here in the city is really making money for the United States. Seventy per cent of the income covers the Government expense. As the Senator will remember, we appropriate for all of the expenses and care of the buildings, and the money that is earned goes directly into the Treasury; but it shows a profit. If the Senator will let us pass over that, I will turn back to it when the Senator from Maine comes in, and it will be explained more fully.

The next amendment was, under the head "Interstate Commerce Commission," on page 17, line 14, to strike out "$2,100,000" and insert "$2,239,360, and no part of this sum shall be available for the care, maintenance, protection, fuel, light, and so forth, for the Interstate Commerce Commission Building"; so as to read:

For all other authorized expenditures necessary in the execution of laws to regulate commerce, including per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act, approved August 1, 1914, $2,239,360, and no part of this sum shall be available for the care, maintenance, protection, fuel, light, etc., for the Interstate Commerce Commission Building, of which sum there may be expended not exceeding $50,000 in the employment of counsel, not exceeding $3,000 for necessary books, reports, and periodicals, not exceeding $100 in the open market for the purchase of office furniture similar in class or kind to that listed in the general supply schedule, and not exceeding $75,000 for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. I would like to have the Senator explain the increase of more than $139,000 over the allowance made by the House.

Mr. WARREN. That raise was made as the result of a hearing granted to two members of the commission, and it was felt that it was necessary to close up pending business in order to avoid greater expenses hereafter. There are two raises of a considerable amount; in fact, they are the only two raises of consequence for any of the purposes of the commission.

The Senator is a good lawyer, and he understands what the Interstate Commerce Commission has to do. Among other things, we have spent—and I have had many a heartache over it—millions and millions and millions of dollars in the last 10 or 15 years, I have forgotten just how long, in the valuation of the railway properties; and I have no doubt that a good deal of that expenditure at first was foolishly made, simply because the information gets very old and out of date before it is used. Now, there has come a time when there should be a full survey made, to become the basis upon which they can conduct their business for the present and hereafter until there is some reason to change. They solicited this very urgently. The committee was unanimous in thinking that we ought to give them this larger amount for this year, and then ask the effect of it and, if possible, reduce accordingly hereafter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 10, to increase the appropriation to enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to keep informed regarding and to enforce compliance with acts to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads, etc., from "$350,000" to "$400,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 9, to increase the appropriation for the valuation of property of carriers, etc., from "$1,000,000" to "$1,250,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 20, line 18, the committee proposes from the floor to insert, after the word "Memorial," the words "to be immediately available," so as to read:

LINCOLN MEMORIAL COMMISSION.

For printing and binding report on construction and dedication of the Lincoln Memorial, to be immediately available, $3,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics," on page 21, at the beginning of line 6, to strike out "$270,000" and insert "$247,000," so as to read:

For scientific research, technical investigations, and special reports in the field of aeronautics, including the necessary laboratory and technical assistants; traveling expenses of members and employees; office supplies and other miscellaneous expenses, including technical periodicals and books of reference; equipment, maintenance, and operation of a research laboratory, known as the Langley Memorial Aeronautical Laboratory; maintenance and operation of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle; personal services in the field and in the District of Columbia; in all, $247,000.

Mr. KING. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this item, and I would like to inquire whether upon further consideration he does not think that it would be unwise to eliminate it. I have made some inquiry and have discovered that the amount which has been subtracted from the House appropriation was to be devoted to a very important matter.

The Senator knows that there have been some fatalities growing out of the destruction of our dirigible aircraft, and that the War Department or the Navy Department, or both, have purchased or are having constructed a very large craft of the kind just referred to, and experiments obviously are necessary to demonstrate the safety or the wisdom of that kind of craft, and this amount was to be devoted to investigation and research work. I have felt for some time that we have not been sufficiently concerned about aircraft, we have not coordinated the Government activities making researches and investigations into aircraft, and anything within reason the committee may provide for the necessary investigation in regard to aircraft I think is proper, and I would heartily support.

Mr. WARREN. I individually had some doubt, after we had stricken a part of the item out, and I undertook to get further evidence concerning it. I recall that the Senator who is now on his feet called my attention to this matter some days ago, and I have a letter, written yesterday by the chairman of the bureau, which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD. I shall make no objection to this amendment being disagreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks to have the letter referred to inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1923.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WARREN: I earnestly request that the decrease of $23,000 made by your committee in the appropriation for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics in the independent offices appropriation bill be restored, making the appropriation for scientific research and investigations $270,000, as passed by the House.

Our executive committee carefully prepared a research program for next year, based on its own knowledge of the needs of aeronautical science and on the admitted needs of the Army and Navy for the scientific study of certain fundamental problems in aeronautics. The Bureau of the Budget went over this program and approved an estimate of $247,000. By stretching that sum as far as we could we found that there were still two problems in the program that could not be undertaken at all. We convinced the House Appropriations Committee of this fact, and they allowed an additional $23,000 to undertake a thorough investigation of the problem of the aerodynamic forces on a rigid airship for the Navy, which means an accurate measurement and study of the air pressures over the entire surface of an airship envelope and the variations in these pressures during maneuvers.

Nothing whatever is known of these forces by any nation at the present time. The Navy is building a large rigid airship at Lakehurst, N. J., and the Army a large semirigid airship at Akron, Ohio, and both the Army and the Navy have asked our commitee to make the necessary scientific studies before these experimental airships are placed in service. The Navy's first fleet airship, the ZR–1, will be completed next summer, and the investigation of aerodynamic forces should be the first thing undertaken in order to insure its safety.

We have only to recall the shocking disaster to the R–38, when it broke in two in the air over Hull, England, with a loss of 42 lives, to profit by the British experience and appreciate the need of making the scientific studies which they omitted to make. I am confident that your committee and the Senate would not hesitate to agree to this proposition if they reflected on the American lives that will be risked and the millions of dollars invested by the Army and the Navy in this important military development.

As evidence of the importance of scientific research generally in the development of aeronautics, and of the value of the work of our committee to the Army and the Navy, I attach copies of letters addressed to the Bureau of the Budget by General Patrick and Admiral Moffett, the heads of the Army and the Navy Air Services, respectively.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES D. WALCOTT, Chairman.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS,
Washington, September 23, 1922.

The DIRECTOR OF THE BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Scientific research in aeronautics is essential to the continued development of aircraft for naval purposes. The Naval Bureau of Aeronautics relies upon the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics to conduct the necessary investigations on fundamental problems and to furnish original information and data not otherwise obtainable.

The increased importance of aircraft in naval warfare is recognized by the General Board of the Navy, and plans for the greater development of naval aviation have been approved. Unless the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics has the requisite funds and facilities for providing fundamental information, it will not be possible to keep abreast of the development of naval aviation in other countries.

The attached memorandum sets forth some of the more important problems which the advisory committee has undertaken for the Navy.

Respectfully,

W. A. MOFFETT,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy,
Chief, Bureau of Aeronautics.

SOME OF THE FUNDAMENTAL INVESTIGATIONS NOW BEING CONDUCTED BY THE NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS AT THE REQUEST OF THE BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS, NAVY DEPARTMENT.

SEPTEMBER, 1922.

Investigation to determine the pressure distribution over the envelope of a C-class airship when the airship is being maneuvered at different air speeds and in different atmospheric conditions.

Pressure distribution over the rudders and fins when these control surfaces are in their normal, intermediate, and extreme positions.

The effect on lateral controllability of a biplane of variation of the dihedral angle.

Investigation of the comparative stability, controllability, and maneuverability of the SE–5, Fokker D–VII, Spad VII, and the MB–3.

Theoretical analysis of the design and construction of the Navy rigid airship ZR–1.

Investigation leading to the development of a high-speed fuel-injection engine to operate on fuel oil instead of gasoline; to be of lightweight construction and suitable for use as a power plant in airplanes and in airships.

Investigation to determine the distribution of loading between wings of biplanes and triplanes of varying gap chord ratios and with various degrees of stagger for airfoils of several types.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF AIR SERVICE,
Washington, September 22, 1922.

The DIRECTOR OF THE BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics conducts laboratories at Langley Field, Va., in which studies and investigations are made on the more fundamental problems of flight. The programs for these investigations are prepared with the cooperation of Army and Navy experts. The results of practically all the investigations carried on by the committee are of great interest and value to the Army Air Service.

Aeronautics is progressing rapidly, and greater technical knowledge is necessary if we are to keep pace with developments abroad. Engineering experimentation conducted by the Army and Navy, and based upon existing knowledge, will contribute measurably to the general development of aviation, but, in my judgment, well-directed scientific research, as conducted by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, is essential to substantial progress. The Army Air Service depends upon the advisory committee for the study and solution of the more difficult problems. I believe, both as chief of the Air Service and as a member of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, that it would be unwise economy to curtail or postpone the research programs of the advisory committee.

Very truly yours, MASON M. PATRICK,
Major General, Air Service, Chief of Air Service.

Mr. SMOOT. On behalf of the committee I submit the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 21, after line 13, insert the following:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS COMMISSION.

The Public Buildings Commission is authorized, after public advertisement and public hearings, to order the destruction of old Government records for which there is no longer any need and which have no value from an historical point of view.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I will ask that we turn back to the question of housing, now that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] is here, and if the Senator from Utah would like further information I will ask the Senator from Maine to reply to his interrogatory.

Mr. KING. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Wyoming. May I say to the Senator from Maine that I challenged attention to the provisions of the bill dealing with the Housing Corporation and stated that a number of Senators had asked me to make inquiry concerning that corporation and to propound the question as to when the corporation would be wound up, and particularly was I enjoined to inquire as to the necessity of this $800,000 for expenses for housing here in the District of Columbia. I am expressing no opinion, but I would like to get a full explanation from the Senator.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I will endeavor to give the Senator the information. I am quite familiar with all of the proceedings in regard to this particular activity, especially respecting the dormitories. We are asking for $800,000, and I want to say that last year the receipts were $967,160.12, and made a profit to the Government of $86,000.

We are taking care of 1,900 girls, approximately, and have a large number on the waiting list. We are supplying board to those girls for about $45.50 a month. We are trying to liquidate and wind up the affairs of the corporation.

The Senator will recall that we had an appropriation of $100,000,000 for the United States Housing Corporation. We expect to get about $64,000,000. We now have 37 different projects in 17 different States, comprising 6,000 buildings, and, of course, the winding up of the affairs of that corporation is a pretty large undertaking.

We have another project down at Norfolk, Va. I have taken special pains in regard to this, as it came to my committee. The president of the corporation has called on me often, and I have had statements from him regarding all the affairs of the corporation. I always regret to have to make this statement, because I am so opposed to Government operation of any kind of business, but we made $116,000 on that project the past year.

When I began to get interested in this, and to take some activity in its management, we had over 200 employees in the United States Housing Corporation. We have reduced that number to 27, with 9 outside whom we have to look after the projects all over the country, which is, I believe, a very commendable way of handling the project.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that the economies to which he has referred resulted not because of any inherent virtue in the corporation, but because of the splendid Yankee ability and shrewdness of the Senator from Maine, managing the corporation?

Mr. FERNALD. I appreciate the compliment very much. I have tried to handle the business as I would my own, and have given it almost my undivided attention, because I realized what an undertaking it was, particularly this dormitory proposition. It is a good deal of an undertaking to look after 1,800 girls.

However, we have been exceedingly fortunate in the management of the corporation. We are exceedingly fortunate in having at the head of the institution one of the most remarkable women in the country. First, we started out with a man at the head of it, but we did not feel that it was a very good idea to have a man there as much as it was necessary for the head of the institution to be there. Then we procured the services of a woman, whom we kept a year or a year and a half, but the business was almost too much for her health. Then we secured a woman who was perfectly competent, vigorous, strong, able, and of the right age, and they are going along pleasantly down there and everybody is satisfied. I would be glad to give any information I can, because I am very familiar with the working of the corporation.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator if in estimating the profits he took into account the capital invested?

Mr. FERNALD. Oh, no.

Mr. KING. Nor the deterioration?

Mr. FERNALD. No; nothing like that, nor insurance, although in all of the projects outside which we have sold to individuals, of course, we insist that they keep the property insured. We are carrying a large amount of insurance, something like $25,000,000 worth, on property outside.

The Senator will recall that in the resolution it was suggested that if it were possible, instead of selling the large projects to a corporation to speculate on, they be sold to individuals, which we have tried to do in every instance. We are selling the properties as rapidly as we can. I agree with the Senator that we ought to wind up the affair. We have about $20,000,000 worth of property and $7,000,000 worth of notes secured, so we are on the last turn.

We have one project down in my State. We had a very large shipbuilding industry there, and not only did the United States Housing Corporation build a great many houses but the Navy Department also did. Then we lost the Texas Co.; they withdrew, which practically closed up all of the industry there, and we have had those houses left on our hands. Houses which cost from $6,000 to $10,000 to build we have been unable to sell at any price or at anything that would be considered reasonable. We have some houses there that cost $8,000 and we have been offered $300 for them, and we have concluded to keep them. We have another project in California of like character. As I said, we have 37 of the projects scattered over 17 States.

I want to stress particularly the decrease in the number of employees of the Housing Corporation. I believe to-day that it is carried on by a less number of people than any project of its size in the United States. Here is $60,000,000 worth of property, and we have 27 employees and only one attorney in the system.

Mr. KING. I suppose there are caretakers?

Mr. FERNALD. Oh, yes; we must have caretakers, but there are only nine of those, as I recall.

Mr. KING. Most of the property is inactive and is simply awaiting demolition or sale?

Mr. FERNALD. A good deal of it has been sold. The business having been withdrawn from a town or the surrounding country, the people have been unable to meet their payments in many places. We have been trying to carry them on and to make arrangements so they could remain.

Mr. KING. I would like to inquire of the Senator what is his purpose and what is the purpose of the corporation with respect to the dormitories here in the District of Columbia?

Mr. FERNALD. So long as they were going on without any expensive repairs on buildings which would last a year or two longer without any extensive repairs, and so long as we do not have to make repairs and were making a little money, I have felt that perhaps until we could close up all the business of the corporation we had better continue the operation of the dormitories.

Mr. KING. Then as I understand, with the Government paying the taxes, or the property not being taxed at all in some instances, and not taking into account the insurance, not taking into account the aid given by the Government, and not taking into account the capital invested, there is some little profit on the enterprise in the District?

Mr. FERNALD. In the dormitories. That is being closed out as rapidly as possible.

Mr. KING. In respect to the other properties under the control of the corporation there is no profit?

Mr. FERNALD. In Norfolk, Va., for instance, we have a project on which we made $116,000 last year.

Mr. KING. But I suppose the same conditions exist there.

Mr. FERNALD. There is not much of anything in the way of business there. It was money loaned and we get interest on the money besides that. In that particular proposition it was a paying project. We got about $100,000 for the property.

Mr. KING. The corporation has loaned some money and taken security on the real estate?

Mr. FERNALD. We took security and were unable to close it out and had to operate it. I went over the matter very carefully with the committee, because I am entirely familiar with every single activity of the United States Housing Corporation. As will be recalled, we had an investigation about as soon as I was made chairman of the committee, which I reported to the Senate, and since that time, finding a great many loopholes that I felt should be closed, I began to get interested and brought it up to the present time. I went over it very carefully and was very carefully questioned about all these matters. I am very glad to answer any questions about it. I know the Senator agrees with me about the proposition. I am as much opposed to a Government activity operating the business of the country as a man can be. At the proper time I shall be glad to close out this business and all other similar businesses.

Mr. WARREN. I may state to the Senator from Utah that all of the amounts covered in the last housing appropriation bill have been cut down in the present bill. Here is one in the matter of salaries where the amount was reduced some $11,000, and in another matter $2,000, and in another place $125,000.

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; I can state one instance where the amount was reduced from $65,000 to $54,000.

Mr. KING. Liquidating the corporation; that ought to be done.

Mr. FERNALD. But, as a rule, all the bureaus are increasing their operations all the time. This is one instance where we have reduced from more than 200 down to 35 employees.

Mr. KING. The other bureaus of which the Senator speaks are continuing bureaus, and perhaps are permanent appendages to the Government.

Mr. FERNALD. They think they are.

Mr. KING. This is merely a concern created as a war measure, and with the termination of the war it ought to go out of business.

Mr. FERNALD. I think it is more useful than many of the other bureaus we have.

Mr. KING. I inject no comparisons. I believe we have many unnecessary governmental organizations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? He may have answered it before I came into the Chamber; and if so, he will be good enough to tell me.

Mr. FERNALD. I shall be glad to answer any question I can.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it proposed to make any change such as this? I have noticed occasionally in the papers mention of a proposition of some scheme of razing the buildings and doing away with them entirely. Is there any such intention?

Mr. FERNALD. Of course, that is for the Congress to say. I have felt that, inasmuch as the buildings were there, and inasmuch as they were causing us no extra expense, and inasmuch as we have 1,900 girls well cared for who need housing facilities, perhaps it would be better to continue to operate them.

Mr. McKELLAR. And especially so long as rents are so very high in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FERNALD. Exactly.

Mr. McKELLAR. And so long as the Government rents the buildings to the tenants on such reasonable terms, too. It seems to me the Senator's position is entirely right, and I am glad to hear what he has said about it. I indorse it absolutely. I think as long as it can be done without loss to the Government, we ought surely to continue the project.

Mr. FERNALD. That is the way I felt about it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I would like to ask the Senator in reference to the houses outside of the District. I remember that while taking a trip during the war I saw a great many of these houses which had been built and which it seemed probably would be entirely useless after the termination of the war. What has been done with reference to those buildings?

Mr. FERNALD. We are selling those just as fast as possible. In some places we have been able to do very well. On the whole, I think we will get back two-thirds of the appropriation of $100,000,000 for the whole proposition, but it is a tremendous thing. With all the houses we have sold, we still have 6,000 on hand in 27 different cities and towns scattered all over the country from Bath, Me., to Vallejo, Calif. In some cases where the cities are busy and there are industries operating we have closed out the houses at very good prices, while in other places, like Bath, Me., we have been unable to sell anything at any kind of a price.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, if the Senator and his commission are able to get as much as 66⅔ per cent back, I think he should be congratulated, and I for one want to congratulate him. I hope that we can obtain that much from the houses. I think it is fine work, if he is able to do that.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 4, page 23, Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. WARREN. At that point I wish to insert a committee amendment. It costs no money, although there is considerable language involved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 23, after line 4, insert the following:

The Regents of the Smithsonian Institution are authorized to prepare preliminary plans, to be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts, for a suitable fireproof building with granite fronts for the National Gallery of Art, including the National Portrait Gallery and the history collection of the United States National Museum, said buildings to be erected when funds from gifts or bequests are in the possession of the said Regents, in sections or completely on the north side of the Mall, between the Natural History Building, United States National Museum, and Seventh Street, leaving a space between it and the latter of not less than 100 feet, and a space of not less than 100 feet between it and Seventh Street, with its south front on a line with the south front of the said Natural History Building.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like an explanation of that and to know whether the Senator deems it sufficiently circumscribed to preclude the possibility of the Government being called upon to erect the building. Is it expected, in other words, that it is to be built entirely from contributions?

Mr. WARREN. It must come entirely in that way, from funds other than those of the United States. There is no proposition on the part of the Smithsonian Institution to erect the building unless they get some bequests, and they think they have in mind the sources from which they will get them.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is not intended to ask the Federal Government for any appropriation for the purpose?

Mr. WARREN. Not a cent.

Mr. KING. What is to be the approximate cost?

Mr. SMOOT. About $2,500,000.

Mr. WARREN. The building is to be erected in such way that sections can be added to it. Its total cost may be a million dollars or half million dollars, but it is made to conform to the National Museum Building. It is to be on land which the Government owns, and this is merely a permission for somebody to give the amount of money necessary to erect the building. Then it is tied up in such way that it must be in accordance with the plans of the existing buildings.

Mr. SMOOT. I have a photograph of the class of building that will be erected. A little while ago the Director of the Smithsonian Institution telephoned me that he had just received a $35,000 bequest since the papers announced that the plant was to be put in operation.

I will say to my colleague that there is no likelihood the Government of the United States ever being asked for a single cent. The plan is somewhat after that of the Free Building. I do not know whether Senators have been down to that building.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the National Museum Building. The photograph which the Senator has is very much like the National Museum.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and it will certainly be a wonderful ornament.

Mr. KING. Is it intended to supplement the building which is already on the Mall?

Mr. SMOOT. It is just east of the new United States National Museum, which is also called the Natural History Building. This is to supplement that; and is to be erected by donations. The Commission on Fine Arts has approved of the project.

Mr. McKELLAR. This building, as I understand, is to be east of the new United States National Museum Building?

Mr. SMOOT. It is to be just east of the new United States National Museum Building.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has there been any determination of the purpose for which the building is to be used?

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment states for what it is to be used.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is the building to be located near where Ninth Street runs into the park?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is to be located nearer Seventh Street.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of my colleague whether the proposed building has any relation to the building to which reference has been made in the newspapers recently which is to be erected by the Fine Arts Commission?

Mr. SMOOT. I presume the junior Senator from Utah has reference to the building which Mrs. Dimock is endeavoring to have erected on ground in the same vicinity.

Mr. McKELLAR. That building is to be an auditorium, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. That is to be an auditorium. The pending amendment has nothing whatever to do with that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has permission to erect the building ever been granted to Mrs. Dimock?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes; and she has already collected a great deal of money for the purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a very worthy enterprise, and I hope it may succeed.

Mr. KING. I recall reading in the newspapers about a building which was to cost a very large sum of money.

Mr. SMOOT. The structure contemplated by the amendment is not that building. The junior Senator from Utah has reference, I think, to the plan to erect certain buildings on the Mall. It is, of course, intended that those buildings shall be erected by the Government; but the Government will not pay a single cent in this instance.

Mr. KING. I ask that the amendment may be again read, in order that we may understand its full significance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 23, after line 4, it is proposed to insert:

The regents of the Smithsonian Institution are authorized to prepare preliminary plans, to be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts, for a suitable fireproof building with granite fronts for the National Gallery of Art, including the National Portrait Gallery, and the history collections of the United States National Museum, said building to be erected when funds from gift or bequests are in the possession of the said regents, in sections or completely, on the north side of the Mall, between the Natural History Building, United States National Museum, and Seventh Street, leaving a space between it and the latter of not less than 100 feet and a space of not less than 100 feet between it and Seventh Street, with its south front on a line with the south front of the said Natural History Building.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is not clear to me from the reading of the amendment as to who is to pay for the plans which are to be prepared. It is proposed to authorize certain plans to be prepared. Who is to pay for them?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I happen to be one of the regents of the Smithsonian Institution, and so I am familiar with the purposes of this amendment. The idea is that the proposed building shall be erected entirely from gifts or bequests. It is quite possible that the Smithsonian Institution will receive a gift for this art gallery, and the amendment is drawn in such a way as not to obligate the Government at all in any manner, for an appropriation. That is not the idea of the regents at all. The reason that the amendment is proposed at this time is simply to prevent the land from being used for any other purpose, and it is very important that that shall be done.

As the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] probably knows, the Smithsonian Institution has received a great many very large gifts, for instance, there is the Frear Gallery. Mr. Frear not only gave his great art collection, but he gave the building, which cost $1,200,000, and made provision for its care. He has also left a fund which at present market prices amounts to more than $2,000,000 and yields an income of $163,000. I think it is quite probable that the Smithsonian Institution may receive another gift for the purposes of the art gallery mentioned in the amendment.

The amendment is offered with a view, in case such a gift or bequest shall be received, that the land in question shall be secured for the uses of the Smithsonian Institution and of the gallery. There is no idea of getting any appropriation at all from the Government. The regents of the institution were entirely against any such plan as that, because they knew that probably such an appropriation at this time could not be obtained.

Mr. KING. I had in mind the funds to meet the expenses of preparing the plans; whether the regents had ample funds or whether those funds were to be obtained from the Government.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment does not involve an expenditure at the present time—not a cent.

Mr. KING. The regents are authorized to prepare plans, and that would involve some expenditure.

Mr. LODGE. It would not involve an expense to the Government, for the cost will be paid out of the donations.

Mr. KING. So far as I am concerned, I should have no objection to the Government paying it.

Mr. LODGE. There is no idea on the part of the regents at all that the Government shall do that. The matter has been submitted to them and has been determined. There is no idea on the part of the regents of asking any appropriation from the Government at all. As I have stated, the purpose is simply to secure this piece of ground against other uses.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to that at all.

Mr. LODGE. It will not cost the Government anything.

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me the amendment ought to be adopted by all means, and I have no objection whatever to it.

Mr. WARREN. Question!

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wyoming on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "State, War, and Navy Department Building," on page 25, line 7, after the word "repairs," to insert "uniforms for watchmen," so as to read:

For fuel, lights, repairs, uniforms for watchmen, miscellaneous items, and city directory, $54,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Walker-Johnson Building," on page 25, line 14, after the word "repairs," to insert "uniforms for watchmen," so as to read:

For fuel, lights, repairs, uniforms for watchmen, and miscellaneous items, $8,480.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I notice a number of amendments similar to that. Heretofore we have never provided uniforms for watchmen, as I understand.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that similar amendments are suggested in six or seven different places in the bill, but they involve no additional appropriation, as the cost comes out of the funds mentioned before the amendments were inserted, and, as I have stated, on account of the rearrangement and readjustment that has been made in the management of the force of watchmen, and so forth, a sufficient saving has been made more than to cover the item of uniforms.

As to the desirability of providing uniforms, I think the Senator from Florida, as well as all other Senators, will appreciate, on a moment's thought, that we ought not to have watchmen in charge of fine Government buildings, night and day, going around in various togs, ragged and dirty, perhaps, and at times even looking like hoboes. Especially is that true in the night. The uniform of the watchman is notice to the potential marauder at once that he can not expect to trifle with him, and the one seeking for information recognizes in a moment the watchman in his uniform and his authority.

Mr. FLETCHER. According to the language of the bill, it would seem the Government will have to pay for the uniforms.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly; just as the Government pays for the uniforms of the watchmen in the Capitol. I think the Senator would hardly desire to see all of our watchmen and policemen in ordinary clothes that might be proper for a private individual.

Mr. FLETCHER. I agree with the Senator as to that. I was wondering, though, whether the watchmen did not provide their own uniforms.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no.

Mr. OVERMAN. They only receive about $70 a month, and how could they buy uniforms?

Mr. WARREN. The Government in buying numbers of uniforms secures them at a reduction. Furthermore, the watchmen, as indicated by the Senator from North Carolina, receive only a trifling pay, amounting to about $70 a month or so.

Mr. FLETCHER. I agree that the pay provided would warrant the Government in supplying the uniforms, but I was wondering if that had been the custom heretofore. This language was being added all through the bill, in six or seven places, as if it were something new.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator was not in the Chamber, perhaps, when I explained that various Government buildings one by one have been placed under the care of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, until most of them are now under his care. He has perfected an organization which has brought about great economies in that particular service; so that, notwithstanding the Government pays for the uniforms for the watchmen, a saving of more than $40,000 has been brought about in the appropriations carried by this bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the amendment entirely proper; but it seems to me that the provision should have been carried in the bill as it came over from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I notice, Mr. President, in line 19, page 25, an item of $2,000 for a disbursing clerk, and then provision is made for a large number of clerks following. I was wondering what was the necessity for having a disbursing clerk and a large number of assistants merely to pay out funds to employees who care for the buildings. Let me illustrate what I have in mind. Take, for instance, the Interior Department. There are a large number of employees of the Interior Department; I presume there is a clerical force and there is a disbursing force, which has to do with the payment semimonthly or monthly of all the employees. Obviously they could pay the watchmen who look after the building as well as they could pay the clerks.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator is in error, because the watchmen and janitors are already under the supervision and control of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. KING. If they have been withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the Interior Department, at least for the purpose of payment, then I can see the correctness of the Senator's position. But, now, coming to the Potomac Park buildings.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the disbursement, let me say, amounts to $2,000,000 per annum, and it is necessary to have the employee provided by the bill in order to take care of that disbursement. It seems to me entirely proper. Of course, the disbursing officer may be bonded. He is not, however, confined to the particular duty of a disbursing officer, but must perform any duty which may be assigned to him, although his particular duty, of course, is to disburse the funds. He has to make payment to an almost innumerable number of employees, as the Senator will realize when he takes into consideration the total amount disbursed and the meagerness of most of the salaries.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what are the duties of this disbursing clerk and the clerks allotted to him, to which reference is made in the paragraph under the heading "Potomac Park Buildings." The Senator said $2,000,000 will be expended by the disbursing officer.

Mr. WARREN. I will read a paragraph from the testimony in the hearings of Colonel Sherrill, who was asked about this disbursing clerk. I read as follows:

Mr. WOOD. I see you have a new disbursing clerk at $2,000 in here?
Colonel SHERRILL. Yes. The reason for that is that the Comptroller General, under a recent decision, has compelled the payment of all employees by cash instead of by check and, while there has always been an urgent need for a disbursing clerk, this change in the method of payment of 1,500 employees makes it absolutely imperative that such a clerk be authorized. The salary of $2,000 is a low one, on account of the fact the pay roll will exceed $100,000 a month and the total disbursements $2,000,000 a year.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator what employees are comprised in the category to whom payment is made by this disbursing officer?

Mr. WARREN. They are almost innumerable, but they cover all of the working force employed in taking care of this large number of buildings. The Senator knows, if he will take a look in the southern part of the city, that there are acres and acres and acres of public buildings there, and in every one there are watchmen and policemen and janitors and charwomen and all of that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head "Potomac Park office buildings," on page 26, line 13, after the word "items," to insert "uniforms for guards," so as to read:

For fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, uniforms for guards, and city directory, including maintenance, repair, exchange, and operation of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle to be used for official purposes only, $164,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Mall office buildings," on page 27, line 19, after the word "items," to insert "uniforms for guards," so as to read:

For fuel, lights, repairs, motor cycle and truck repairs, supplies, and exchange of same, miscellaneous items, uniforms for guards, and city directory, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Temporary buildings (1800 Virginia Avenue)," on page 28, line 6, after the word "rent," to insert "uniforms for guards," so as to read:

For fuel, light, repairs, ground rent, uniforms for guards, and miscellaneous items, $19,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "temporary buildings," on page 29, line 16, after the word "rent," to insert "uniforms for guards," so as to read:

For fuel, lights, repairs, ground rent, uniforms for guards, miscellaneous items, and city directory, $81,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Interior Department buildings," on page 30, line 11, after the word "repairs," to insert "uniforms for guards," so as to read:

For fuel, lights, power, repairs, uniforms for guards, window washing, miscellaneous items, and city directory, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for contingent expenses in connection with the maintenance, operation, and protection, etc., of the Pension Office, Patent Office, and General Land Office buildings, on page 31, line 5, after the word "repairs," to insert "uniforms for guards," so as to read:

For contingent expenses in connection with the maintenance, operation, and protection, including fuel, lights, repairs, uniforms for guards, and miscellaneous items, $74,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 6, to insert:

For installing 15 stories of filing stacks in the interior court of the Pension Office Building, including elevators, lighting system, and foundation, personal services, labor and materials, to be immediately available, $1,000,000, said sum to be disbursed under the direction and supervision of the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the chairman of the committee tell us the facts about this item?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is a matter that has been under consideration for a long time. As the Senator knows, we have perspired and shed blood for years about archives buildings, and still these papers and documents accumulate and are not cared for. This is proposed to take care of certain classes of papers and documents and place them in the unused portion at present of the Pension Office Building. Perhaps the Senator will remember that formerly we had stacks of a lesser degree than this and, for that matter, clerks working all over the floor there. We had to take them out once in four years and have an inaugural ball for the President, and so forth, and then put them back again. Now it has occurred to those having charge that it would be a good plan to put in these stacks.

I will ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] if he will go further into the matter, as he has had it under his special charge in connection with his duties on the Public Buildings Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, May I ask the Senator from Utah, before he begins, whether the Pension Building is a fireproof building?

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely; and I want to say to the Senator now that the statement in this prepared article that has been furnished to a good many of the Senators is not correct. I have the statement from Colonel Sherrill and the engineers of the different departments that there is no building that is more fireproof than that. The roof is of tile and cement, and the only wood that there is in it is the little wooden pins that were used while the roof was being constructed; and the statement that it is made of wood covered with tin is an absolute falsehood.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a brick building, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a stucco and brick building; yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. From the outside—I have never examined it critically at all—it would appear not to be a fireproof building. How long has it been built?

Mr. SMOOT. I think it was built near the end of the sixties.

Mr. LODGE. I think it was built in 1869.

Mr. SMOOT. Eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, as I remember. It was in the sixties.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should have my doubts, just speaking generally, as to whether a building constructed that far back would be fireproof.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, it has been repaired many, many times. We have had concrete floors and concrete steps and stairways put in in the building, and I do not know of any Government building that is nearer fireproof than that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator about what is proposed to be done. I notice that the amendment says:

including elevators, lighting system, and foundation, personal services—

What does that include?

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps I had better explain it, and then, perhaps, in the explanation I will answer all the questions.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will. The explanation may answer the questions that I have in mind. I know nothing about it, and I am just asking for information.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if he is personally informed about the question as to the roof of this building not being of wood? I have been told by people whose statements are entitled to credit that the roof is a wooden roof—I suppose not referring to the outer covering of the roof but to the inner support of the roof.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that it is not a wooden roof. I had Colonel Sherrill call again yesterday, and I had him here not two hours ago; I let him read this statement, and I asked him if that was true, and he said it is not true, that it is a tile and cement roof.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, Mr. President, the committee indicated by putting this amendment in the bill its belief of the need of a repository for archives. That being the case, I should like to ask the Senator if it is his judgment that the expenditure of this amount of money, $1,000,000, for what after all is a sort of a makeshift archives repository is advisable? Would it not be better to take this $1,000,000 and apply it toward the construction of an archives building modern in every respect, without any question as to its being fireproof, and one that would be an ornament to the city?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Washington is no more interested in building an archives building than I am. I am in absolute accord with him. I have stood upon this floor now for two years pleading that an appropriation be made for starting the construction of an archives building.

Mr. OVERMAN. It has been more than two years. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] introduced a bill here nearly ten years ago, seven years ago at least, and I supported him then, and so did the Senator from Utah, but we never could get it enacted. How do we know we are going to do it in the future?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That bill was passed first, if the Senator will permit me, in the public buildings act of 1913. Then there was some question as to the location and some question as to the effect of the legislation, as to the extent to which it went—that is, as to whether or not it really authorized the construction of the building. In order to remove that doubt, I offered an amendment to that act expressly authorizing it, using the word "authorized"; and that was enacted into law and is now the existing law.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Under that legislation, when the late distinguished Senator from Virginia, Mr. Martin, was chairman of the Appropriations Committee, without any hesitation he attached to an appropriation bill an appropriation of money, $5,000, for the preparation of preliminary plans. Those plans have been prepared; and if this $1,000,000, or even $500,000, should be appropriated, which would be all that could be expended in the coming fiscal year, there is no doubt available public land owned by the Government in the city upon which work could be commenced toward the construction of the building under that authorization.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me assure the Senator that the adoption of this amendment has nothing whatever to do with the archives building. Let us consider it a temporary matter, and if the improvement is made in the old Pension Building we will save about $600,000 a year worth of space that we need very badly. It is a serious situation. We must have space somewhere, or else go out and pay high rates of rent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I put in the RECORD here the other day the plans showing just what it would save. We can not get an archives building constructed in less than two years and a half, and we will save more than the million dollars in the two years and a half, and we can use in the permanent archives building every stack that goes into the Pension Office Building.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator to wait just a minute. I have here, Mr. President, the plans of this whole scheme; and I want to say to the Senator from Washington—because I know how vitally interested he is in this building, and so am I—that every one of these stacks can be used in the archives building when we get it built; and in the meantime we will save about $600,000 each year in space that we can utilize through taking these records and putting them into the filing cases and stacks that we intend to erect with this money.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator inform us what portion of the million dollars will be used in the purchase of the stacks and what portion will be used in the work of erecting them and putting them in the building?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, as to erecting them, that is simple; the main work will be to bolt the stacks together and build the new foundation in the building.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What will the stacks themselves cost? What will have to be paid for them?

Mr. SMOOT. Approximately $950,000 for the stacks themselves. Here are the plans, showing where every bolt goes; and the other $50,000 will be used to build a foundation in the court, in order that it can sustain the weight of the stacks and the weight of the papers that will go in them. Outside of that, the labor itself is very little, indeed.

They are brought in and put up, beginning at the foundation. The bolt will fit exactly, and each story of the stack will be about 9 feet high. There are 15 stories of those stacks. The stacks are placed upon one another, and fit exactly, just the same as the steel frame of a window is made.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I think we ought to have an archives building. It is little short of a national scandal that documents that are absolutely priceless and which could not be replaced are stored down in the vaults of this Capitol, where they can not be protected; so I am in favor of the archives building. I want to suggest, in addition to what the Senator has said, in reply to the Senator from Washington, that if we had one it would not be presently practicable to transfer the papers from the Pension Office to that building, because, as the Senator knows, in the work in looking after pension cases access must be had to those papers every day, and they have to be stored there for many years to come. So this proposition does not in any way interfere with the archives proposition.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not understand that these stacks to be put in the Pension Office are to be used exclusively for Pension Office papers.

Mr. WILLIS. They are to be used in part for those papers.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, the Pension Office papers are all in the Pension Office.

Mr. SMOOT. They are only a small part of the papers that will be filed. There are 230 miles of these stacks. That is what they figure.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am fully aware of the enormous volume of Government papers. One feature of the present condition in which they are kept that is very important, in addition to the injury they are receiving from moisture in some places and some extremely hot and dry atmosphere in others, causing them to crumple up, is the fact that they are not accessible; and the advantage of an archives building is not only in the preservation of the papers but in the opportunity to classify them and make them accessible for those who have occasion to search among them.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator now that in the transfer of these papers they will be taken from boxes that have been put in space that we want for office space. When they go into these stacks they will all be cross indexed, and a person can readily get any paper he wants.

As I said the other day when we were discussing this question, if at the present time one asks for a paper a few years old, those in charge will say, "It is in building so-and-so. It is in box number so-and-so." They will send four or five people up where the papers are stored, where there are boxes stacked upon boxes, all wooden boxes. They have to take them off each other, and they have to go into the boxes, and they know that in a certain great big box is the paper they want; and sometimes it takes days and days and days to find the paper.

What we want is provision so that every paper that goes into storage shall be cross indexed so that a person can go to the stacks any time and get a paper in two minutes, just as he can get a book in the Congressional Library, and have it for whatever purpose it is desired for.

In this letter it is stated that the place where these papers will be stored is a fire trap, and that if a fire starts in one of the stacks, all the stacks will go, and it will be a fire flue, and more than likely cause great loss of life as well as of records. The stack itself is 9 feet high. The stacks are all in little steel sections, just wide enough to take in the ordinary paper; and in those little sections the papers are put into spaces, I suppose, 3 or 4 inches high, and numbers are given to the papers themselves.

No fire can start among the papers in any of those stacks, they are so small, that a hand grenade would not put out. A serious fire never could get started. I think Mr. Jameson is making a mistake when he makes the statements attributed to him, and he should not be fearful that I am trying to interfere with what he is so deeply interested in; that is, building an archives building. I know the worth of an archives building. I know the Government of the United States has to build one. I know that the records of this Government, precious as they are, are going to decay, and if our present practice continues very much longer some of the most valuable records the Government has will never be in condition so that they can be of public service. They are dropping to pieces now.

I was surprised when this objection to these stacks was handed to me by one of the Senators. After the Engineers have made an examination of this question, after they have been requested by the Public Buildings Commission to make an examination of the old Pension Office with a view of establishing these stacks in that building for the purpose of affording a place for keeping certain records now and to relieve the space they are occupying, which we so greatly need, is it possible Senators think I would ask the Congress of the United States to make an appropriation to put in something that was not fireproof and dangerous to life?

Anyone who will go down into the buildings now and observe the records we intend to preserve will find them in stacks of wood, none of them in stacks of steel. In some of the best buildings we have there are stacks of wood, and if a fire ever starts in them, nothing on earth can prevent their being destroyed. Not only that, but more than likely the building itself would be destroyed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator from Utah, as a member of the committee, accept an amendment, not to interfere in any way with his amendment, providing half a million dollars to begin work upon an archives building?

Mr. SMOOT. I would be delighted to do it. I stood here and asked for $500,000 two years ago. The chairman of the committee agreed with us at that time. We were to locate it between Twelfth and Thirteenth Streets and between B and C.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was on square 88?

Mr. SMOOT. Square 88.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that is the place for it.

Mr. SMOOT. There were objections to it. I say now to the Senator that he can not go further than I will in an effort toward securing an appropriation of $500,000 to begin that building.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very glad to hear the Senator say that. I think that at the proper time I will offer an amendment to the bill for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. I will be glad to support it. Another thing, if I did not know it would save the Government of the United States half a million dollars every year, I would not ask for this million-dollar appropriation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Did I understand the Senator to say that this is to be a permanent thing?

Mr. SMOOT. No; after the archives building is built we can take the stacks out, and use every single steel stack we will have in the new building.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator contemplate that these stacks would go into the archives building?

Mr. SMOOT. If the archives building is large enough, every one of them will go into it. I say now that no business man in all the world would allow the space that is occupied to-day by the records of this Government, space that is worth $2 a square foot, to be so occupied. We are hunting all over this city for space, and the commission is going to get the Government employees out of every rented building in the District, and we are not going to be content until they are out. We have already saved $650,000. I think this is one of the best amendments that could be possibly put in the bill to save a little money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I want to offer an amendment to that amendment. If it has been acted on, I ask for a reconsideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the Senator offer his amendment as a separate amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment, to come at the end of the committee amendment just adopted.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, under the circumstances, I have no objection to that going in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. Following the amendment just agreed to, the Senator from Washington proposes to add the following:

For the construction of a national archives building in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, on square East 88, including mechanical equipment and the drafting of plans and specifications, which plans and specifications shall provide for a building not to exceed $2,500,000 in total cost, $500,000 of said sum to be disbursed and the building to be constructed under the direction and supervision of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator from Washington not to press his amendment to-day. I think the Senator from Alabama would be profoundly interested in that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the Senator has in mind another piece of property in which the Senator from Alabama was interested, and he made objection to the location of the archives building upon that property because it necessitated the closing of a street. This is an entirely different piece of property, and there is no street involved in it at all. I hope, now that the chairman of the committee has announced his favorable attitude toward the amendment, that the Senator will allow it to be adopted at this time.

Mr. KING. Under the rule that we were to dispose of committee amendments first, I fancy that the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington would not be in order.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator offered it as an amendment to the committee amendment and asked for a reconsideration of the vote by which the committee amendment had been agreed to. Therefore it is in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will say to the Senator that if he finds that this property is the property that he has in mind in which the Senator from Alabama was interested, I will have no objection to a reconsideration of it; but I know it is not the same property at all.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator to pass that by until we get through with the bill, and then recur to it. I wish he would give some of us a chance to look into it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will permit that to go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason the Senator from Alabama objected to it before was because it would have closed Eighteenth Street. That was the objection, and the only objection, the Senator from Alabama had. He was not opposed to building an archives building, but he was opposed to closing Eighteenth Street. This will not close Eighteenth Street, and I do not believe the Senator from Alabama would object to it for a moment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In fact, the Senator from Alabama announced that he was in favor of building an archives building.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been made to the present consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will ask the Senator just to let it go over until to-morrow. I would rather do that than object to its consideration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well.

Mr. WARREN. I do not care to agree just now to let anything go over until to-morrow; but we shall let it go over for the time being, and go on with the bill.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "1800 E Street NW.," on page 31, line 18, after the word "items," to insert "uniforms for guards," so as to read:

For fuel, lights, repairs, and miscellaneous items, uniforms for guards, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Lemon Building, 1729 New York Avenue, NW.," on page 31, line 23, after the word "repairs," to insert "uniforms for guards," so as to read:

For fuel, lights, repairs, uniforms for guards, and miscellaneous items, $4,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 32, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE BUILDING.

The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the Department of Commerce Building and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, and thereafter from the Secretary of Commerce to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

Department of Commerce Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Engineer and electrician, $1,400; carpenter, $1,000; electrician, $1,000; three elevator conductors at $720 each; five guards at $720 each; three firemen at $720 each; assistant forewoman, $720; 21 laborers at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; in all, $26,380.

For fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, uniforms for guards, and printing, $18,650: Provided, That amounts aggregating $51,500 of the appropriations made to the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year 1924 for care, maintenance, protection, fuel, light, and so forth, for the Department of Commerce Building are hereby transferred to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings and made available to the extent of $45,030 for payment of the salaries and expenses herein set forth, and the remainder ($6,470) shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. WARREN. On page 33, in line 2, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out the words "miscellaneous receipts" and inserting "surplus funds."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 33, line 2, after the word "of," strike out the words "miscellaneous receipts" and insert in lieu thereof the words "surplus funds."

Mr. McKELLAR. What does that difference mean?

Mr. WARREN. There is no fund called "miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. McKELLAR. The money, however, will go into the Treasury?

Mr. WARREN. It is a miscellaneous fund, but it immediately becomes "surplus funds."

Mr. McKELLAR. It is not subject to be paid out by the department?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 2, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR BUILDING.

The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the Department of Labor Building, and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, and thereafter from the Secretary of Labor to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

Department of Labor Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Engineer, $1,200; general mechanic, $840; 3 elevator conductors at $720 each; 3 firemen at $720 each; 4 guards at $720 each; 12 laborers at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; in all, $17,640.

For fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, uniforms for guards, and printing, $9,000: Provided, That amounts aggregating $33,300 of the appropriations made to the Department of Labor for the fiscal year 1924 for care, maintenance, protection, fuel, light, etc., for the Department of Labor Building are hereby transferred to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings and made available to the extent of $26,640 for payment of the salaries and expenses herein set forth, and the remainder ($6,660) shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. WARREN. On page 34, line 3, in the committee amendment, I move to strike out the words "miscellaneous receipts" and insert the words "surplus funds."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 3, to insert:

WARDMAN-JUSTICE BUILDING.

The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the Wardman-Justice Building, and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, and thereafter from the United States Attorney General to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

Wardman-Justice Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Engineer, $1,200; electrician, $1,000; carpenter, $1,000; 3 firemen, at $720 each; 5 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 5 guards, at $720 each; 15 laborers, at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; in all, $22,940.

For fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, uniforms for guards, and printing, $11,000: Provided, That amounts aggregating $42,550 of the appropriations made to the Department of Justice for the fiscal year 1924 for care, maintenance, protection, fuel, light, etc., for the Wardman-Justice Building are hereby transferred to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings and made available to the extent of $33,940 for payment of the salaries and expenses herein set forth, and the remainder ($8,610) shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not sure that I can identify the building by the name "Wardman-Justice Building." Is it at the corner of Vermont Avenue and K?

Mr. SMOOT. It is where the Attorney General's office is.

Mr. FLETCHER. Where the Department of Justice is located?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and I want to say to the Senator that every effort is going to be made possible by the building commission to get the department out of that building.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator tell us how much rent we pay for that building, and how much we have been paying for a number of years?

Mr. SMOOT. We paid $37,500 for the building for five years, and then our lease expired. Then they made a demand upon us so great that I do not even want to state it; but I said here one day to the Senate that we were going to appropriate $75,000 for the rent of the building and if they ever got any more than that they would have to go to the courts and carry it to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is there anything in the report that they asked the enormous sum of $300,000 a year for that building?

Mr. SMOOT. There is something in the report, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know how we can control it.

Mr. SMOOT. Without discussing the question further, I will say to the Senator that the Government is trying in every way possible to make the move now. We will have to make a number of moves in order to get the space required, because they must have 130,000 square feet, and that is a lot of space for one department. I think we can arrange it before long so that, by various moves which we are now trying to make, we can perhaps obtain the space so we can move the department out of that building.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is, between now and the 1st of July? When does our lease expire at the rate of $37,500 a year?

Mr. SMOOT. It expired a year ago.

Mr. McKELLAR. What rental are we paying for the building this year?

Mr. SMOOT. We appropriated $75,000, and we do not pay more than that.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is double what we paid before.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that it is a little less than 75 cents a square foot, and we are paying a great deal more than that now. Of course, they are asking a great deal more.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think they are asking more than the building would cost.

Mr. WARREN. The question is not at issue now, I understand.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is at issue in this way, that if we are going to move between now and July 1, of course there is no necessity for appropriating these sums for the necessary superintendence of the building. I think we ought to move if we can. We have a world of space down in the Army and Navy buildings in Potomac Park. It seems to me we ought to be able to find space enough in the building in order to look after the Department of Justice and take care of their needs. Those are enormous buildings. I was down there some time ago, and I noticed a very large number of rooms which were not being utilized at all. I believe if the Senator from Utah, who is a master hand at making these changes so as to save the Government money, would go down there and look over those buildings, he would very soon find there was ample room in the two buildings to make such changes as would avoid the payment of the enormous increase in rent which the Wardman-Justice Building now demands. The Government ought not to be required to pay any such rental as that.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah had the plans of every room before him. He has been in every single room. He has been through those buildings so often that he knows every room in them. We are trying now, room by room, to crowd them up so as to get space enough to care for the Department of Justice. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that the Public Buildings Commission is going to utilize every single solitary foot of space the Government owns.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a very important matter. I understand our rent bill runs up to nearly a million dollars a year in the city of Washington alone.

Mr. SMOOT. About $750,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Utah suggests it is $750,000 a year. That is an enormous rental where we have so many buildings and when we are constantly adding to the number.

Mr. WARREN. As I have notice of quite a number of amendments on various subjects, I think we will hardly be able to conclude with the bill to-day, although I desire to conclude with the committee amendments. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business for the day it take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if the item on page 36 under the head of "Tariff Commission" will be passed over? I have an amendment to offer to that item and should like to have an understanding as to when it will come up.

Mr. WARREN. That is the House proposition, and of course is open to amendment when the time comes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As I understand, it will not be taken up to-night?

Mr. WARREN. We will pass it as it stands to-night, but of course the amendment will be as much in order to-morrow as it would be to-day.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There will be an opportunity to offer the amendment to-morrow?

Mr. WARREN. The same opportunity that exists to-night.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request proposed by the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will permit us to take a recess now until to-morrow.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no; we want to finish the committee amendments. There are only a few more.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 34, under the heading "Wardman-Justice Building."

Mr. WARREN. I desire to offer an amendment to that amendment before it is agreed to. On page 35, line 4, I move to strike out the words "miscellaneous receipts" and insert in lieu thereof the words "surplus funds."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 4, to insert:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION BUILDING.

The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the Civil Service Commission Building, and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, and thereafter, from the United States Civil Service Commission to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

Civil Service Commission Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Carpenter, $1,000; general mechanic, $840; 2 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 3 guards, at $720 each; 4 laborers, at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; in all, $8,560; for fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, uniforms for guards, and printing, $4,000; in all, $12,560, which sum is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 21, to insert:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION BUILDING.

The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the Interstate Commerce Commission Building and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, and thereafter, from the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

Interstate Commerce Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Assistant superintendent, $2,000; engineer, $1,500; electrician, $1,600; carpenter, $1,400; 3 firemen, at $840 each; 6 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 5 guards, at $720 each; assistant foreman, $1,000; assistant forewoman, $720; 24 laborers, at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; for fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, uniforms for guards, and printing, $19,000; in all, $54,080, which sum is hereby appropriated.

Mr. WARREN. On page 36, line 8, I move to amend by striking out "$1,500" and inserting "$1,600." There was a mistake in the print.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "United States Veterans' Bureau," in the items for vocational rehabilitation, on page 46, line 1, after the word "repairs," to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available for the purchase and distribution of embossed literature in Revised Braille for the use of blinded ex-service men and for procurement of equipment and supplies for the production of such literature.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have a further committee amendment which I desire to offer, which was presented by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and was duly considered by the committee. I ask that it be inserted at the proper place in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HALE in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

For the Perry's Victory Memorial: For improvements of the grounds and approaches to the memorial, parking, retaining walls, facing the upper and lower plazas with tile or other suitable material, etc., $99,185.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I shall not take the time at this late hour to make any extended observations in support of the amendment. I simply wish to say that I very cordially approve of the amendment which the chairman of the committee has offered on behalf of my colleague [Mr. POMERENE]. It is a very worthy amendment and provides for a very worthy purpose. I ask unanimous consent, however, to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a brief excerpt from the report of the Perry's Victory Memorial Commission stating the reasons for the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The economy with which the memorial is operated would be indicated by any analysis of the items in the treasurer's report relating to "salaries of employees," etc., and salary of the custodian. The latter is in constant attendance at the memorial the year round, and receives but $750 per annum. During the period when the memorial is open to the public, an expert electrician receives $120 per month. From two to four guides receive $95 and $90 per month, and a cashier $45 per month. No other salaries are paid, and members of the commission serve without compensation. Their necessary expenses in attending meetings will be reduced in the future, as their number decreases, due to the provision of the law that the commissioners representing each State engaged in the construction of the memorial shall finally be limited to three members. Extra labor is required at the memorial to keep it in perfect condition, and on the reservation of 14 acres, the latter exceeding what it would be if the grounds were in a creditable condition. But all such labor costs have been most reasonable as compared with the work necessary to be performed.

The report of the treasurer also proves that the memorial continues to be not only self-sustaining but earning an annual net revenue. This has been the case every year since the memorial was opened to the public in 1915. Since taken over by the Federal Government in 1919 it has not cost the Government a cent for maintenance, operation, repairs, or improvements. We doubt that there is any other self-sustaining public work of a monumental or memorial character in America or in the world. It seems most extraordinary that this great memorial, the property of the United States Government, but for which the Government paid but one-third of its cost for actual construction and nothing for the cost of organization necessary to erect it, now is, and always will be, dedicated to the national uses for which it was accepted in perpetuity by Congress, without cost to the National Treasury for maintenance.

* * * * * * *

We urge that the proposed appropriation is immediately necessary as an emergency and economy.

FIRST, AS TO THE EMERGENCY.

The sea wall on the south side of the memorial must be supplemented by a second wall, some feet farther out into the lake, extending the length of the upper terrace. Great financial loss will result and ruin to all the protective work already carried out at this point unless this is done. Measures must also, before long, be adopted to reinforce the present sea walls on both sides of the memorial, one 1,400 and the other 800 feet long, both of which were built by the commission and paid for out of the net earnings of the memorial. No funds for such purposes are now or will henceforth be available to the commission except by congressional action.

The lower terrace, a great plaza 75 by 183 feet, leading to the steps of the second terrace, 75 feet wide, has as its facing only rough, loose stones. There is no other approach to the entrance of the memorial. These stones are dangerous to limb and life. Every year the commission is obliged to construct temporary paths over this plaza, thus depleting its net revenue.

While the memorial is self-sustaining, its average net revenue of approximately $3,000 a year should go to create a surplus to provide against accidents and emergencies. Under present circumstances no such surplus can be created, because the woeful condition of the terraces and grounds require constant expenditures out of the earnings for the protection of the public. At any moment an accident to the elevator might cost $10,000. A single winter storm might cause great damage to the retaining walls. If the Government will complete the property, it will have no further apprehension about maintenance. But even a self-sustaining memorial can not guarantee so continuing unless placed in the condition of safety and fitness for use contemplated by the original plans.

SECOND, AS TO ECONOMY.

The revenues of the memorial are derived from the fees paid by the public for ascending to the top—25 cents for adults and 10 cents for children. Approximately 40,000 people have patronized the elevator in each of the past two seasons. If the approaches were in a presentable and safe condition and the memorial reservation a park instead of a swamp amidst 14 acres of waste land, this patronage would be doubled or greatly increased. Under present circumstances temporary paths have to be constructed across the reservation, only to be damaged or washed away in the winter. The public has no use whatsoever of the grounds. Neighboring groves, forests, and island retreats draw visitors away from the memorial. The state of affairs is a continual loss to the Government as compared with the gross receipts that would ensue if the property were in a condition consistent with the beauty, impressiveness, and appealing interest of the memorial itself.

The people are being denied their rights in the premises. Congress accepted the property for their use, but they are prevented from enjoying it. We have no doubt that if the memorial and reservation were completed the Government would receive an annual net revenue from its investment. That investment is now only one-third of the total cost of the memorial, and if the proposed appropriation of $100,000 were made for the purposes herein recommended the Government would still have paid less than one-half of the cost of the memorial and the national park surrounding it.

Respectfully submitted.

GEORGE H. WORTHINGTON,
President, 712 Hippodrome Building, Cleveland, Ohio.
A. E. SISSON,
Treasurer, Marine Bank Building, Erie, Pa.
WEBSTER P. HUNTINGTON,
Secretary, Columbus, Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming is agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary may correct all of the totals in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to offer an amendment to come in on page 3 under the item of "Contingent expenses of the Executive Office," following the numerals "$36,000" in line 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, at the end of line 2, it is proposed to insert a comma and the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended until the President shall have complied with the request of the Senate as expressed in Senate resolution 258, adopted April 24, 1922.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to have that amendment pending in the morning. I do not wish to address myself to it to-night.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from Mississippi wishes to discuss his amendment to-morrow, I have nothing further to say. I do not wish by any act of mine, however, to indicate that I shall accept it, although I shall be glad to hear from the Senator.

MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR THE LATE SENATOR WATSON OF GEORGIA.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order of the Senate of date February 24, 1905, prohibiting the bringing of flowers into the Senate Chamber may be suspended for the day of Sunday, January 21, 1923, the occasion of memorial services for my late colleague, Senator THOMAS E. WATSON. His widow, who is ill and not able to be present, has requested me to have flowers placed on his former desk for her and her granddaughters, and I sincerely hope her request may be granted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and leave is granted.

RECESS.

Mr. KING. I suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that we now take a recess.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there being no necessity for an executive session to-night, I move that the Senate take a recess, the recess being under the previous order, until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, January 20, 1923, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 19, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord, we pray to Thee, to whom we owe our first, our last, and our eternal allegiance. May nothing stand between us and obedience to Thy holy will. Let Thy sympathy make us social, Thy love make us charitable, and Thy grace make us cheerful. So order our lives that they shall respond to hope and love, to the call of service and sacrifice. Endow us with the mind that sees the heights and the soul that sounds the depths. In all things keep us in harmony with the purposes of our blessed heavenly Father, for the sake of Jesus, our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 13926, Rept. 1431) making appropriation for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, which was read the first and second times and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee reserved all points of order.

EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, presented a report (No. 1432) on the bill (H. R. 13774) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to exchange of property, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I do not think this bill is a privileged bill. Under the rules, must I reserve all points of order now, or can I make a point of order when the bill is taken up?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman can make a point of order when the bill comes up.

Mr. GARNER. To be on the safe side, I reserve all points of order.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in order to present a request for unanimous consent, I ask to proceed for a quarter of a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks to proceed for a quarter of a minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, among the several addresses before the Washington Board of Trade last night was one delivered by Gen. Merton E. Lewis, who was formerly both Senator and Attorney General of the State of New York. It contains some suggestions to our Interstate Commerce Commission and to our Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and is of such value to the country generally that I think it ought to be in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks by inserting it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to insert the speech referred to in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, it seems to me that this is going pretty far in putting matter in the RECORD. Although the gentleman comes from my State, for the present I think I will object.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will yield, this railroad question is one of the main problems that is to be solved, not only by Congress but by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SNELL. I know, but it seems to me that we have gone too far in inserting such matter in the RECORD. I have been waiting for a case where it came from my own State, and I feel that I must object.

Mr. BLANTON. But Gen. Merton E. Lewis is a distinguished gentleman from the State of New York——

Mr. SNELL. I know, I know him personally, but I feel that we have gone far afield in allowing extraneous matter to go into the RECORD. If it is matter that relates to something that has taken place on the floor of the House I would not object.

Mr. BLANTON. This has special reference to a matter that is to be settled by Congress.

Mr. SNELL. I feel that I must object.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the suggested national park at Mount Baker, Wash.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Are they the gentleman's own remarks? If so I have no objection.

Mr. HICKS. They will be my own remarks.

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, through the courtesy of my friend, Mr. HADLEY, the distinguished Representative of the district, and of a number of public-spirited citizens of Bellingham, last summer I was afforded the opportunity of visiting that wonderful section of northwestern Washington known as the Mount Baker-Shuksan district.

Having visited most of our great public reservations, I realize that the magnificence of forest growth and the majesty of mountain scenery gives to this part of the great State of Washington a just claim for consideration as one of the wonder spots of the Nation. It is a pleasure for me to attest to its grandeur, to commend the Agricultural Department for their foresight in opening the domain to the public, and to congratulate the generous impulse of the citizens of Washington for giving their financial and moral support to a project which is destined to be one of our greatest national parks.

Permit me briefly to describe this district of the far Northwest, bounded by British Columbia on one side and by Puget Sound on the other, with snow-capped Mount Baker dominating sea and land and sky.

This area, embracing about 1,000 square miles, is one of the most interesting territories in all of North America. Besides the more notable Mount Baker, whose ancient name is "The Kulshan," meaning "The Great White Watcher," there are in this district and visible at almost every point of one's visit at least 10 other mountains, most prominent among which is Shuksan. This rugged mountain is one of the most aged in the world. It was never a volcano, as was Baker. It was projected through the outer crust of the earth from one of the lowest stratas millions of years, perhaps, before the volcanic mountains were fashioned. Its substance is such that its glaciers do not have a perceptible effect upon its form, whereas the mountains that were formed from lava and ash are being rasped to pieces by the glaciers, and their substance sluiced to the lowlands through the numerous rivers that spring from their many sides. One can not contemplate the history of these mountains without thinking of Shuksan as immutable and without realizing that the more noted neighbors, like Baker, Rainier, Hood, St. Helena, Adams, and Olympus, will pass away.

The Mount Baker-Shuksan district is being opened through the joint effort of the United States Forestry Department and Whatcom County of the State of Washington. A highway, commencing 37 miles from Bellingham, will be completed to the heart of the scenic district, a distance of about 26 miles, to Austin Pass, during the summer of 1924. It will not be ready for traffic, however, until a year later, when ample accommodations for the comfort of visitors will be provided such as is found in the already developed recreational districts of this country.

This highway will penetrate a section of one of the most wonderful forests in North America, passing along turbulent streams and through canyons into meadows of bewildering beauty. Dozens of lakes add to the attractiveness of the section, several of which are almost as deep as some of the mountains roundabout are high. Wild flowers are in abundance, and in season there are thousands of acres of blueberries and other wild fruits upon which the bear, grouse, ptarmigan, marmots, deer, and other wild life thrive.

This section heretofore has been inaccessible except to those of the more venturous type. It has been reached by numerous trails that lead into the district from almost every point of the compass. It is so vast and so rugged that it will never become accessible to automobiles, but the highway of easy grade and broad curves will carry one to the heart of the district and open most of the major points of interest to motor traffic, while trails are being constructed for the use of those who would explore farther.

Glaciers and immense snow fields will be but a few moments' journey from the hotel and highway; so will numerous lakes, waterfalls, natural flower gardens, and elevations that will give one a view that is indescribable. From a point near the terminal of the highway one may see not only the mountains of the Mount Baker Range, but also numerous peaks of the Cascades and a procession of them in British Columbia. The terminus of the highway is but 5 or 6 miles from the international border, and overlooks a stretch of forest in three directions so vast as to be almost impenetrable. Indeed, when here one is at the last frontier in America and but a short journey from some of the least frequently visited regions of British Columbia.

There is no country, say some of the forestry engineers, that contains such a variety of scenery as does this. Nor is there a section that will prove more attractive to the seeker for nature in the full majesty of her unbroken grandeur. The development is not being made under the direction of the National Parks Bureau, but it is an enterprise of the Forestry Bureau, and I desire to commend most heartily the efficiency of the work being done by the Department of Agriculture, under whose jurisdiction the project is being forwarded. The chief objective of the forestry department is the development of the area for recreational purposes and the preservation of its scenic beauties, but the highway will also serve as a public utility for extension of the road system. It will make more accessible the rich mining districts and will enable the department to dispose of such tracts of timber as has matured and should be put to use. This does not mean denudation nor a sacrifice of any of the wonderful tract through which the highway passes. But as a tree like man ceases to develop and in season will fall, so it is a matter of sound policy to have the matured giants removed in order to make way for the development of the younger growth and thus promote the policy of conservation while providing for public use trees that would soon die and thus become a menace to the forest and a loss to commerce.

Profiting from the experience of those who have caused highways to be built into the mountain fastnesses of the Pacific Northwest, the forestry and county officials decided upon a penetration of the higher elevations of the Mount Baker-Shuksan meadows from the north. It has been found that the snowfall on the north side is much less than on the south and west sides.

This will assure a season that will extend from about May 1 to November 1. Indeed, it is now believed that the Austin Pass meadows will be accessible throughout the year, save for the exceptional seasons, and thus afford opportunity for development of the country for winter sports. It is feasible to add another feature in the development of a golf course at an elevation of about 4,200 feet. If this project matures, the golfer will play amidst surroundings that are unmatched in their grandeur.

The new highway will contain no grade exceeding 7 per cent, and this but for a short distance. The last section, now under contract, and leading from the canyon of the Nooksack River to Austin Pass, will not exceed 6 per cent. There will be no part of the highway closed to traffic one way, as on some mountain roads, nor will any part of it be classed as more hazardous than the average country highway.

Ultimately it is proposed to circle the district in order to make it possible to drive to the sections to the east, south, and west of Mount Baker, but funds are not yet available for the more ambitious plan. On the completion of the present project it will be possible to motor to the heart of the wonderland in less than three hours from Bellingham and within six hours from Seattle, thus opening up to these rapidly growing centers of population with their excellent hotels, scenic beauties that will attract an ever-increasing number of nature lovers from all parts of the world.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing to-day a bill for the establishment of an industrial home for women at Mount Weather, Va., and I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a memorandum made by the Attorney General for the superintendent of prisons in connection with the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the statement referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I can not see any great value that may come by incorporating papers that should be embodied in the hearings and reports. I do not think that is a proper practice, and I object.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13793, the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose yesterday there was pending a point of order to an amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. The Chair is now ready to rule.

It is a well-settled interpretation of the rule that Congress may appropriate for one object authorized by law and refuse to appropriate for another object equally authorized by law. If the amendment in this case simply provided that a certain part of the appropriation might be used for the purchase of certain goods described, and might not be used for certain other goods described, there would be no question. But it seems to the Chair, upon a more careful examination than he was able to make yesterday, that this amendment goes further. The amendment is not in the form of a limitation, and therefore it is necessary for the Chair to turn the amendment into a limitation in form in order to determine whether it conforms to the rule. Upon doing this the Chair is unable to bring the amendment within what he believes to be a proper interpretation of the rule.

Does it change the power, authority, or discretion of the Executive? If this amendment be adopted, will he have greater discretion, power, or authority than he had before, or will he have less? In either case it would be repugnant to the rule.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] read into the RECORD yesterday a statement of the law to which the Chair desires to refer. At the time the gentleman read it, it did not occur to the Chair as meeting the situation, but the Chair has changed his mind. The gentleman from Virginia read the law as it now exists, and the Chair will repeat a part of it:

> Hereafter, except in cases of emergency, or where it is impracticable to secure competition, the purchase of all supplies for the use of the various departments and posts of the Army and of the branches of the Army service shall only be made after advertisement, and shall be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, quality and cost of transportation and the interests of the Government considered.

The proposed amendment is as follows:

> All material purchased under the provisions of this act shall be of American manufacture, except in cases when in the judgment of the Secretary of War it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases abroad.

Does the proposed amendment mean exactly the same as the law just read by the Chair? In the opinion of the Chair, while in a very general way it accomplishes the same thing, there is a shade of difference which the Chair thinks he ought to recognize. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 92, after line 7, insert a new paragraph as follows:
> "No part of the money appropriated in this act shall be used for the purchase or acquirement of any article or articles unless they are of American manufacture, except in cases when in the judgment of the Secretary of War it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make such purchases abroad."

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment; first, that it is not in the proper place; second, that it is not a limitation, because it changes existing law; third, because it interferes with the discretion of an executive officer; and, fourth, it is legislation on an appropriation bill. For the reasons which the Chair gave in the decision of a moment ago, the exception stated in the amendment destroys its character as a limitation. It would be competent to provide that no part of the appropriation should be expended for goods made anywhere except in the United States, but whenever you introduce the exception, then you remove the limitation, because it would be possible under that amendment for the Secretary of War in certain contingencies to expend every dollar of the money abroad.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Personally, I have been unable to follow the amendment, so as to compare it with the amendment that was just ruled out of order. Does the gentleman from Texas know how this differs from the amendment just ruled out of order?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I could not distinguish any difference, except it uses the language "that no part of this appropriation," and so forth, instead of the language "all material purchased under the provisions of this act shall," and so forth.

Mr. HICKS. Just that clause?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Just that clause.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment follows the language of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] yesterday, which was ruled in order, but which the committee defeated; that is, restricting the expenditure of funds for articles except when manufactured at arsenals for a sum less than that for which they can be procured otherwise. This amendment is in the customary phraseology of a limitation. It limits the purchase of any article under the appropriations carried in this bill unless they are of American manufacture. It in nowise restrains the discretion that is now in the Secretary of War, so far as the purchase of articles abroad is concerned, when it is to the manifest interest of the United States, because he has that authority to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman interpret the following language in his amendment—except in cases when in the judgment of the Secretary of War it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make such purchases abroad—to mean the same as this language in the existing law:

Hereafter, except in cases of emergency, or where it is impracticable to secure competition, the purchase of all supplies for the use of the various departments and posts of the Army, and of the branches of the Army service, shall only be made after advertisement and shall be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, quality and cost of transportation and the interests of the Government considered.

Does the gentleman interpret these two provisions to mean exactly the same?

Mr. STAFFORD. I take it that this is virtually the same. The language—except in cases of emergency, or where it is impracticable to secure competition—is the same as—except in cases where in the opinion of the Secretary of War it is to the manifest interest—

And so forth.

To me it seems that it has the same purport as the authorization in the existing law, the latter not being as broad as in existing law.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If it is the same as existing law, why does the gentleman want to change it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Just to call the attention of the Secretary of War to the fact that it is existing law.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. What is proposed to be purchased abroad under this provision?

Mr. STAFFORD. This provision has been carried in the bill for years. No point of order was ever raised against it. It seeks to establish the American policy that as far as articles to be used by the Army are concerned—steel, necessary rifles, and all of the various supplies and equipment—they shall be of American manufacture; that no funds in this appropriation shall be used unless they are of American manufacture.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further? I do not think the gentleman has answered my question. Just what articles are proposed to be purchased abroad under this provision as it is there now?

Mr. ANTHONY. My impression is that about the only articles they used to purchase abroad were lenses and optical instruments. The articles themselves are superior to those manufactured in America. Lenses are the principal thing I have in mind.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Well, if that is the purpose of the amendment, I can understand why it should be in the bill, because everyone who knows anything about optical instruments knows we can not get the high grades in this country that we can abroad.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I think nobody would contend, and in fact nobody does contend, that the first paragraph of this amendment down to the exception is not in order. That is a clear limitation within the rules. It simply provides that no part of the money appropriated shall be used for the purchase or acquirement of any article or articles unless they are of American manufacture. Now, if an amendment is in order which excludes all goods which are not of American manufacture, then it certainly follows as a logical, inescapable conclusion that an exception which removes a part of the goods from the exclusion is in order. That is all the second clause does, simply provides for a modification. The first clause excluded the whole; the second clause provides for an exception permitting the purchase of a part of the whole. It is clearly in order if it be true that the whole includes a part of the whole.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I agree with my colleague from New York so far as he says that the first part of the amendment is not subject to the point of order. There are ample precedents which state that when it is specified that a recipient of an appropriation shall have certain qualifications it is in order. That applies in the amendment up to and including the word "manufacture," which specifies that these manufactures must be of American origin. As this is a qualification, then I think up to this point the amendment is in order. But from there on it seems to me that the amendment is subject to the point of order, because it is legislation; it possesses new duties and gives additional powers to the Secretary of War. Our friend from Wisconsin says that it is "practically" the same proposition as existing law. If it is the same, why put it in? If it changes law, then it is legislation. If it attempts to interpret law, then it is legislation, and open to impeachment. I call the attention of the Chair to the ruling in Volume 4, Hinds' Precedents, paragraph 3936, "A provision proposing to construe existing law is in itself a proposition of legislation and therefore not in order on an appropriation bill as a limitation." Now, if this amendment interprets the law, it is legislation and out of order. If it is the law now, a repetition is not needed. If it does change the law, then it is a violation of our precedents, on the ground that it imposes new duties and grants additional discretionary powers upon an executive officer, both of which are repugnant to our practice. (Vol. 4 of Hinds', 3966. Ruling of Chairman CRISP, March 11, 1916.) I maintain that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HICKS. Yes, sir; with pleasure.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Has the gentleman any doubt—and here is the test, I think, that the point of order is well taken—that if we adopt this provision it would be construed by the court as repealing the existing law—the act of 1901?

Mr. HICKS. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Any court would so construe it?

Mr. HICKS. It seems to me so.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And if this be true, you can not avoid the conclusion that it is a legislative provision.

Mr. HICKS. I agree with the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment now offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin is almost word for word the one which the Chair had formulated in converting the amendment offered by the same gentleman on yesterday into the form of a limitation. It was to meet substantially this very amendment that the Chair made his ruling a few moments ago looking through the form to the substance, for it seems to the Chair that this amendment is the same in substance as the other. The adoption of this amendment will modify the discretion or authority of the Secretary of War as now provided by existing law. Therefore, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 92, after line 7, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"No part of the money appropriated in this act shall be used for the purchase or acquirement of any article or articles unless they are of American manufacture, except in cases of emergency or where it is impractical to secure competition."

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment changes existing law, that it is not a limitation on an appropriation bill, and that we have passed the section of the bill to which it is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Texas is in error as to the last statement.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The Clerk read down from line 13 to line 17.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that he read down to line 18 and that all these paragraphs went out beginning with line 8, so that there is nothing now in the bill between line 7 and line 18. Therefore that part of the gentleman's statement is based on a misapprehension of the facts. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The point of order is that it changes existing law, that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, and that it is not in fact a limitation because it does not meet the requirement in that regard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has embodied in his amendment a part of the statute.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If he does not embody all the statute, it changes the law. Now, I would like to address myself to the question. I would like for the Chair to read the amendment again.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has placed in his amendment this portion of the law, "except in cases of emergency or where it is impractical to secure competition."

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Now, if the Chair pleases, the same reason upon which the Chair based his decision a moment ago applies to this amendment.

The Chair can not make any distinction as to whether the law is changed substantially or not. The rulings are that even if you reenact a statute you have got to reenact it with all the "i's" dotted and the "t's" crossed, because if you do not it is a change of existing law.

Now if the Chair please, my understanding of a limitation of an appropriation is as follows: In the face of a point of order Congress can only appropriate in an appropriation bill for purposes already authorized by law. The Congress can appropriate for all purposes authorized by law or appropriate for none of the purposes authorized by law. Within those limits Congress can limit an appropriation. Congress can say that no part of an appropriation shall be expended for a part of the purposes which the law authorizes. But a limitation must be absolutely negative. It must be in the nature simply of a veto. It can not direct an executive officer in the discharge of his duties under existing law. Whenever it does, it ceases to be a limitation and becomes legislation, in violation of the rule.

Now what do we find? Under the present law the Secretary of War must buy goods wherever he can buy them the cheapest; they shall be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, the cost of transportation and the interests of the Government considered. Now, if the amendment offered by the gentlemen from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is adopted, instead of purchasing them anywhere that he desires, he is required to purchase them in the United States except in cases of emergency. The law requires, "Hereafter, except in cases of emergency, or where it is impracticable to secure competition, the purchase of all supplies for the use of the department shall be," and so forth.

The gentleman's amendment does not change existing law because at present, except in those cases, the Secretary of War may buy the goods anywhere. If this amendment is adopted, except in those cases, the Secretary will be limited to buying them in the United States, and to that extent this is not a limitation on the funds appropriated by this act, but it is a direction to the Secretary of War to purchase all goods in the United States except in cases of emergency. The present law is that he must purchase them where they are the cheapest, except in cases of emergency. This amendment substitutes for the language "where they are cheapest" the language "in the United States of America."

I am sure the Chair is acquainted with the rulings rendered heretofore, that where the language is changed in the slightest respect it is legislation. A great number of rulings have been had on this question. I shall refer to some in Hinds' Precedents. For instance, under section 3956, volume 4, the naval appropriation bill was before the House and an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD], and here is what the Chair ruled. An appeal was had from the ruling of the Chair, and here is what the Chair said in addressing the House, and his ruling was sustained. He quotes the rule showing that no legislation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill. He says:

> No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order unless in continuation of an appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress.
> It is upon this line for the past 15 years that it has always been held that the building of ships can be provided for upon an appropriation bill, because they were in continuation of a public work in progress. It is a continuation of the building up of the Navy; but immediately after in that section the rule goes on to say:
> "Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order on any general appropriation bill."
> To the Chair it seems perfectly clear that the provision in this section that the Secretary of the Navy shall build the ships at certain navy yards is a change of existing law, because it limits the power which existing laws give him.

Now, in that case they sought to provide that no money appropriated under that act should be expended on ships unless they were built at certain navy yards. The ruling was that the House could limit the appropriation, but could not do anything that restricted the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy which he then had under existing law. If this amendment is adopted, does even the gentleman from Wisconsin, or the Chair, or anybody else, contend that the Secretary of War shall have the same degree of duty as he has under existing statutes? Of course he will not. If he were to have, this amendment would not be offered. It directs him to do something he can not do under existing law.

Now, if the proposed amendment does not change existing law, it will continue to be existing law. He is required to buy wherever he can buy the cheapest. Then, the effect of the gentleman's amendment would be that unless he can buy cheaper in the American market he could not buy at all. That is the only extent to which the limitation could go, because the existing law requires him to buy wherever he can buy cheapest, and under this amendment, if it is a limitation—and it can not go further than this appropriation bill—if it is a limitation he would still be required to purchase where he could buy cheapest, but he would not have any money to pay for it in case he could not buy cheaper in America than abroad, except in those cases mentioned.

I submit, if the Chair pleases, that it does change existing law; although the amendment does quote part of the existing law, it does not quote the whole law, and the reenactment of part of a statute only clearly changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The first part of the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] contains the first part of the amendment heretofore ruled out. He then adds a clause from the existing law. It is the rule of this House, well settled by precedent, that where an appropriation bill simply recites existing law verbatim it does not make it subject to the point of order. The Chair will refer to Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, section 3814. The syllabus says:

> A paragraph in an appropriation bill reenacting verbatim an existing law is not subject to a point of order.

In making the ruling the Chairman, Mr. Powers, of Maine, said:

> If the Chair has made no mistake, it is a verbatim copy of the law as it now exists. That being the case, it has been held that while it is unnecessary and perhaps almost not good form, yet it is not strictly subject to a point of order. It is simply reenacting a portion of the United States statutes.

In this case, however, the insertion of a part of the statute and the omission of the rest of it might work serious consequences. It would at any rate very materially change the existing law, requiring the Secretary of War to conform to certain conditions imposed by the statute, but not to others imposed by other portions of the statute not here inserted. Therefore it seems to the Chair that this amendment also is repugnant to the rule, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. HILL: On page 92, at the end of line 7, insert a new paragraph as follows:
>
> "No part of the funds appropriated in this act for the supply, maintenance, and upkeep of athletic grounds and stands at the United States Military Academy shall be used for such purposes unless the authorities at the Military Academy charge an admission to the principal public athletic contests on such grounds in which the cadets take part, and the funds so received shall be used solely for the improvement of athletic facilities at the said academy."

Mr. HICKS. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, this section——

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for the regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for. Does the gentleman make his point of order?

Mr. HICKS. I feel that this is clearly subject to a point of order; it is legislation; it is the enactment of new law, and clearly obnoxious to our procedure; but, in view of the necessities of the case and the merits of the proposition, both of which are familiar to me as a member of the Naval Committee, and which I think should be enacted into law, I am going to withdraw the reservation.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When substantially the same amendment was offered before I raised the point of order. I have no objection to athletics at the Military and Naval Academies. In fact, I am heartily in favor of them. I feel that we would be justified in spending much more money in those activities. But my point is upon the proposition of what becomes of the vast sums of money that are obtained from the Army and Navy football games. I have not been able to secure any information whatsoever upon that point.

Mr. MILLER. Has the gentleman asked for any information.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I have asked for information. I directed an inquiry to the Secretary of War, but received no information from that source except a long letter. I have also carefully examined the testimony taken before the subcommittee on appropriations for the Army, and I find that General Slayden also gives no information upon the subject. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] endeavored to secure some information upon this subject but was unable to do so. I read from the hearings:

Mr. STAFFORD. While it is not part of the official record here, what is the status of the funds of the athletic association at West Point at this time? Don't they have large receipts from your athletic activities?

General SLADEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANTHONY. How much do they amount to—say, the Army and Navy football game at Philadelphia—how are the receipts divided?

General SLADEN. We get nothing from that.

Mr. ANTHONY. Who gets the money?

General SLADEN. Our seats are distributed to our members of the association; we do not sell them. We are given so many seats by the University of Pennsylvania to distribute. They sell their seats, of which they retain probably a fifth, and pay the expenses of the game.

Mr. ANTHONY. Are the big football games the source of any revenue?

General SLADEN. We got a good sum from the Yale game, at the Yale bowl. That is the only one.

And then the attempt at obtaining information was abandoned. The question was asked—

What are the funds received by the athletic association?

General Slayden answered:

They do not get any.

How are these funds used? Where do they go? Why should our cadets at West Point and our midshipmen at the Naval Academy participate in these great big games and thousands upon thousands of dollars be received from admission fees, and no benefit be received by the Military Academy or the Naval Academy?

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Army sold no tickets of admission to the great game at Philadelphia?

Mr. MACGREGOR. According to this they received no profit at all from it.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not concerned about the profit, but I understood the statement to be made that they did not sell any of their seats; that the athletic association did not sell any.

Mr. MACGREGOR. They claim they did not.

Mr. OLIVER. I know nothing of what becomes of the proceeds that go to the Army, but the information before the Naval Subcommittee was that such part of the proceeds arising from athletic contests as the Navy received will be used to build a fine athletic field at Annapolis.

Mr. BUTLER. The tickets were sold?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Why can we not get some statement about it?

Mr. OLIVER. The total receipts were estimated to be about $40 000 or more, which the Navy would receive this year from athletic contests to which admissions were charged, and I learn plans have been prepared for the erection of a splendid stadium at Annapolis.

Mr. MACGREGOR. That is the only point I want to raise, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STEPHENS. The gentleman from New York was inquiring on behalf of the Army, was he not?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. It is stated that the Army did not charge but the Navy did, and the money arising from the sale of the Navy tickets went for the purpose that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] has just stated.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I was inquiring upon the basis of the hearings had before the subcommittee on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. STEPHENS. The inquiry should have been made of the Navy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. As the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] has said, an athletic association is connected with each academy, and both the Army and Navy athletic associations charge an annual membership fee. Each member receives a certain number of tickets. There are no funds that come directly to the Army and Navy athletic associations as a result of the annual Army and Navy football games. Under the agreement entered into last year with the University of Pennsylvania authorities, when the contest was held on Franklin Field, and under the agreement that has just been entered into for the game next year on the Polo Grounds at New York, 80 per cent of the tickets for the available space are handed over, one-half to each of the academies for distribution, and the distribution is made by the respective athletic associations. These tickets are distributed to their members. As far as the Navy Athletic Association is concerned, they adopted the policy this year that they would charge a fee of $3.50 plus the war tax for every ticket furnished to persons outside of the Navy Athletic Association. I purchased a couple of those tickets. As far as the Army was concerned, when Members of Congress requested them, each received two tickets free, and members of the Military Affairs Committee of the House and the Senate received four gratis. Now what is proposed in this amendment is to allow the military authorities at West Point to charge an admission for public exhibition of athletics there. They are about to erect a permanent stand for which we are appropriating in this bill something like $20,000. At the suggestion of General Slayden, superintendent of the Military Academy, the subcommittee drafted in substance this provision authorizing him to make a charge for the athletic exhibitions held at West Point. He stated that at some of the games that they had with eastern and western football elevens a great number from the surrounding country rushed in and jammed the place and that they had no control over them whatever.

In Illinois the alumni of the State university are erecting a stadium costing $2,000,000. Nearly all large universities are erecting stadiums with a seating capacity of many thousands. We felt that as this is a great national game and will continue to be the national game for years that in contests with the western and eastern elevens playing at West Point the games will be attended by thousands and thousands of persons from New York and surrounding States it is only right, if we go to the expense of building stands, that they should charge an admission, which shall be utilized exclusively in building stands and maintaining the grounds.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If I understand the amendment, it would keep them from purchasing uniforms or paying other expenses. My experience is that there are big expenses for uniforms and other matters. As I understand the amendment, it makes it only available to go into the grounds.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; "the funds so received shall be used exclusively for athletics at the academy." But even if it did, in the contest between the Army and Yale at New Haven the athletic council received a large sum of money, which went into that fund, and this will be available for the expenses suggested by the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended three minutes. I wish to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. This fund will be used exclusively for building new stands and the improvement of the athletic grounds at West Point.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. I notice that this bill carries an appropriation of $20,640 for the upkeep of the athletic grounds and stand. Is it the purpose of the gentleman, by charging an admission, to make the athletic activities self-supporting?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is.

Mr. ROACH. Then why insist on carrying an appropriation of $20,640 in the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Because it is necessary at present to build the new stands, so as to have some seating capacity at the new athletic field when admission will be charged. In the future we will not be called on for an appropriation, because the funds arising from the contest will supply the fund.

Mr. ROACH. I think the self-supporting basis is all right, but I am not willing that they should charge an admission and then have Congress make large appropriations to maintain them.

Mr. STAFFORD. We will not make appropriations in the future.

Mr. ROACH. But this bill does carry an appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; because it is absolutely necessary to have the stands for the new field. That has been arranged for where the stadium is to be erected.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. When West Point goes to Yale or Harvard, they share in the profits.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. How about the return games; there the visiting team receives nothing unless they may have their expenses? Would it be possible for the visiting team to share in the profits of the West Point games? It seems to me that the amendment ought to be redrafted.

Mr. STAFFORD. This was intended to make a start, as was suggested by the authorities.

Mr. MILLER. Is this suggested by the authorities?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Except as expressly otherwise authorized herein, no part of the sums appropriated by this act for military purposes shall be expended in the purchase from private manufacturers of ordnance and ordnance supplies at a price in excess of 25 per cent more than the cost of manufacturing such material by the Government, or, where such material is not or has not been manufactured by the Government, at a price in excess of 25 per cent more than the estimated cost of manufacture by the Government.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 92, line 22, after the words "excess of," strike out "25 per cent more than," and in line 25, after the words "excess of," strike out "25 per cent more than."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the text read as it would be if the amendment were adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the text as proposed to be modified by the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Except as expressly otherwise authorized herein, no part of the sums appropriated by this act for military purposes shall be expended in the purchase from private manufacturers of ordnance and ordnance supplies at a price in excess of the cost of manufacturing such material by the Government, or, where such material is not or has not been manufactured by the Government, at a price in excess of the estimated cost of manufacture by the Government.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, some of my colleagues expressed the opinion yesterday that in the course of the debate on this portion of the bill I was a little excited. I want to say that I am always concerned and excited when there are provisions in an appropriation bill under consideration in this House apparently intended to promote the selfish interests of private business concerns engaged in the manufacture of munitions of war, a class which included among its members some of the profiteers who during the World War made large fortunes for themselves in the hour of their country's need—provisions which are contrary to the best interests of the taxpayers of the country and also the best interests of the national defense.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman has made a pretty strong statement when he says that a provision is carried in the bill in the interest of profiteers. What does he mean? The gentleman ought not to make such a statement without informing the House just what he means.

Mr. DALLINGER. I mean exactly what I have said, and without intending any reflection upon the Committee on Appropriations. Those Members of the House who are seeking to prevent the Government arsenals from doing Government work which they are perfectly capable of doing are saying in one breath that the Government arsenals are inefficient; that they are not up to date, that things can not be manufactured as cheaply in them as they can outside; and they then come in with a provision in this bill which permits the purchase from private manufacturers of ordnance and ordnance supplies at a price 25 per cent more than the cost of manufacturing them in Government establishments.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Does the gentleman know whether or not this provision has the approval of the Secretary of War?

Mr. DALLINGER. I do not know whose approval it has.

Mr. McSWAIN. Has the gentleman seen the article by the Secretary of War in the January number of the Nation's Business, advocating this same principle?

Mr. DALLINGER. No; I have not seen any such article and can not believe that the Secretary of War, who I feel sure has an economical administration of his department at heart, would favor such a proposition. It is perfectly evident, Mr. Chairman, that the Members of the House who are fighting to get this Government work for the private munition manufacturers are inconsistent. They say in one breath that the arsenals are not well run, that they can not compete on equal terms with private concerns, and in the next breath they advocate a provision which permits the War Department to pay 25 per cent more for articles than the same articles can be manufactured and produced in the Government arsenals, maintained by the taxpayers, in which the taxpayers of the country have invested hundreds of millions of dollars and the appropriations for the upkeep and operating expenses of which, amounting to millions of dollars, are being carried from year to year in the Army appropriation bill. There is absolutely no reason, as General Dawes, former Director of the Budget, repeatedly pointed out, why we should continue this policy of not utilizing our existing facilities. We ought to do one of two things, as I have repeatedly pointed out ever since I have been a Member of Congress. We ought either to sell these arsenals and navy yards, with their valuable real estate holdings, with their expensive equipment and machinery, adapted as they are for private manufacturing purposes, and turn the proceeds back into the Treasury of the United States, and relieve the American people of the great burden of taxation incident to their maintenance and operation, or we ought to run them efficiently and utilize the facilities which we have. [Applause.] I defy any man in this House to successfully contradict the soundness of this position. The encouragement of the business of the private manufacturer of munitions of war and of engines of destruction has in the past been the greatest cause of war among the nations of the world, and, as I said yesterday, the one thing in the covenant of the League of Nations in which everyone believes was the provision providing that the manufacture of munitions of war should be entirely in the hands of the governments of the world, and not in the hands of private interests, whose opportunity for profit depends upon the existence of war. I appeal to this House to adopt the amendment which I have offered, not only in the interest of the taxpayers of the United States, but also in the best interests of the national defense of this country and in the interest of the peace of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I am getting rather tired of sitting here as a member of the committee which has the responsibility of preparing and presenting an important appropriation bill and listening to gentlemen in the House who represent communities that have arsenals, where there are Government employees, coming into the Chamber and demagoging for the votes of those employees at the expense of the best interests and the best conduct of the Government. For two days here we have heard appeals of that kind. I assure this House that these provisions are placed in the bill solely in the interest of good business and are backed by common-sense reasons. I think that gentlemen who abuse the confidence that the House should place in them by coming here and through political motives seeking to discredit provisions of the bill are engaged in small business.

This provision authorizes a leeway of 25 per cent in the placing of business in Government arsenals and is a very necessary thing. It has been carried for years in the bill because it is manifest that there may be many instances when little orders come up for the manufacture of a few dollars' worth of supplies, where it would cost the Government ten times the amount to set the wheels of the arsenal in motion for the purpose of turning out a little job of that kind. The overhead costs themselves would eat up whatever economy was in it. This is put in the bill to allow some discretion and leeway to Government officials. I assure the House that 95 per cent of the appropriations in this bill for ordnance purposes will be expended for manufacture in Government arsenals, and there is no ground whatever for gentlemen who represent labor interests in these arsenal districts to come before the House and indulge in this cheap claptrap.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, it must be evident, if what the chairman in charge of the bill says is true, to wit, that it would frequently cost many times more to set the wheels of the arsenals going in order to manufacture a few dollars' worth of material than it would cost to buy the article in the open market, then in that event this provision is not necessary and the proposed amendment should be adopted, because upon that basis private business will always get the job in competition with Government plants without the necessity of the bonus or handicap provided in this paragraph. The Committee on Naval Affairs has been holding hearings for several weeks; and there have appeared before the committee representatives of manufacturing interests from all over the country—from Chicago, from New England, and from New York—and the burden of their contention has been over and over that the Government can not compete with private business in the manufacture of the things which they make.

Their general conclusion is that every time the Government turns a wheel it is doing it at an economic waste. They say that because of their superior business organizations, because they pay their laborers wages from 20 to 60 per cent less than the Government, because they demand of their labor a higher degree of efficiency, because they maintain a highly skilled purchasing corps which knows when to purchase, where to purchase, and how much to purchase, they say that they can outcompete the Government at any time on terms of equality. Now, if that is so, what is the occasion of coming in here to coddle big business with a 25 per cent bonus? [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS. In regard to this provision, if the gentleman will notice, it limits it to 25 per cent. If it were not for this limitation they might buy from private manufacturers even at 50 per cent more, but it limits the Government to a 25 per cent limitation.

Mr. SWING. If the gentleman will read it again, the amendment proposed by Mr. DALLINGER will prohibit the purchase from private manufacturers at a price in excess of what it can be produced for by the Government.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. Let me proceed a step further. Why 25 per cent? Who names 25 per cent? It is purely an arbitrary figure. Why not 35 per cent or 50 per cent, why anything, when it is emphasized that it is not necessary? [Applause.] If you put it in the Army bill here you have got to put it in the naval bill. Where are you going to draw the line? The only thing that has ever been said for this provision was that it was intended to cover so-called educational orders. But the fact is that it is not limited to educational orders.

Assuming 10 per cent of the War Department orders could be correctly termed educational, this section authorizes the War Department to put all of its orders in the hands of private individuals at a cost 25 per cent higher than what the Government could do it for itself. What business man would advocate that thing in his own affairs? Big business says, "Let us have more business in government." All right, let us apply a little business sense right here. [Applause.] This section as it stands is an invitation to big business to raise its bid 25 per cent, and the big trusts, who alone can compete with the Government, will many times be found the sole competitor against the Government's own plants; and yet we are to have a law here which invites them to bid 25 per cent above what the Government itself can do the work for. One does not have to have an arsenal in his district to oppose this proposal. If you are for the taxpayer, if you want to protect the United States Treasury, you will be opposed to opening wide the door to this unnecessary expenditure of public funds. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I am opposed, practically, to every word he said, and disagree with him. Also, I agree with practically everything the distinguished chairman said with regard to this matter, but I desire it understood, so far as I am concerned—since I am looked upon here as sometimes representing manufacturing interests—that the manufacturers do not want any 25 per cent over the Government arsenals. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. Strike it out then.

Mr. SNYDER. Therefore, I shall be glad to see the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts prevail, and I shall vote for it, and I believe I am doing it in the interest of the manufacturing interests of this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this subject. I had prepared something, but the adoption of the amendment renders its present delivery unnecessary, and I want to put it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I indorse with all my heart the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] to the effect that the clauses found on page 92, in lines 22 and 25, of H. R. 13793, providing annual appropriations for the War Department, be stricken out, so that all goods purchased for military purposes might be purchased even from private manufacturers at a cost not exceeding what it would cost the Government to manufacture these goods, if the Government has a plant capable of turning out such goods, or not in excess of what it is estimated it would cost the Government to manufacture such goods. It is hard to believe that we could find submitted to the Representatives of the American people a proposition that the War Department might be limited in awarding contracts to private manufacturers to a profit of 25 per cent, as is contained in the bill and as is sought to be stricken out by the amendment. Yet that is what we have seen, and the plain interpretation of the language in the bill of the committee is that if the War Department did not have its hands tied by a 25 per cent limit it might pay to private manufacturers 35 per cent or 45 per cent or 55 per cent profit on such goods as they should supply to the War Department. Therefore, the proposition in itself is outrageous, because 25 per cent is outrageous as a profit, and the implications of the provision that it is necessary to tie the hands of the War Department, so it will not pay profits in excess of 25 per cent, are also shocking. I agree whole-heartedly with the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from California [Mr. SWING] when he says that this proposition contained in the bill, which is sought to be stricken out by the amendment under consideration, is virtually a suggestion to bidders that they are expected and may properly add 23 per cent or 24 per cent to their own liberal estimates of the cost of production in making their bids to the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I think I know the source and origin of this scheme contained in the bill to pay a profit of 25 per cent to private manufacturers for war material. I think it is a distorted and illegitimate issue of the grand proposition contained in the inaugural address of President Harding when he tells us that "The ideal republic is where every man and woman is called under the flag for assignment to duty for whatever service, military or civic, the individual is best fitted; where we may call to universal service every plant, agency, or facility, all in the sublime sacrifice for country, and not one penny of war profit shall inure to the benefit of private individual, corporation, or combination, but all above the normal shall flow into the defense chest of the Nation. There is something inherently wrong, something out of accord with the ideals of representative democracy, when one portion of our citizenship turns its activities to private gain amid defensive war while another is fighting, sacrificing, or dying for national preservation." Again, in his special message to Congress December 8, 1922, President Harding reiterates the recommendation that a program for the drafting of all the resources, both man power and industrial, necessary to carry on any future war be now formulated and enacted into law, and ready to be put into motion the instant war shall be declared. The American Legion, the all-comprehensive and representative body of ex-service men and women, made up of Americans of every creed and section and race, at its convention in New Orleans in October, 1922, placed itself unanimously on record as favoring such legislation as the President has twice recommended.

Then, Mr. Chairman, in December, 1922, I introduced what is known as H. J. Res. 400, calling for the appointment of a commission to be made up of well-informed and experienced Government officials and private citizens to study the question that the President has twice brought to the attention of the Congress and the country, and backed by the unanimous consent of the American Legion, and also backed, as I believe, by the conscience of the unselfish and interested people of America, as evidenced by the scores of letters that I have received approving the plan outlined in H. J. Res. 400.

About the time this sentiment began to take possession of the American mind, realizing that it made for justice as between human blood and gold dollars, realizing that it would destroy the inequality now existing between the ruthless disregard for human life without adequate compensation, and the scrupulous and cautious safeguarding of every dollar the people put up to carry on the war and for interest paid to the people who advanced the money to fight a war—realizing all this, the War Department must have started to do something to appear to be a compliance with this sentiment. Consequently there began to appear in the papers statements that the War Department was formulating plans that would result in the drafting of industries and of wealth to be used in event of war, and the impression was sought to be made that such drafting would be upon some such basis of democratic equality and republican justice as was the selective service law which took men out to fight and to die for their country.

But it appears from an article published in the Nation's Business, the official organ of the United States Chamber of Commerce, for the month of January, 1923, and written by the Secretary of War, that these activities of the War Department, instead of being in compliance with the sentiment of the American Legion and the message of the President, in fact is a scheme to pay profits to private manufacturers not only in time of war but to keep them perpetually on the pay rolls of the Government, even through all the years of peace. I quote the exact language of the Secretary of War appearing in this article:

> It seems certain that we must overcome the false economy that bids us seek always the lowest price for the yearly flow of munitions needed in peace times by the Army and Navy; that we must accept in the name of national preparedness the greater cost of farming out these contracts to the producing industry of the Nation as "educational orders," that we may have skilled hands and perfected machines ready in sufficient number to begin, at least, our war manufacturing.

We are told in this article by the Secretary of War that Colonel Wainwright, with somebody to help him, is making comprehensive study of this subject and is reaching out over the country to gauge and measure the manufacturers and to appraise the war load each section is able to bear, and he tells us with great candor that they are preparing uniform fixed-price contracts to be used in future war orders. Mr. Chairman, what I should like to ask of the Secretary of War and of Colonel Wainwright is, Did they read or hear the two messages of President Harding hereby referred to? Have they read the resolution of Hon. ROYAL JOHNSON proposing a constitutional amendment to the effect that industries and all material resources shall be drafted in time of war just as men are drafted? Have they read H. J. Res. 400, which is mild and judicial in its proposals? Have they read the resolutions of the American Legion, adopted at New Orleans? Now, Mr. Chairman, I must assume that these learned and wise and able public officials have not ignored these public events, because they have not been done in a corner, nor have they been hidden under a bushel. Therefore, if they have not ignored them, and if they have knowledge of what the President has said and of what the American Legion approves and of pending legislation in this body, then why do they not come before the Judiciary Committee of this House of Representatives, to which H. J. Res. 400 has been referred, and tell us what their plans are, and tell us whether they favor what the President said, and tell us whether or not they favor what the American Legion stands for, and tell us whether or not they favor H. J. Res. 400? To whom do the Secretary of War and his assistant think that this Government belongs? Who do they think is the lawmaking power of this Nation? Do they propose to continue to feed profiteers from the Public Treasury in time of peace and to multiply their profits into countless millions in time of war? If these gentlemen think that the American people will stand for any such autocratic and unrepresentative systems, then these gentlemen have misread the election returns following November 7, 1922.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with patriotic and statesmanlike sentiments expressed yesterday on the floor of this House by the Hon. OTIS WINGO, of Arkansas. He told us that the real, lurking dangers to the permanency of our existing constitutional system are not the fulminations of the soap-box orators on the street corners, whose unworkable schemes are patent to even the simple-minded, but that the serious menace is the high-brow parlor criticism of representative institutions and of the Congress which represents the people. People generally, as reflected in their magazines and newspapers, heap all sorts of criticism upon both Houses of the Congress and fall down and worship the speeches and suggestions that come from the Cabinet officers and executive heads. Yet those of us who are here on the inside and know the real facts can show that but for the firm and resolute stand for economy and for just and equal laws for taxation by the Members of Congress that the machine would be overrun with expense and taxes would be piled upon the producers of wealth, while the vast hoarders of millions, who are the beneficiaries of the partial and favorite-serving system of Federal legislation, would go "scot free" of taxation. We know that the executive heads are always for the big appropriations. We know that the executive heads stood for striking off the excess-profit taxes and for reducing the surtaxes to the multimillionaire. We know that the executive heads seem to think that they have the right to fix up proposed legislation and bring it down and have the Congress go through the formality of enacting it into law without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t."

So, Mr. Chairman, I ask in conclusion, When is the Secretary of War and his assistant coming down to tell us what they think about H. J. 400? Do they think that the 25 per cent profit contained in this bill, as sought by this amendment of Mr. DALLINGER to be stricken out, is any sort of compliance with the messages of the President or the resolutions of the American Legion or with the dictates of human justice? Is this proposal in the bill in compliance with the views of the Secretary of War that we must buy supplies during peace times at a price greater than the cost of producing such supplies, and farm out contracts to favored firms and corporations, all under the sanctimonious name of "educational orders"? Does the Secretary of War think that men must give their lives and blood and time and be separated from their mothers and sisters and wives and children in times of war for a pitiful sum of $30 per month, when the millionaires and multimillionaires, who are usually above the military age—or manage to get some sort of exemption by jumping for a $1-a-year job at a Government desk—are to receive contracts for war supplies that are to be filled with enormous and countless profits to themselves?

Mr. Chairman, this is one of the first questions that is now before the American people, and it ought to be the issue in the next presidential campaign. We have now a war debt of about twenty-three thousand million dollars, a debt that will not be paid in the next 100 years, and may never be paid; but of one thing I am very sure, that all money that shall ever be paid upon it through all the scores of years during which the bondholders shall draw interest on these bonds and receive payments on the principal, the very 4,000,000 men who were in uniform and their children and their grandchildren and their great-grandchildren by the labor of their bodies and brains will produce the wealth with which these bonds and the interest on these bonds must be paid. Will the American people be duped and fed upon soft soap and put to sleep by beautiful phrases coming from the mouth of the President when the President's party, with two-thirds majority in Congress, has not moved one single inch to make law of the President's pious words? Will the American people be satisfied with nice sentiments in messages but with contracts let by the War Department that will mean 25 per cent profit to private concerns in times of peace? Will the American people let this noble sentiment be kept to the ear and broken upon the lips? Will the American people hold its Representatives responsible for enacting now, even now, a just law to be employed in a future war? Do the American people expect us to profit by the lessons of the war as to how it should be financed? The War College is carrying on extensive studies as to how future wars should be fought, and they are drawing their studies from the experiences of the last war.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the American people expect their Representatives in Congress to do something about this matter, and if this Congress will not do something they expect the next Congress to do something, and if the next Congress will not do something they expect that one or the other of the major parties shall put this proposition into the party platform. Then if it is put into the platform of the winning party the American people will expect performance. If then some future Secretary of War and his assistant and some future Congress shall dilly-dally with this fundamental question, affecting a primary proposition of justice and equality under republican institutions, it will be time for the people to ask why it is that their Government, which claims to be representative, is not truly representative of their convictions. So, Mr. Chairman, I favor this motion to strike out this 25 per cent profit, and I have taken this occasion offered by this motion to speak upon the general proposition and to expose to the Congress and to the country the outrageous and dangerous fallacy contained in the propaganda now being put out by the War Department.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER CORPS.

NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

For maintaining and improving national cemeteries, including fuel for superintendents, pay of laborers and other employees, purchase of tools and materials, and including care and maintenance of the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater and Chapel and grounds in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va., $350,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, this item carries the provision for the maintenance of the national cemeteries in France. It will provide for 9 officers and 150 civilian caretakers in the eight national cemeteries in France. The committee has made an investigation as to the condition of these cemeteries, and has been shown photographs, and it is convinced that they are being taken care of in a manner satisfactory to anybody who has the interest of our soldier dead at heart.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I for one feel that it is not sufficient to have submitted to us photographs. The American Government should have its agents there looking after our own dead and not delegating this power to any foreign government.

Mr. ANTHONY. I just stated that 9 officers and 150 civilians will take care of these cemeteries, and they will be maintained in a proper manner.

Mr. BUTLER. These are Americans?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. A bill now pending before the Committee on Foreign Affairs comprehensively deals with this whole subject. We would be glad to have the gentleman from West Virginia come before us and give us his digested opinion.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman from West Virginia must refer to certain isolated cases. The committee has never heard of any authentic complaints of any kind.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. If I have given expression to facts that will relieve my mind and the American people, I shall consider my purpose accomplished.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. We do own the land?

Mr. ANTHONY. It has been ceded to us by the French Government for that purpose.

Mr. RAMSEYER. It is under the War Department here?

Mr. ANTHONY. The eight national cemeteries are. I understand that there are still a number of outlying places where there are American dead, but it is the purpose to consolidate them all under these places.

Mr. DENISON. Can the gentleman tell how many American dead remain in cemeteries in France? I know we have removed a great many. I was wondering how many were left.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is stated somewhere in the record here. About 30,511.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. There are 65,000, according to my last information.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Disposition of remains of officers, soldiers, and civilian employees: For interment, cremation (only upon request from relatives of the deceased), or of preparation and transportation to their homes or to such national cemeteries as may be designated by proper authority, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, of the remains of officers, cadets, United States Military Academy, acting assistant surgeons, members of the Army Nurse Corps, and enlisted men in active service, and accepted applicants for enlistment; for interment or preparation and transportation to their homes of the remains of civilian employees of the Army in the employ of the War Department who die abroad, in Alaska, in the Canal Zone, or on Army transports, or who die while on duty in the field; interment of military prisoners who die at military posts; for the interment and shipment to their homes of remains of enlisted men who are discharged in hospitals in the United States and continue as inmates of said hospitals to the date of their death; for interment of prisoners of war and interned alien enemies who die at prison camps in the United States; for removal of remains from abandoned posts to permanent military posts or national cemeteries, including the remains of Federal soldiers, sailors, or marines interred in fields or abandoned private and city cemeteries; and in any case where the expenses of burial or shipment of the remains of officers or enlisted men of the Army who die on the active list are borne by individuals, where such expenses would have been lawful claims against the Government, reimbursement to such individuals may be made of the amount allowed by the Government for such services out of this sum, but no reimbursement shall be made of such expenses incurred prior to July 1, 1910; expenses of the segregation of bodies in permanent American cemeteries in Great Britain and France, $150,000: Provided, That the above provisions shall be applicable in the cases of officers and enlisted men on the retired list of the Army who have died or may hereafter die while on active duty by proper assignment.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. If I may have the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee for just a moment, I should like to inquire whether or not this appropriation or any other appropriation in this bill makes any provision for bringing back any of the soldiers that are still left in France? A number of my constituents have appealed to me to assist them to get the bodies of their sons returned for burial in this country, but the War Department informs me that the time has passed in which these bodies may be returned.

Mr. ANTHONY. This bill makes no provision for the return of bodies of soldiers from France, except where the identification heretofore has been unknown. In these cases they bring the bodies back.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. And it is now too late to request the return of these bodies?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. The time for requests is past, but when an unknown body has been identified they then permit the return of that body.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DOCK, JUNEAU, ALASKA.

For cost of survey and the preparation of plans and estimates for a Government dock at Juneau, Alaska, $1,000.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I think before we reach the next item it would be well to have an agreement as to the time to be devoted to the next item in the bill, which relates to rivers and harbors. I think it would be well to agree upon time for debate. Has the gentleman any suggestion to make?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that it is the desire to complete the bill, if possible, this afternoon. At the same time we desire to allow reasonable debate on such an important item as this. What does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. SISSON. Whatever time may be agreed upon, I would like it to be agreed that at the close of the time the previous question shall be ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest that the debate on the river and harbor provision under the five-minute rule be limited to two hours, one hour for and one hour against; at the conclusion of that time that the previous question be ordered; the debate to be controlled one-half by the proponents of the item in the bill and one-half by those opposed.

Mr. SISSON. I have no objection to two hours, an hour on a side.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, last year the time was divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the amendment to increase the appropriation. I expect to offer the amendment; and if the gentleman from Kansas should have control of one-third of the time, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] one-third, and I one-third, I think that would be equitable.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think we had better adhere to the half-and-half rule.

Mr. DEMPSEY. With the understanding that the time shall be allotted half and half, I would allot my time, I will say frankly, all of it, for, and I suppose you two gentlemen would give half of your time to each side.

Mr. ANTHONY. I prefer to have one-half the time controlled by the proponents of the bill and the other half by those opposed.

Mr. DEMPSEY. What do you think of the proposition that, inasmuch as I am going to offer the amendment, I should have half of the time?

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] have control of half the time and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], or some one else on that side, half the time on the other side.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman from Mississippi is against the amendment. That would not be a fair division.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I want to reserve an objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned, I desire to yield to gentlemen on this side as nearly equally and fairly as I can. If my friend from Missouri [Mr. NEWTON] wants a little time, I will give it to him.

Mr. CHALMERS. I would like some time, and I want to be assured of that before the request passes beyond my control.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to me that the time for the amendment ought all to be allotted on the other side, because there is a very considerable support for the amendment on this side; and because of that a year ago we divided the time into three parts. There was complaint a year ago that the time on the other side was all given to those who supported the amendment. I remember that very distinctly; I am not seeking any undue advantage of that kind, and I am willing to agree squarely that the time shall be evenly divided in support of and against the amendment; but at the same time it does seem to me that the time on this side should be distributed from this side.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is perfectly evident that if half the time is held on this side and half on the other side we will certainly give you half the time.

Mr. MONDELL. If gentlemen will allow me, I am sure everyone ought to be satisfied, and will be satisfied, to have the time allotted equally between those for and those against the amendment.

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is right. We are willing to do that.

Mr. MONDELL. That was not the case a year ago.

Mr. SISSON. We had a three-cornered fight last year. As far as I am concerned, I will take the 60 minutes given this side and alternate the speakers for and against the amendment, irrespective of whether they are Democrats or Republicans.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman know anyone on the Democratic side who has asked for time to speak in favor of the committee recommendation?

Mr. SISSON. I do not.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the point. We have any number of requests on this side to occupy time in favor of the committee recommendation. The hour on the other side should be distributed equitably among those in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] and those opposed to it.

Mr. SISSON. If gentlemen on that side of the aisle who are opposed to the amendment can not get time, I am willing to give them 30 minutes of the time on this side, provided those for the amendment have an equal amount of time. In other words, I want a 50-50 division.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I have some information that ought to be given to this House before we vote on this provision. Am I to be shut out because I am not desirous of speaking directly on this amendment? What I have to say pertains to the appropriation for rivers and harbors.

Mr. MONDELL. Does it pertain to the increase?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes; it is an increase.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on these paragraphs in the bill relating to rivers and harbors be limited to two hours and a half, one half of that time to be controlled on this side by the committee and that the other half be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], and that the time be equally divided between those for and those against the provisions of the bill.

Mr. DUPRÉ. By those in control of either side.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I move as a substitute for the gentleman's proposition——

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state the request. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraphs concerning rivers and harbors be limited to two hours and a half, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] and one-half by himself, the time in both cases to be equally divided between those for and those against the measure.

Mr. CHALMERS. Reserving the right to object, I would like to be assured that I may have 10 minutes of that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. ROACH. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas whether or not the Chair is to take care of the division of time between those for and those against the amendment?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] would have to give a large part of his time to those on this side.

Mr. ROACH. I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] that he make his request for three hours, because this is an important subject. It involves $56,000,000. Yesterday we gave an hour and a half to a little item of $15,000. A subject of such national importance as this should be given a longer time for debate than the gentleman suggests.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY]?

Mr. ROACH. Reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman from Kansas is willing to consent to a modification of his request.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas modify his request?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will be glad to modify my request to three hours, providing all debate on the paragraph and amendments be closed at the end of three hours.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that include both paragraphs relating to rivers and harbors?

Mr. ANTHONY. There are two items.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two items. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that all debate on the two paragraphs referring to rivers and harbors be limited to three hours, that time to be controlled one-half by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], and that the time be equally divided on both sides between the proponents and opponents of the measure. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. STAFFORD. I only wish to inquire whether the gentleman who will control the time of the other side will yield one-half of his time to those on this side in favor of the committee proposal?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will give me his ears for just a moment, this does not necessarily contemplate that gentlemen on either side shall divide their time equally between those for and against the amendment, but that the entire time is to be so divided. Now, it is the duty of the Chair under the unanimous-consent agreement to see that such a division is made for and against the committee positions.

The CHAIRMAN. How can the Chair tell in advance?

Mr. MONDELL. The Chair can keep the time reasonably balanced.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It seems to gentlemen on this side who will favor the amendment that they ought to get their time from their own side, and I do not think the language of the proposal of the gentleman from Kansas contemplates anything except that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] shall each of them divide the time equally between the two sides of the proposition. I think that meets the demands on this side more equitably and more in accordance with the wishes of the House than interpreting it the other way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair as a Member of the House objects to the interpretation of the request as made by the gentleman from Wyoming, and will not agree to that proposition.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a year ago those who were opposed to the position of the committee used more than two-thirds of the time in debate. We shall not have that occur again. Those who are standing by the committee are perfectly willing to have a division of the time between the two sides in any way that will afford fair debate, and we will not agree to anything else. If the gentleman from Mississippi will agree that he will give half of his time to those who are unquestionably openly and frankly for the position of the committee, that will settle the matter.

Mr. SISSON. So far as I am able to do so I will give every man, whether Democrat or Republican, time.

Mr. MONDELL. That will be sure to give those who are in favor of the position of the committee half the time. Last year gentlemen on the other side secured time ostensibly to take the side of the committee, and then assumed a position which was really against the position of the committee.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know what the gentleman intends to insinuate by that remark. Last year I gave time to gentlemen who asked for time, and I made inquiry as well as I could in regard to their position.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in view of the embarrassment of the gentleman from Mississippi I think the simplest way would be to have him control all the time in opposition to the committee, and the gentleman from Kansas control all the time in favor of the committee.

Mr. SISSON. I am under no embarrassment. Last year we had a division of the time into three parts. Now, you can not compel a man to come and get time——

Mr. GARNER. May I make a suggestion? If I understand it, the reason the Republican side would have to get it from their chairman is apparent. Suppose the gentleman from Mississippi controls the time in favor of the amendment and the gentleman from Kansas against it, and then the gentleman from Mississippi yields one-half of his time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY]. In that way you will control the time for the amendment, and let the gentleman from Kansas yield the time to those opposed to it.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman from Texas will allow me, the first part of his proposition is all right.

Mr. SISSON. I do not believe there is any partisanship in the river and harbor bill. I do not think anyone should try to get any partisan advantage from it. I say frankly that if I control the time I would be delighted to yield one-half of the time to gentlemen who are opposing the position of the committee. Or I have no objection to the gentleman from Kansas controlling all time of those in favor of it and I controlling time of those opposed to it.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, and the regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. LAYTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Delaware rise?

Mr. LAYTON. I rise to make a motion that we proceed in Committee of the Whole to the reading of the bill, and immediately take a vote at the conclusion of the reading.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no occasion for such a motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, my request is that the debate on the river and harbor proposition be limited to three hours, and at the conclusion of the three hours a vote shall be taken on the paragraphs and all amendments thereto; that debate shall be controlled one-half by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Mississippi, the time for debate to be equally divided between those for and those against the provisions of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the time for debate on the river and harbor provisions of the bill be limited to three hours; that one-half of the time shall be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Mississippi; and that all debate be divided between those opposed to and those in favor of the propositions in the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. LAYTON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

To be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, of course, five minutes is entirely inadequate to present the position of the committee in support of its recommendation of $37,000,000 for river and harbor work during the ensuing fiscal year. It is an unfair arrangement and one that takes advantage of the committee in view of the fact that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had 26 minutes of time to discuss it in general debate, with no time available to present these facts to the committee, and yet we find a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors objecting to three hours of general debate.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Wisconsin is not discussing his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin will proceed in order.

Mr. STAFFORD. If gentlemen are going to insist on the technical rules of the House, taking advantage of the Committee on Appropriations that brings in an appropriation of $37,000,000——

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin must proceed in order or not at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I know the rules of the House, and I know that what I am saying is not strictly in order. I am only appealing to the fairness of the committee. If under the strict interpretation of the rules the gentleman insists that I shall be confined in my remarks to the one word "engineers," I shall have to yield the floor. I shall proceed. On November 1, 1922, the last date when any data was available, there was unobligated and available for expenditure the sum of——

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Thirty-three million nine hundred and nineteen thousand seven hundred and ten dollars——

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to hold that the gentleman from Wisconsin is not complying with the rule. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, which is "engineers." Certain engineers, so we are informed——

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. There is a motion already pending to strike out the word "engineers," and the gentleman can rise only in opposition to that motion.

Mr. MONDELL. I rise to support the amendment.

Mr. LONDON. But that is not in order. I urge my point of order. The gentleman can speak only in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wyoming in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. ROACH. He stated that he rose in support of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is often done.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentlemen who are opposing the position of the committee have no further arguments and will not allow the matter to be discussed, we may as well vote upon it now. [Cries of "Vote!"] Mr. Chairman, I am discussing the question of striking out the word "engineers." Certain engineers, I am told, have attempted to persuade certain gentlemen interested in river and harbor improvements that appropriations for river and harbor improvements should be nearly double those fixed by the Budget and approved by the President of the United States. We adopted the Budget upon the theory that the Budget officers would know more than any engineers interested in any particular line of activity as to the amount of the Nation's income that could properly be expended in any one year for any one particular activity, and if I were to advise these engineers, by striking out the word or retaining it, my advice would be to remind them of what has been the fate of just such advice and action in the past touching this class of improvements.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Efforts have been made repeatedly by engineers——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I have only a very brief time—by engineers and others in the past whereby appropriations for this purpose were unwisely and unduly increased, compared with the other expenditures of the Government, and in every case where that has been done eventually the tide of public opinion has turned against these engineers and these people, and the time came when it was difficult for a period of years following such great increases to get even a fair appropriation for rivers and harbors.

I suggest to the gentlemen who are standing behind these engineers in their demands that they are not doing the work of river and harbor improvements a service in demanding that a greater sum should be used for this purpose than is justified in view of the total income of the Nation and its activities in other lines, and if the President of the United States, who approved these estimates, has that high regard for his responsibility in connection with them, which I believe he has, he would not only be justified in so doing but he would be, it seems to me, under an obligation to disapprove any amendment that might be adopted increasing by tens of millions of dollars the estimates made under this supervision and approved by him for this class of work. No argument has been made, and none will be in defense of this increase, except that gentlemen want river and harbor work carried forward more rapidly and enough money appropriated that a portion of it, at least, would be used for projects which otherwise might not be undertaken. From such a viewpoint an argument might be made to increase almost any appropriation we have made. Reclamation, roads, and agriculture might well have been the subject of such a plea, and with greater reason for this Government secures participation in or a full return of such expenditures. Many who have given the subject much study believe the national defense demands much more than it has received, but in all these we have adhered to or reduced the Budget estimates.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Whether in the consideration of a bill the clerk of any committee is entitled to the floor other than the clerk of the committee reporting the bill under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not the rule before him, but the recollection of the Chair is that the clerk to the committee in charge of the bill is entitled to the privilege of the floor.

Mr. STAFFORD. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the clerk to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is on the floor without the right under the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will read the rule, which is Rule XXXIII. After naming the persons entitled to the floor, the following clause with respect to clerks of committees is found:

and clerks of committees, when business from their committee is under consideration; and it shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a request for the suspension of this rule, or to prevent from the chair the request of any Member for unanimous consent.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: Page 103, line 4, strike out the words "chief of engineers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "President of the United States."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, it can not be denied that the President of the United States is the Chief Executive officer of the Government. It can not be denied that the Chief of Engineers is a subordinate of the President of the United States. The Chief of Engineers and his staff have utterly ignored the recommendations of the President of the United States.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Oh, I think the gentleman is not correct in that statement.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MADDEN. It is too late to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is rather late to make the point of order, after the gentleman from Illinois has been discussing his amendment. The point of order comes too late.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I want to make my statement, and then I shall be glad to be interrupted a little later.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I do not think the engineers have demanded anything.

Mr. MADDEN. I think we have information on that subject, and I do not yield until I have made my statement. The President of the United States recommended an appropriation of $27,000,000 for the continuation of river and harbor projects for the year 1924.

The engineers under the Chief of Engineers of the Army came before our committee and advocated a much larger sum in violation of the law which prohibits any officer of the Government making any recommendation for a sum greater than that submitted by the President of the United States under the act.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I do not just now. The President of the United States says that $27,000,000 is all that he needs. General Taylor, representing the Chief of Engineers, advocated an appropriation of about $56,000,000. When he did that he violated the law. We gave him every opportunity, however, to present the case, and we believed that he had made a case to some extent and we recommended $10,000,000 more than that suggested by the President, and the President said $27,000,000. We did not agree exactly to that, but we came to you and asked $37,000,000 and we believe that $37,000,000 is all that should be appropriated.

Mr. ROACH. Is it a violation of the law for a department head to present the facts to a committee?

Mr. MADDEN. No, sir; but it is a violation of the law for an officer to come and advocate something that the law does not permit him to advocate.

Mr. ROACH. In what way did General Taylor violate the law?

Mr. MADDEN. I am not being interrogated just now; I am making a statement of the case. So we come to you with a recommendation that we believe to be adequate, and we are going to ask you to sustain us. We believe the country will sustain us. We believe if we vote $29,000,000 more than the President requested we will be flying in the face of public opinion. And so I offer the amendment to place the responsibility on the President of the United States to administer this appropriation. He is the man who under the law is responsible for the administration, and he will be able to direct with this provision in the law that no subordinate of his need violate the provisions of the act.

Mr. WURZBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not yield. I believe the country will resent the addition of $29,000,000 to the recommendation made by the President. I believe, moreover, that there is no need for it. The proposal which is soon to come, to add $19,000,000 to the committee's recommendation, means an addition of $13,000,000 for new projects not yet begun. It means the waste of money on creeks on which no commerce ever has been or ever will be carried.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to speak for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I object unless I have an opportunity to oppose the amendment.

Mr. LAYTON. I object.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the chairman of the subcommittee, who has charge of this and who is against this proposed amendment, offered a fair proposition whereby those who are in favor of the amendment could be heard, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. [Applause.] If there is one thing in this world that appeals to the average man, it is a square deal; and we are not getting it in this fight. You have heard speeches against this proposed amendment from four of its opponents, and we have not had an opportunity to be heard. I have been trying to get time, and I have not been able to get it because the opposition controls the time. I have listened to what my friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] said about the Budget and its recommendation for rivers and harbors. I know something about that question. I believe in a Budget if it is properly administered; but I know that the Director of the Budget and his bureau did not make any investigation of the needs of rivers and harbors, and I know that they know nothing of the river and harbor problem. I know that a year ago the Bureau of the Budget agreed to recommend $13,500,000 for all the rivers and all the harbors in the whole United States, and that they did that without any investigation. [Applause.] I know that the Director of the Budget never consulted the engineers regarding his recommendation, and he never asked their opinion on a single project.

Here is the situation before this House: Our engineers, who are trained men, who know the river and harbor problem, have reported to this House under their duties as the law prescribes that the amount that they can expend profitably is $56,589,910. You have the report of the engineers to that effect. You have the recommendation of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and some members of that committee have studied the river and harbor problem for many years and have gone over every project in this country——

Mr. WURZBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WURZBACH. Is it not a fact that the Rivers and Harbors Committee are unanimously in favor of this amount?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. I was going to say that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors are unanimously in favor of the sum of $56,000,000. Now, what is the situation? You have a River and Harbor Committee that is in favor of this amendment and believes it is necessary, after a full investigation. You have the engineers, skilled in that problem, who believe, after full investigation, that that amount should be appropriated. Against that the only man who has investigated this subject is the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], and he has devoted only three days to studying these problems.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. In order to correct a statement. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations advises the House that General Taylor had violated the Budget law by appearing before the Committee on Appropriations. I have a copy of the Budget law here and an officer of the department at the request of Congress has the right to appear before the committee and give the facts, and that is all General Taylor did.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. That is exactly correct, and I hope that the time has not arrived in this country when any officer of the Government is barred from appearing before any committee in Congress to tell the truth about any governmental activity.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the gentleman will permit, does not the statute require that the Chief of Engineers shall submit annually an estimate of what can be profitably expended in the ensuing fiscal year, and in giving his testimony was not he performing his sworn duty in acting under that statute?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Absolutely; and in compliance with that statute the engineers have in good faith made their report, and we who have gone through the projects and know that the amount which they have reported is necessary.

The floor leader, Mr. MONDELL, who has always opposed reasonable river and harbor improvements, has been sounding his warnings. Let me give the leaders of the House this warning: If the Bureau of the Budget continues to bring in recommendations without intelligent consideration and without dealing fairly with the Government's important activities, it will be only a short time until you overthrow the whole Budget system. [Applause.] If you want to shut us off without debate, then let us "go to the mob." We are ready now to vote, and let the Members of this House say whether they want to improve the rivers and harbors of the country, and thereby afford facilities for adequate and cheap transportation. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. CHALMERS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. CHALMERS. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word of the amendment. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I shall vote for the Dempsey amendment, sustaining the recommendation of the engineers. But I want to say to the House that that is not sufficient to care for the rivers and harbors of this country.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Maryland for that purpose?

Mr. CHALMERS. I would rather not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am not asking the gentleman to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not take a Member off the floor by a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CHALMERS. Only eight other ports in the entire country has done more business in the last year, according to the engineers' report than Toledo. I shall name the other harbors for you—New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, Galveston, Duluth, Superior, and Buffalo. All the other ports in the United States had a less tonnage than Toledo; and yet out of an appropriation of over $56,000,000, Toledo gets only $50,000.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. How about Milwaukee?

Mr. CHALMERS. Milwaukee does only half the business that Toledo does, and Milwaukee gets over $625,000.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And $3,000,000 for the Great Lakes?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes; only $3,000,000 for the Great Lakes. I want to say to the Members of the House that the harbors on the south shore of Lake Erie, from Toledo to Buffalo, did more business in 1914 than all the harbors of France, Germany, and Italy combined in the year before the beginning of the World War. And yet we have a measly $3,000,000 for the Great Lakes out of $56,000,000. They have allowed that great Toledo channel for 16 miles, that channel which you gentlemen adopted in the year 1899, to fill up until boats are stranded there.

Those lake freighters that go out laden with coal to keep you people of the Northwest from freezing are stranded on the sand bars. Only $50,000 is recommended for Toledo. We can not get money enough to take care of the great business we are doing. Over 7,000,000 tons of coal were loaded in the Toledo Harbor during the season of 1922.

I am in favor of this amendment, but I want more. We want the harbor, which ranks ninth in the amount of business done in this country, to be better taken care of.

I have a letter here from General Taylor, who says that it will take $500,000 to restore the great channel of Toledo Harbor to the requirements of the project that you adopted in 1899, 24 years ago—nearly a quarter of a century ago. I have the promise of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and our committee that they will take care of our harbor; and with that understanding, I will in good faith support this amendment. [Applause and cries of "Vote."]

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINDRED. I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. Am I recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, for the reasons already very ably stated by my colleagues on the committee, and for the additional reason that the harbor of New York handles approximately 80 per cent of our export and import tonnage, and because of the conditions that exist with respect to this harbor and the city of New York, I rise to speak against the pro forma amendment. In order to show the absolute necessity of increasing the appropriation over and above the amount recommended by the unscientific and unjustifiable Budget Committee, I wish to note the fact that in the harbor of New York to-day there is ready to be expended, by a vote of the board of estimates of the city of New York, over $100,000,000. If this proposed amendment to increase the appropriations for rivers and harbors shall receive your favorable consideration, the city of New York will be able to expend $100,000,000 of its own money in connection with the development of this great harbor. [Applause.] One hundred millions of dollars has been appropriated by our local authorities to systematically develop our city's docks and terminals, as stated; but if we do not get this increase provided for in the pending amendment, the great harbor of New York will remain undeveloped and the country will regret it. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, was the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming made a pro forma amendment. The only real one was offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, all pro forma amendments will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interests of commerce and navigation, $37,000,000.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEMPSEY: Page 103, line 8, after the word "navigation," strike out "$37,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$56,589,910."

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] has the right to five minutes on his amendment and is recognized.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] in speaking to his pro forma amendment said that if we recognized the recommendations of the engineers we would be spending $13,000,000 upon new projects. We had before the House in September the question of adopting new projects. The new projects were of such value to the commerce of this country, they tended so strongly to modernize navigation in the United States, they so greatly helped the transportation of oil, ore, and lumber, they so greatly helped transportation generally throughout the United States that there was little opposition to the adoption of the new projects. They passed substantially unanimously. Yet the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] says that, only three or four months later, when the ink is scarcely dry upon that new statute, when the House recognized with substantial unanimity the necessity of these new projects, we should forget all that we learned at that time, that we should not remember the lesson learned here only in September, that we should without cause in this short interval forget all that we learned at that time. Now, gentlemen, the sum of $229,000,000 is necessary to complete all the projects in the United States. We propose to appropriate at this time only $43,000,000. Are the transportation needs of the country fully supplied? Is it unnecessary for us to increase the water transportation of the country? Is fuel reaching its destination? Are not the manufacturers of the country slowing down their wheels to-day because they can not get coal? Are householders able to protect infancy and old age by having their houses properly warmed? Is there not a dearth of coal because of the inability to transport it to the consumer? Should we not relieve the railroads? They are unable to carry the traffic of the country. It doubles every 10 years. They are not increasing their facilities at all.

On the Great Lakes we are carrying the enormous total of 100,000,000 to 120,000,000 tons of traffic. On the trunk system composed of the Mississippi and the Ohio in 1921, a poor year, we carried 31,000,000 tons of traffic. The Ohio leads nowhere because it is not completed. Only a third of the channel is open; and yet, leading nowhere, with only a third of its length open, it carried 8,000,000 tons. I say to you that when that great trunk system is completed—and it will cost only a fraction of the amount heretofore expended to complete it—when the trunk system composed of the Ohio and Mississippi and their tributaries is completed, that trunk system will outdo the Great Lakes. It will carry more than 100,000,000 tons. On what do I base that? I look at only one tributary of the Ohio, and I see that the Monongahela River, only 125 miles long, carried in 1921, a poor year, the enormous total of 20,000,000 tons, and in a good year it carries 25,000,000 tons. If that river alone, one of six or seven tributaries of the Ohio, can furnish and carry 25,000,000 tons of traffic, what will all those improved channels in the Mississippi and Ohio and their tributaries, making a system of over 7,000 miles of connected waterways in the heart of the country, do to furnish transportation for that great area, the existing facilities of which are extremely inadequate. So with a very moderate, a very small expenditure, an expenditure infinitesimally small in comparison with what we have already expended, when we are losing the benefit of all that we have expended until we complete the improvement, I say that when we have completed these projects we will relieve the transportation system of the country by transferring from rail to water the enormous total of 100,000,000 to 150,000,000 tons. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wyoming in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if I believed as the eloquent gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], who has just taken his seat, has suggested that this appropriation would relieve infancy and old age, would correct all of the transportation and other ills from which the country is suffering, I should be for it, and I should want to double it and treble it and quadruple it. In the face of all those possible benefits, why halt and hesitate at a paltry $56,000,000? Make it ten times the sum and be prosperous and happy and contented ever after.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I have only five minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The engineers say the amount I have suggested in my amendment is all that can profitably be expended next year. That is the answer to the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. MONDELL. No man under heaven knows or has the right to say as a finality how much may be profitably expended on rivers and harbors in one year. That is a matter of opinion. Some would say that not half that sum could be profitably expended.

Mr. MANSFIELD. How about the Budget?

Mr. MONDELL. But this we do know, that we have adopted a Budget policy under which we have sought to allocate the public revenues among the public activities and for the purpose of meeting the public requirements.

Mr. WURZBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I can not. I have only five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MONDELL. To this particular activity has been allocated $27,000,000, approved by the President of the United States. In making up all of its appropriation bills the Appropriations Committee have been able to save within the Budget estimate something like $12,000,000 or $13,000,000, as I understand it, and out of a spirit of generosity, with the view of meeting what seems to be an insistent demand upon Members of the House, the committee has agreed to increase this item $10,000,000, almost the entire amount by which the Budget estimates have been reduced. And still gentlemen are not satisfied.

I do not pretend to say that you might not expend $56,000,000 on the rivers and harbors of the country in a year. I do not pretend to say you could not spend much more than we are spending on a score of public activities. I know we could spend $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 or more of public money with very great advantage to the public in the next year in the building of much needed public buildings in many of the cities and towns of the country. [Applause.] We are refusing additional moneys for those purposes. I know that there are many activities in which the Government is engaged in which we might very profitably expend more money than we are proposing to expend. But we tried to cut the garment according to the cloth. The increase made by the committee for river and harbor improvements is much more generous than for any other class of expenditures under the flag. I have been here 26 years, and I want to issue one word of warning to gentlemen who sit here to-day and think that they are aiding the development of the rivers and harbors of the country by proposing to double the estimate made in the Budget. During my service here I have witnessed at least twice the same performance of increasing river and harbor appropriations through a combination of Members under some sort of a promise of local expenditure beyond what the judgment of the country considered fair and justified followed by reaction under which it became almost impossible to secure even reasonable appropriations to carry on river and harbor improvement for years. Time was when it became a matter of criticism and reproach to vote for a river and harbor bill. It became necessary to put at the head of the committee having charge of these matters a man who had the confidence of all the country, under whose leadership, cutting out much of the class of expenditure now proposed, these appropriations were gradually restored to public confidence. The people of America are not prepared to spend $56,000,000 added to the $10,000,000 now available for rivers and harbors next year. The country will not approve any such expenditure per annum largely for questionable projects. As they are not prepared to do that, you who represent these river and harbor districts are working for the best interest of your districts when you vote for an increase of this item above what public opinion will justify. You may have the votes now, but the reaction against such ruthless violation of the Budget policy for questionable expenditure is certain to come, and to an extent which will make it difficult to secure even reasonable appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. DENISON. I rise to make a motion that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 175, noes 15.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 152, noes 44.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FESS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) to grant authority to continue the use of the temporary buildings of the American Red Cross headquarters in the city of Washington, D. C.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4288. An act to grant the consent of Congress for the special commission constituted by an act of the Legislature of Massachusetts to construct a bridge across the Merrimack River.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For examinations, surveys, and contingencies for rivers and harbors for which there may be no special appropriation, $456,850: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended for any preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate not authorized by law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 11, the figures "$456,850" and insert in lieu thereof "$450,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin submits an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 103, line 11, strike out the figures "$456,850" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$450,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do this to call attention to the fact that never before in the history of Congress has there ever been appropriated such a large sum for examinations and surveys. The nearest largest sum appropriated was in 1921, when the appropriation was $400,000. The reason largely for this increase to $456,850 has been occasioned by the survey that was provided for informally last year for the canal between Lake Erie and the Ohio River. There were three routes proposed, and the testimony is that it will require the major portion of the appropriation for that purpose. Then, again, an additional amount was occasioned by the numerous surveys authorized in the river and harbor authorization act of September 12.

I wish to impress on the committee that in no particular has the committee attempted to curtail the recommendations for work of river and harbor development. November 1, 1922, there was unobligated for river and harbor work $33,319,679. On December 1, 1921, there was unobligated $18,550,000. There was unexpended November 1 of this past year $49,112,308. On December 1, 1921, there was unexpended $28,324,247. From December, 1921, until June last there was only expended $11,247,000. Allowing $2,000,000 for expenditure in November of this past year, it would make a total of $13,000,000. So there will be unexpended June 30 of this year, with $49,000,000 unexpended on November 1 last, after deducting $13,000,000, the amount expended last year, $36,112,000, which, added to the authorization of $37,000,000, as proposed by the committee, will make the enormous total of $73,112,000. That does not include the amount that was authorized for the appropriation for rivers and harbor work on the Mississippi River under the Mississippi River Commission or the Sacramento or the Muscle Shoals. Those and other unexpended appropriations aggregate $24,000,000, which, added to the $63,000,000 which under the recommendation of the committee of $37,000,000, would make available $87,000,000 on July 1 next, the largest sum in the history of the Government for expenditure at any one time for river and harbor development. And yet this committee just now has gone wild and ruthlessly added $19,590,000 more without anything to back it up except unwarranted statements of members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the amendment is of vital interest to the people of the country. Never before in the history of our Government has the transportation problem been so acute. Everyone agrees that it is a question of paramount importance.

It is well to quote what our President, in his message to Congress on December 8, said:

> I know of no problem exceeding in importance this one of transportation. In our complex and interdependent modern life transportation is essential to our very existence. Manifestly, we have need to begin on plans to coordinate all transportation facilities. We should more effectively connect up our rail lines with our carriers by sea. We ought to reap some benefits from the hundreds of millions expended on inland waterways, providing our capacity to utilize as well as expend.

The President goes into a full discussion of the transportation problem in his message and calls upon Congress to act. This problem of transportation is one for us to solve. The American people are looking to us for relief. How are we to give it to them?

There are certain matters on which we can agree. The railroads can not now cope with the situation. Under the transportation act the railroads of the country were granted certain rights and privileges. A revolving fund of $300,000,000 was provided by Congress to be loaned carriers to assist them to meet the needs of transportation. Have they met it? No. Freight and passenger rates have been increased. Has that solved the transportation problem? No.

The railroad operators are defending themselves as best they can for their absolute failure to measure up to the requirements of the country in handling the transportation problem. They attribute it to car shortage primarily. I presume every Member of this body has received a letter from Mr. S. Davies Warfield, President of the National Association of Owners of Railroad Securities, inclosing a copy of his speech on "Car shortage" made in Cincinnati on January 12, 1923, before the National League of Commission Merchants and members of the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati. Mr. Warfield and his associates are seeking the aid of Congress in this matter. The car shortage is acute to the extreme. Mr. Hoover in a recent speech said:

> It is safe to estimate that the car shortage levies a direct charge, each year, on both the producer and the consumer of necessities of life, which amounts to no less than the entire annual cost of administering the affairs of the Federal Government.

Suppose, gentlemen of the House, it were possible for us to relieve the car shortage. Does this solve the transportation problem? I take it that you will agree with me that it does not. The truth of the matter is that with the great growth and development of our country the railroads can not take care of the transportation of the country, even though there were no car shortage. The President recognizes this. All thoughtful men know that this is so.

There has grown up within the last few years, particularly since the war, motor-truck transportation. This will help some in solving the problem, but railroads and motor trucks combined can not cope with the situation.

The problem can only be solved by rail, motor-truck, and waterway transportation. Our Government has been committed for years to the development of rivers and harbors by Congress. Even the much discussed Budget Bureau, with its supposed program of retrenchment and economy, in its estimate recommends to Congress the necessity of the Government expending the sum of $27,625,760 for maintenance and improvements of rivers and harbors, and $456,850 for surveys, examinations, and contingencies.

The great Appropriations Committee of this body, although as I understand its policy to be not to increase the Budget estimate except in extreme or extraordinary cases, has increased the Budget estimate $10,000,000, thereby admitting that the Budget is not infallible and its recommendations should not be considered. The Budget recommends $27,625,760. The Appropriations Committee recommends $37,000,000. Now, what is the House to do with this conflict? Which is right—the Budget or the Appropriations Committee? With all respect and deference to both of these bodies, I urge upon the House that we can not take either recommendation. Who knows most about this problem? I say the Engineer Corps of the Army, whose training and experience in river and harbor work and improvement is more to be relied upon by Congress than any other agency. This department of the Government is more conservative possibly than any other branch. Those who are acquainted with the details of securing a legislative authorization and appropriation for river and harbor improvement know how difficult it is to get the recommendation of the Engineer Corps of the Army, and without this recommendation no projects will even be considered by Congress. The Chief of Engineers of the Army has made his recommendation based upon careful estimates and figures, and in the printed hearings, on page 881, Brig. Gen. Harry Taylor, assistant to the Chief of Engineers, makes the statement:

> I can say that we can profitably use $56,000,000. If we only get $27,625,760, of course we will have to do only $27,625,760 worth of work. That is all we can do. We will use that where it is most necessary, as shown by the reports we get in at the time we make the allotments.

The great Rivers and Harbors Committee, so I am informed, are a unit for the recommendation of the Army engineers. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, in the limited time I have I can not go fully into the matter and undertake to show in detail the necessity for following the estimate of the Army engineers, but it does seem to me that every Member of this body must realize fully that the transportation problem is a paramount problem to be solved now; that it can only be solved by utilizing all the agencies at our command; that waterway transportation is as necessary, if not more so, than either rail or motor-truck transportation; that Congress has heretofore approved and authorized certain projects and that the estimate of $56,000,000 can be profitably used; and that this recommendation is unanimously approved by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I believe that it is the duty of Congress in this emergency to appropriate every dollar recommended by the Army engineers. I believe the country will applaud our action in sustaining this recommendation.

The worthy projects in this bill affected by this appropriation in my State are as follows:

> Pamlico and Tar Rivers, $12,000; Neuse River, $12,000; Swift Creek, $800; Contentnea Creek, $1,500; Trent River, $1,500; channel, Thoroughfare Bay to Cedar Bay, $5,000; Beaufort Harbor, $7,500; waterway, Core Sound to Beaufort Harbor, $30,000; waterway, Beaufort to Jacksonville, $10,000; harbor of refuge, Cape Lookout, $20,000; Cape Fear River—above Wilmington, $12,000; at and below Wilmington, $500,000; Northeast (Cape Fear) River, $4,000; Black River, $2,000; Norfolk to Beaufort Inlet, N. C., $500,000.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I want to take just a few moments of your time to call your attention to what was said by probably the greatest legislator the Congress has had amongst its membership in many years relative to this particular kind of legislation—that is, legislation for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country. A good deal has been said during this debate about how we are seeking to disregard the estimate of the Budget officials. The estimate fixed by the Budget was arbitrary, and the hearings disclose this fact on page 881. A good deal has been said about the engineers and their demands. I think the statement of the gentleman from Illinois in this respect was very unjust. The engineers have not demanded anything. They are most splendid officials and gentlemen of the highest type. Let me call attention now to what was said by the late James R. Mann, whose death the Congress and the country so deeply deplore, with reference to legislation for river and harbor improvements. In January, 1917, after the cry of "pork barrel" had gone up from various parts of this Chamber and some parts of the country by those uninformed, Mr. Mann said:

Whatever men may think about the merits of particular propositions in a bill, there is no legislation which comes before Congress which is so critically scanned by experts as are the river and harbor bills before they reach the House. * * * There are more processes involved, and far more expert men, wholly disinterested, unbiased, uncontrolled by politics, in reference to a river and harbor item than for any other legislation provided by any legislative assembly in the world. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 22, 1917, pp. 1976, 1977.)

There is the opinion of one who studied such problems more than any man now on this floor. The engineers, in making their estimate of the amount that can profitably be expended for this work during the coming year, have only complied with the law. The Chief of Engineers submits his report annually. These figures are taken from that report. They are experts, who know more about the needs of the country with reference to its rivers and harbors than the Budget, than General Lord, or the President, or the Committee on Appropriations. This committee has labored arduously, and especially the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], on this item for rivers and harbors, but it is humanly impossible for these gentlemen to thoroughly study and understand the merits and demerits of every project. The engineers have only one purpose in view, and one alone. They are unbiased by politics or the hope of reward, and their only purpose is to serve this Nation to the best of their ability. I do not think it is right to let the charge go unchallenged that they have disregarded the President of the United States and demanded that this appropriation be raised to $56,000,000. The country needs every improvement this amount will be used for, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] need not fear that the people of the country will ever brand this as a "pork-barrel" measure because it has raised the appropriation recommended by the Budget and the committee from $37,000,000 to $56,000,000.

This is not waste but economy in the long run, for the very simple reason that no improvement is of value until it is completed. This Nation has been very negligent within recent years in its treatment of this work. For myself, I would gladly support an appropriation sufficient to immediately complete every project which the Congress has authorized. This would be the wise course to pursue and the most economical one, because it would stop this costly and unbusinesslike manner of piecemeal work and more quickly give to the people improved facilities with which the present transportation situation might be greatly improved.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] talks about what the President has recommended in this matter, and very freely quotes him in opposition to the amendment to increase the appropriation for rivers and harbors. Therefore, I feel justified, in answer to what he has said, in quoting from the President's message to this Congress delivered last December, which I believe more nearly expresses the attitude of the President than what Mr. MONDELL has said. Speaking in reference to the matter of transportation, the President said:

I know of no problem exceeding in importance this one of transportation.

I quote further from his message:

The census of 1880 recorded a population of 50,000,000. In two decades more we may reasonably expect to count thrice that number. In the three decades ending in 1920 the country's freight by rail increased from 631,000,000 tons to 2,234,000,000 tons; that is to say, while our population was increasing less than 70 per cent, the freight movement increased over 250 per cent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman can not do that while the gentleman from Missouri is speaking.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, yes; he can.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the amendment. Pending that—I do not intend to press the point or order.

Mr. ROACH. Let the gentleman make his point of order if he so desires.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did the gentleman make the point of order, during my discussion of the matter earlier in the day, that I was not speaking to the amendment before the House?

Mr. ROACH. I believe I did. I was vexed that so much confusion had arisen in the discussion of this important subject. It was very unfortunate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I withdraw the point of order that I have made, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ROACH. I thank the gentleman. Mr. Chairman, I pause here to inquire what Congress is doing to meet the extraordinary situation that the President of the United States has called to our attention in his message, and to which I have just called your attention. I quote still further from the President's message:

Manifestly, we have need to begin on plans to coordinate all transportation facilities. We should more effectively connect up our rail lines with our carriers by sea. We ought to reap some benefit from the hundreds of millions expended on inland waterways, proving our capacity to utilize as well as expend.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that is just what the committee is attempting to do this afternoon in adopting this amendment. We are attempting to make it possible to improve for navigation and coordinate the great inland rivers of the country with the railroad systems of the country. It is not a question of competition; it is a question to my mind of coordinating our inland rivers and highways with our railroad systems, making them one great transportation system. That, to my mind, is the solution of the transportation problem which is now the most vital question confronting our Nation, and surely this Congress has sufficient intelligence to meet that problem and make the necessary solution in the manner which I have indicated. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. A number of Members here are anxious to finish this bill. Is not debate exhausted upon the pending proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate will be exhausted when the gentleman from Maryland has concluded.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto, whether pro forma or not, be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland has been recognized in opposition to the amendment, and was on his feet when the gentleman from Alabama made the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate close within the five minutes.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maryland has been recognized, and I do not believe he can be taken off his feet by such a motion as that.

The CHAIRMAN. He can be stopped by a point of order, which the gentleman from Alabama proposed. He can not be taken off his feet by another Member to make a motion to close debate. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I shall take only two minutes of the time of the committee. [Applause.]

I agree with that side in their applause. I think debate should be terminated on this paragraph, and although I have five, I only shall speak for two minutes. [Applause.] The Budget estimate for 1924 is about $28,000,000. The Committee on Appropriations has recommended about $37,000,000. There is no city and no harbor more deeply interested in proper appropriations than the city of Baltimore. At the present time, on July 1, by report of the engineers, there is a balance of $437,809.73 unexpended in the Baltimore district. We are also interested in the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal. The hearings show that there are about $800,000 still available for the canal. I voted against the Dempsey amendment for $56,589,910 for the reason that the appropriation of $37,000,000 made by this bill is general and in the discretion of the War Department. I could not vote for the addition of $19,000,000 to the $37,000,000, an added tax burden on the whole people, on the bare hope of getting even a few more thousands for Baltimore. The great Baltimore Harbor can get more money by convincing the Chief of Engineers of its need. There is enough in the proposed $37,000,000 to take care of all the needs of Baltimore and also of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, for which $800,000 is now available and unexpended. The proposed amendment gives Baltimore no pledge of anything more. Baltimore Harbor can stand on its own merits.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HILL. I will yield.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does not the gentleman also observe in that report that all the money appropriated or allocated to Baltimore Harbor will expire on the 1st day of October, and does not the gentleman further recognize in that report that the main channel of the Chesapeake Bay to Fort McHenry has shoaled and filled up $2,500,000 worth since the April appropriation has been made?

Mr. HILL. The gentleman does not see that, and furthermore he will say to the gentleman that he has more harbor in his district than the gentleman has in his district.

Mr. LINTHICUM. We are deeply interested——

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I object to these two gentlemen playing politics at our expense.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto of whatever nature be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

MUSCLE SHOALS.

For the continuation of the work on Dam Numbered 2 on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, Ala., $6,998,800: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such machinery, gates, or other metal parts and for such materials to be used in the construction of the locks, dam, and power house as may be necessary to prosecute the said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $10,501,200, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes in case I shall want that much time. I may not use it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I submit it would be better order to decide the point of order that has been raised before any extended debate has been had. I have no objection to the gentleman having time after the point is decided, but I shall have to ask for the regular order with a view to expediting business, but I shall not object to the request of the gentleman after that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman demand the regular order?

Mr. ANTHONY. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York make the point of order?

Mr. HICKS. I make the point of order against that paragraph that it is legislation on an appropriation bill and therefore in violation of the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. To the proviso and nothing else?

Mr. HICKS. To the proviso. I do not make it against the $10,000,000 because that is a continuation of a public work, but I make it against the authorization there which permits or authorizes the Secretary of War to enter into contracts for construction.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order against the proviso——

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I submit that it is merely an authorization and specifies the object for which the money may be expended. The appropriation of $10,000,000 would be in order unquestionably, and therefore the authorization is in order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the Muscle Shoals project was started under authority vested in the President of the United States during the war to construct needful projects of public improvements to carry on the war. Seventeen million dollars was authorized to be expended out of a lump-sum appropriation of $100,000,000 available for that purpose. Part of that project for the development of Muscle Shoals was the building of a dam and locks at the so-called Wilson Dam, Dam No. 2, just above Florence, Ala. The work was entered upon. Of the $17,000,000 for the construction work on the dam a year ago, all but a few hundred thousand dollars had been expended. The work for that year had been suspended because of the want of appropriation. In last year's War Department appropriation act, $7,500,000 was authorized.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York withdraws the point of order.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] asks unanimous consent that he may speak for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I would like to have the attention of the committee while I make a few brief statements in connection with this matter. Section 124 of the national defense act was enacted into law in 1916 by a combination of Members of Congress representing on the one hand those Members of Congress who stood out preeminently in favor of national defense and national preparedness and on the other hand by those Members of Congress who felt that the agricultural interests of this country were paramount to all other interests of the country. So those two forces of men came together and enacted section 124 of the national defense act, out of which has grown the whole Muscle Shoals controversy. It provided for the issuance of $20,000,000 in bonds and authorized the President to do many things. But there was not anything done until war came on. During the war the Wilson Dam was started under that authorization of the 1916 act, and $17,000,000 was expended in building or preparing to build and partially building the Wilson Dam. That was a Democratic Congress. In 1919 the Republican Congress came into power in this House and a committee was appointed of prominent gentlemen to investigate that whole matter.

They made a very thorough investigation, and on May 18, 1920, they submitted their report to this House, and one of the recommendations of that report, which was accepted and approved by the House, read as follows:

That no further funds should be expended by the War Department on the Muscle Shoals plant, and no further appropriations for alterations, changes, or additions to said plant should be made by Congress for the use of the War Department or any agency of the Government acting under, through, and with said War Department, until some policy as to the future of said plant shall be determined upon by Congress.

That was adopted by a Republican Congress. Later on an attempt was made to carry an item in an appropriation bill for the year 1921 to continue this work. That was defeated. After its defeat the Secretary of War invited proposals in connection with Muscle Shoals in keeping with this recommendation in that report, which was filed on May 18, 1920. Proposals were brought to the Secretary of War. They were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Committee on Military Affairs from March last until June last year held hearings on those various proposals, and when the appropriation bill came up last year containing an item to appropriate $7,500,000 for the continuance of this work there was a proviso put on it that it should not be available until the 1st day of October, in order that Congress might have the opportunity to define a policy in connection with this great and momentous undertaking.

The Committee on Military Affairs after months of hearings reported to this House in a bill, which is now on the calendar, the proposal submitted by Mr. Henry Ford with certain modifications. It has been on that calendar for months. We who have labored for months on this matter and got it into the House of Representatives felt then and we feel now that the Congress of the United States should take this matter up and define the policy of the Government before we spend another dollar at Muscle Shoals. [Applause.] It is common, ordinary business sense, and I have talked about it with the leaders of this House and with the floor leader, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]; and you remember the statement he made months ago, when we had the other appropriation bill up, that he hoped we would reach this bill. I have talked with him recently, and he says he still has hopes that we will reach consideration of the bill now on the calendar. Our late lamented colleague, James R. Mann, for whom I have had the highest admiration and respect, when I found I could not be here when the ship subsidy bill was up was communicated with by me. I wrote to Mr. Mann and told him that if in our judgment we were going to consider the ship subsidy bill in all justice to the agricultural interests of the country we should take up this Muscle Shoals proposition and consider that also. Mr. Mann wrote back to me and said: "By the way, I am for the ship subsidy bill and I am for the other proposition also, and I think that they should both be considered and acted upon by Congress."

Now, I do not wish to make any fight on this appropriation. If it is the wisdom of Congress to go on appropriating money to build dams and let contracts to the steel industries of this country to install machinery down there without any plan, without knowing who is to operate this work, whether it is to be a governmental operation or some private client is to get it, that is a matter that concerns every one of us. Gentlemen, the great interest shown here this afternoon for the little rivers and harbors of our country, when men rallied in here in behalf of these various items and carried that appropriation through the House, gentlemen, is infinitesimal compared with the great and far-reaching importance of this measure. [Applause.]

Now, I want to say to you, gentlemen, here, as a Republican, I am pleading with the organization of this House to give us an opportunity to consider this matter, and if you do not approve of the Ford proposal, strike it out and send it from this room; but, for God's sake, let us demonstrate to the people of this country and to the world that we are capable of handling big things in a big way. And I want to say to both sides of this House that from Maine to California and from the Lakes to the Gulf, in the cottages and in the humble homes they are expecting action from Congress. [Applause.] I want to say now that we can not afford longer, in my judgment, to delay defining a policy. [Applause.] Let the appropriation go, gentlemen. I shall not fight it. But I do hope—I have confidence still—that my party, the party of which I am so proud, the party whose record stands for achievement, will take up this great proposition and settle it before we go to our homes on the 4th day of March. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. You propose to spend a lot more money at Muscle Shoals? Suppose we do spend it? If we do, can we dispose of that property for as much money as we appropriate here?

Mr. McKENZIE. I doubt it.

Mr. MADDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, up to the present time we have spent $103,000,000 on Muscle Shoals. Last year we appropriated $7,500,000. We are proposing to appropriate in this bill $6,800,000 to carry on the work of completing Dam No. 2, and we are proposing a contract authorization of something over $10,000,000 to complete the work.

We believe, after careful investigation, that the wisest business in connection with this problem is to complete it, and complete it at the earliest possible day. We realize, as well as anybody can, that if this property is allowed to deteriorate by leaving it uncompleted, whatever we have invested in it will be a total loss, and for one I also realize that if the Government undertakes to operate it after it is completed, it will be substantially a total loss. But I believe that the time has come when we ought to make some disposition of the problem by declaring a policy. [Applause.] What that policy is to be will be decided by this House and by the Senate. But whatever the policy is to be, it should be decided without delay. [Applause.]

After we do complete this work I am unwilling to have the Government carry it on as a business. It can not do it successfully. I do not look for any war, yet I believe the possible war needs of the Nation to be of such vital importance that we ought to have a plant down there which will make the nitrates we need in case of war. [Applause.] In time of peace I believe we ought to utilize this great institution in which we have invested so much money for the making of fertilizer, so that the farmers of the Nation may get whatever advantage there is out of that. [Applause.] It is too large an investment to leave idle.

Mr. LONGWORTH rose.

Mr. MADDEN. I realize what the gentleman from Ohio is going to say, that the process down there is obsolete, that it is not the most economical process; but we can easily modify that. Somebody will have genius enough to do it. Now, there ought to be legislation enacted by the Congress to settle the problem of what we are going to do with this great work.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman is ordinarily a very marvelous guesser, but he did not get the purport of my question. My question is not as to the plant at all. It is simply as to the dam. If we complete this dam, does the gentleman regard that as committing Congress to several other dams contemplated in the navigation program?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I think this: When we complete this dam we will have put the institution down there in a condition that will justify somebody in taking it over and investing the large amount of money that will be necessary to be invested in it for the establishment of a going business which will inure to the advantage of the American people, and I believe that the time has come for us to do that.

I want to say this, further, that in the past I made no study of this problem. I recall the statement of my very beloved, recently deceased colleage, Mr. Mann, when this subject was last up on the floor. He asked the House then to forego the consideration of the problem at that time. He made the promise that if the House would agree with him he would make a study of it, and he would be prepared to give the House the benefit of his study and cooperate with those who were anxious to dispose of the question at the earliest date possible. He is gone. He is not able to carry out the promise then made to the House. He and I knew each other from boyhood. I loved him as no other man in America loved him, and I have assumed the responsibility of following up the study that he promised to make. [Applause.] I am making that study, and I have it fairly well completed, and I will have views on this subject before a very late date; and I will be prepared, not with the same ability that he possessed, to present this case and to cooperate with Members of Congress who want to settle the question, to the end that we may be able to prove to the American people that we can decide a great question in which everybody in the United States must be more or less interested. [Applause.] So before I close I say that I hope nobody will object to the provisions in this item in the bill, because we are only proceeding in an orderly way to accomplish what must be done in any event; and before the end of this session—I do not want to postpone it to another session—personally I will be ready to take up the question with anybody at any time after we get all our appropriation bills out of the way. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, of course I am very much interested in this Muscle Shoals item. So far as the war purposes and uses of Muscle Shoals are concerned, that is absolutely behind us. The Government, of course, would not act so stupidly as not to have this plant in readiness in time of war. We do not want to be caught in the position that we were in when we were trying to buy Chilean nitrates, and we held our breath here and the world did not realize and Congress itself did not realize exactly the straits we were in at the beginning of the war. It looked at one time as if we might have war with Chile in order to get the necessary nitrates.

But the phase of this question in which I am interested is the one mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] when he spoke of our departed friend, Mr. Mann. He was deeply interested in this matter. He has given this matter considerable study. Mr. Mann was interested in the development of Muscle Shoals, not so much on account of its war value but on account of the fertilizer proposition, the development of which would make it a most useful instrumentality to the people of the United States. I have no patience with the idea that the method to be used in the manufacture of nitrates for war purposes, in contemplation during the late war, will be the method used when this plant is completed. I believe that the future of this Nation depends upon its soil improvement and development. No nation is stronger than its soil. No nation is stronger than the products of the farm. In time of war that determines the nation's strength. In time of peace it determines its prosperity. In the development of this great activity, so necessary in war time, we can make it do more for the people in time of peace than it will do in time of war; and as we love peace more than we love war, we ought to be more willing to devote our money and time and talent to the welfare of mankind along peaceful lines.

As far as the completion of the Muscle Shoals proposition is concerned, nobody desires it more than I. There is only one thing of which I am afraid in this proviso. In appropriating this $10,000,000 and in making the gates and the machinery which will be necessary to use the power to be developed there, I do not want anything to be done that will prevent the acceptance by Congress of the offer of Henry Ford, if it is decided to be desirable to accept it when we come to consider that question. It is a matter that ought to be determined by Congress and not by the Secretary of War. I do not want any step taken that will prevent the consideration either of the Ford offer or one that is just as good for the American people. Personally, I do not believe there is more than one man in the United States capable of doing as much for Muscle Shoals and as much for the American people as Mr. Ford's offer now proposes. If there is anyone else, let him come forward and make a better proposition.

I believe that Mr. Ford, with all of his success, has really seen a great vision, and if he desires to build for himself a monument that will last as long as water flows from the heights of the Alleghenies to the sea, he has an opportunity here to do it, and will benefit every humble farmer and benefit every mouth that is to be fed in America. It seems to me that in doing this he has looked far into the future and seen a great vision. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am unwilling that any step should be taken which will in any way prejudice the consideration of his offer. I will ask gentlemen here if anyone believes that this proviso will in anywise affect the offer which Mr. Ford now has pending?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think it will.

Mr. SISSON. You do not?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not.

Mr. SISSON. The reason I am asking this question is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has studied this matter, and I say it frankly, that whenever he devotes himself to any great problem and gives all of his mind to it, he is a man of so great capacity that he is able to reach conclusions which, as a rule, are successful ones.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think it would interfere with anything of that sort.

Mr. SISSON. Is there any idea in the mind of anyone that this item was placed in the appropriation bill with any idea of foreclosing in any way the Ford proposition?

Mr. WURZBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield.

Mr. WURZBACH. Without reference to the Henry Ford proposition and keeping in mind that I was one of the two Members of the Republican side that voted in favor of the acceptance of the Ford offer, does not the gentleman think that this ought to be a matter that should be submitted to the membership of this Congress to be passed upon?

Mr. SISSON. I do; I do not think this matter should be determined by the Secretary of War. I am absolutely certain that under the law the Secretary of War might fix the policy, although the Secretary of War has said to our committee and other committees that he has no right to fix this policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Now, if the Secretary of War has not that power, of course, Congress will have to fix it. I believe that this policy that means so much, Congress ought to hold within its own grasp—the power to determine what shall be done with Muscle Shoals. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that something ought to be done at once with Muscle Shoals. I think it ought to be determined at this session. I am more than willing that it should be done at this session.

If we can make a successful disposition of it at this session, this Congress will have to its credit one of the greatest pieces of constructive legislation that ever laid at the door of any Congress or will lie at the door of any Congress in the future. I think this is a task the proper solution of which requires the greatest intellect and financial mind in the Government at this time. I do not know of anything that can be made to inure more to the benefit of the American people than the proper use of this wonderful power. Let your mind's eye go down each year and see every little cottage home being improved because it is surrounded by land getting better and better every year, applying the Coue principle—getting better by the application of fertilizer that comes from this wonderful plant which the good God has put in the midst of this country. I say it is a vision that is a beautiful vision to any man who wants to contemplate a flourishing land, and especially the encouragement of those men who labor and toil in the sun. A man that does not appreciate the sun-crowned hand of toil, the man that handles the plow—if he does not sympathize with that man he ought not to occupy a seat in this end of the Capitol or the other, because that is the basis of all wealth of the country. There has never been a nation destroyed when the sun-crowned hand of toil that goes out in the sunshine and the rain to cultivate the fields, the man that goes into the mines to labor with his hands—when they are prosperous and contented, when they are well fed and well clothed and well housed—you never heard of that great nation being destroyed and you never heard of a revolution being successful in such a nation. The strength of a nation is not in its palaces; it is not in its railroad facilities; it is not in its factories; it is not in its stocks and bonds; the strength of a nation is in the brawn and muscle that labors in the mines and on the farm and in the factory throughout the nation. When these men are strong, when these men are happy, when these men are contented they will rise up to the defense of the flag, and the nation is invincible and unconquered and unconquerable. That is the vision we see in the future if the Federal Government devotes some of its time and means and mighty energies toward the development of the plant at Muscle Shoals. That is why our deceased colleague, Mr. Mann, took upon himself the burden of studying this; he could see such a great future for the American people in its development. I want to congratulate the country that it is within the power of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to carry on the great work of his dear friend, Mr. Mann, who was nearest and dearest to us all at the time of his death. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 103, line 17, strike out the figures "$6,998,800."

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am not insisting on this amendment, but merely use it for the purpose of getting the floor, and expect later to ask unanimous consent to withdraw it. I do, however, want to express my opinion very briefly. I was one of those who joined in the report which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] just read, in which our committee recommended that no further money be appropriated or used in this Muscle Shoals project until we established some policy. That was two years ago, and it represented the opinion of the Republican side of this House at least. Since that time the Republicans have taken charge of the country, we are running it, and this is our job and we ought to attend to it. In my judgment it is an extremely important proposition and one that ought to be decided before we go home on the 4th of March. I believe as soon as we get these appropriation bills out of the road the Rules Committee ought to bring in this Muscle Shoals proposition, set it down for hearing, so that we may thresh it out and fasten upon some policy. I am not saying this because I am an advocate of the Ford offer. I do not know whether I am for that proposition or not. That is a matter I shall have something to say about hereafter. I do know that something will have to be done, and I believe I do know that the majority sentiment of the House is against Government operation of this plant. That means but one thing, either let it lie idle or lease it to somebody who shall run it. Of course, the lease proposition is the proper one, and it should be leased on proper conditions.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. What does the gentleman have in mind when he says "lease"? Does he mean to lease the dam or the two nitrate plants?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I would lease the nitrate plants, and if it was necessary to run it properly, to accomplish the purpose, I would lease the dam also.

Mr. KEARNS. Then the gentleman would not be in favor of giving the two nitrate plants to some one?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I am not in favor of giving them to anybody, for this reason: We built them as a nitrate proposition. The Government ought to have in mind always a few cardinal principles. In the first place, we ought to keep those nitrate plants so that in case of war, or threatened war, we can use them for the purposes for which they were intended. Everybody will agree with that, I think.

Mr. KEARNS. Everybody does not agree with that. There have been two reports here, both of which advocate the giving of these nitrate plants—and I use the word "give" advisedly, not to sell them—to Mr. Ford.

Mr. FIELDS. Oh, the Ford proposition reserved them to the Government for military purposes, to be taken over by the Government in five days as a complete organization.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. We will take care of that when we get to it. In the first place, we do not want to run it; the Government does not want to operate it. Therefore we should lease it to somebody. We should lease it with the provision that we can always get it back when we need it for the purpose for which it was intended. Second, I think it is the sentiment of this House that it ought to be used in time of peace to make fertilizers or elements of fertilizers.

Mr. KEARNS. In the Ford offer he agreed to use 100,000 horsepower in the manufacture of fertilizer and the other 900,000 horsepower, which he says he can develop in the manufacture of anything that he wants to manufacture, unrestrained.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That may be true, but we will thrash that thing out when we get to it. It ought to be used to make fertilizer.

Mr. KEARNS. I agree with that.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. And there ought to be a contract entered so that this fertilizer can be sold directly to the people who are interested, viz, the farmers of the country, and not through any middlemen, or with any intervening profits, and we ought to always retain in the hands of the Government the right to say that this product should be sold at reasonable prices and for a reasonable profit. In this way we would accomplish two very useful purposes. In the first place, we would get rid of all this overhead expense which we are now paying to run these plants, if we turn them into private hands, and in the second place, we would start manufacturing something that the people of the country want, that the people of the country need, something that is essential for our agricultural prosperity, and is for the best interests of the whole country. I seriously hope that in the early future we will take some action upon this matter.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, many people are under the impression that Congress appropriates a certain sum of money for the improvement of each river and harbor to be improved. This formerly was the policy of Congress, but in the Sixty-fifth Congress this policy was changed and all river and harbor improvement and maintenance were placed under the War Department. The War Department, by its engineers, investigates and reports upon the advisability of the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country and submits estimates to the Budget Bureau, and the Budget Bureau in turn submits estimates to the President, and the President submits what he considers proper estimates to Congress in a lump sum, and Congress appropriates a lump sum. Congress, of course, has the power to increase or decrease these estimates. The lump sum appropriated by Congress is expended by the War Department on the maintenance of projects completed and for the construction of new projects. Money appropriated for rivers and harbors is carried in the Army appropriation bill. The Committee on Appropriations, acting on the estimates submitted by the President, has included in the Army appropriation bill now before us for consideration $37,000,000 for the maintenance and construction for all rivers and harbors for the whole country for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924. The Army engineers, who have made a careful study of this problem, have submitted a most careful estimate of the amount of money needed for the coming year. They say we must have $56,589,910.

I FAVOR THE INCREASE.

The Army engineers have asked this sum. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, I am advised, have unanimously urged the need of $56,589,910. Mr. DEMPSEY, of New York, the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, has offered an amendment urging the House to increase the appropriation for rivers and harbors for the coming year from $37,000,000 to $56,589,910. I strongly favor the adoption of this amendment. It will require a large part of the $37,000,000 for the maintenance of the completed projects, and there will be very little money for new construction unless we appropriate the $56,589,910 asked by the Army engineers and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

CUMBERLAND RIVER SHOULD BE IMPROVED NOW.

The War Department in a strong report has urged the improvement of Cumberland River. This report shows that the part of Tennessee and Kentucky penetrated by the Cumberland River is rich in agricultural, timber, mineral, and fruit products. It is one of the most fertile and productive river valleys of the Nation; yet it is the most destitute of transportation facilities of any section of the United States. Twenty-one locks and dams are necessary from Nashville, Tenn., to Burnside, Ky. Eight of these have been built, but none have built for some years. Thirteen remain to be built. Seven have been built on the lower end and one built on the upper end. The Government has spent millions of dollars already in putting in these eight locks, but they are of little value and will be of little value until the work is completed. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link. A river is of no more value to shipping than its shallowest water. Until these 13 locks are built boats can use the Cumberland River only from December until May of each year. This could be done if there were no locks or dams. We can not use the river from May until December. We can not use it at the very season of the year we need it to ship minerals, timber, fruits, vegetables, poultry, cattle, and other farm products. With this river improved all of the way and so that it could be used throughout the year I think millions of tons would be carried over it each year. There are no railroads in this section, and the public highways are in bad shape.

The country needs the products from this great rich valley, and the people need the money for their products. The people of Tennessee and the counties in Kentucky involved have met the Government requirements in the way of taking care of overflow damages and landing sites, and we are anxious now to have the Government improve this river. It will cost about $7,000,000 to complete this work upon the Cumberland River, but under this bill only about $535,000 could be used for it for the coming fiscal year. I am for this amendment and this increase because I believe it will give more money for the improvement of the Cumberland River and the other rivers of the Nation. There are many other navigable rivers in the same condition as the Cumberland River. I am opposed to wasting money on rivers the improvement of which would not be of economic value to the country and whose improvement is not necessary to give to the people the proper transportation for their products. The War Department has said in its report that the Cumberland River when improved will be of great value to the sections penetrated by it and to the country as a whole and that this section is in great need of this improvement.

OUR COUNTRY NEEDS HIGHWAY AND WATER TRANSPORTATION.

All agree that the improvement of our highways and rivers is of great economic value to the country. This being true, why this niggardly policy? Let us improve our highways and waterways now and begin at the earliest date possible to reap the benefits that will flow from their improvement. It costs millions from year to year for the upkeep and maintenance of these incomplete river projects, but we are receiving no benefits from our investment and will not until they are completed.

COUNTRY NEEDS MORE, CHEAPER, AND BETTER TRANSPORTATION.

The railroads are not meeting the transportation needs of the country, and they can not do so. If America is to be properly fed, clothed, warmed, and sheltered, we must have better, cheaper, and enlarged transportation facilities. Washington and other cities are begging for coal at any price, and coal is being rationed in the cities and in the nonproducing coal sections of the country, yet we are told, and it is a fact, that America can produce nearly twice as much coal as she can use and export.

I represent one of the greatest and best soft-coal producing sections of this country. Our mines could produce three to four times as much coal as is being produced and shipped, and they would be doing so, but they can not get railroad products or means of transportation. For months the coal mines of my district have been running as a rule about one day to the week and standing idle the remainder of the time. This makes coal high and scarce. What is true of that coal section is true of many other coal sections of the country, and what is true of coal is also true of farm products and other commodities of the Nation. The railroads can not furnish the cars and the cost of railroad transportation is too outrageously high. It is a crying shame with coal and other commodities scarce and high priced in the cities and many of the industries of the country running at one-third or less of the time that could and would produce more than enough coal and supplies for the country if they had means of transportation to carry it from the producers to the consumers. Great quantities of fruit and vegetables go to waste every year because of lack of transportation. Thousands of bushels of fine apples and other fruits rotted in my district during the last year while we are paying around 8 to 10 cents per pound for apples in the cities. America must improve her highways and rivers. It will reduce the cost of transportation and will insure prompt transfer of the products of the Nation to the consumer.

Although the railroads can not carry the commerce of this country, yet many of the railroads are putting up an organized fight against the improvement of our highways and rivers.

MUSCLE SHOALS SHOULD BE COMPLETED AND OPERATED.

I favor the appropriation carried in this bill for the completion of Muscle Shoals dam and plant. We have there an investment of over $100,000,000. Unless we complete that project and put it in operation it will soon deteriorate and go to waste. I do not favor its operation by the Government. It should be completed and leased to some private concern. If Mr. Ford has submitted the best proposition the contract should be awarded to him. It is said that this great plant is equipped to manufacture fertilizer and fertilizer products.

I want to see this plant used to manufacture fertilizer for the benefit of the farmers of the country. There is a constant increasing demand for fertilizer. This should be produced as cheaply as possible and sold to our farmers as cheaply as possible. Some of the big fertilizer firms are fighting this proposition. It will be a good thing for the country to complete this plant and let Henry Ford or some other concern manufacture fertilizer and give real and active competition to the big Fertilizer Trust of the country. Again, the power from this plant will furnish power for thousands of industries in many of the Southern States. All of this will bring about employment for thousands of people. This Congress should settle the policy of the Government toward Muscle Shoals, and this action should be taken by Congress before it adjourns March 4. If the contract is entered into with Mr. Ford or anyone else, the rights of the American people, of course, should be protected and safeguarded; but let us complete it and put it in operation, and let us be getting some revenue for the Government and at the same time help the farmers and the industrial development of the country.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, the House has already granted me the right to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I ask that I be permitted to extend them in 8-point type.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanmious consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in 8-point type. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. On what subject?

Mr. McSWAIN. On the 25 per cent excess proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, while I am heartily in favor of the acceptance of the offer of Henry Ford for Muscle Shoals, still I am in favor of the appropriation and authorization in this bill for Dam No. 2 at Muscle Shoals. The question of the completion of Dam No. 2 at Muscle Shoals and the acceptance of the offer of Henry Ford for Muscle Shoals are two separate and distinct propositions. Everybody, so far as I am advised, whether they be for or against the Ford offer, favor the completion of this dam. If the Ford offer is not accepted, the dam will be completed. If the Ford offer is accepted, it will also be completed, together with another dam, known as Dam No. 3.

If this appropriation is not made and Congress should fail to accept the Ford offer before the 4th of March, the work on the dam will close down the 1st of next July for the want of funds. This, everybody will agree, should not occur. The dam should be completed with as little delay as possible. Good progress is being made in the construction of the dam since work was resumed last summer. About 2,000 men are engaged on the work and about 2,000 yards of concrete is being poured daily. The engineers estimate that it will take about three years to complete it. The Chief of Engineers has recommended the authorization feature of this bill in order to contract for such machinery, gates, and other metal works, and for such materials as may be needed in the construction of the locks, dam, and power house. While not more than $6,998,800, the amount carried in this bill, will be actually expended during the next fiscal year, still the work will reach a stage where it will be necessary to make contracts for lock gates, gates on the dam, and other metal work, and also additional equipment for the power house, which will take a year or so to fabricate, and which will be needed by the end of that time, and without this authorization to make such contracts the work would be delayed very materially. This is the usual businesslike and economical way to carry on such construction work.

When the Ford bill is taken up in the House for consideration, which should and I presume will be done within the next few days, a provision can be placed in it authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to use any unexpended balance of the appropriation for Dam No. 2 in carrying out the provisions of the Ford offer, and charge the Ford company with interest on the same in accordance with the provisions contained in the offer made by Mr. Ford.

The only effect the acceptance of the Ford offer would have upon the construction work on this day would be, instead of the actual work being done by the Government it would be done by the Ford company under the direction of the Chief of Engineers. In either case the money would be furnished by the Government.

Do not let anyone deceive himself or claim that Muscle Shoals is being taken care of by the continuation of the work upon and the completion of Dam No. 2. If Congress does not consider and accept the Ford offer now, because this dam is not completed, then the same reason could be assigned for the next three years, and until the dam is completed.

When the Secretary of War invited Mr. Ford to make his offer he did not prescribe as a condition that the question of acceptance would be held in abeyance for four years until water power Dam No. 2 was completed. Such was not in contemplation when the Ford offer was made and referred to the Military Committee of the House. If the House was going to wait three or four years until the dam was finished before the Ford offer should be considered and voted on, the five and a half months' time and labor of the Military Committee in holding hearings, visiting Muscle Shoals, and reporting the bill providing for the acceptance of the Ford offer was all in vain and useless.

The people back in our districts, and the farmers especially, are complaining seriously about Congress not acting upon the offer of Henry Ford for Muscle Shoals. They do not know and can not understand why it is that it can not be called up, considered, and voted on in the House. We know and understand that it can not be done without a rule being reported by the Rules Committee of the House. Such a rule was requested nearly six months ago in the form of a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], acting chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, but the Rules Committee has not acted upon nor reported the resolution.

It was at one time said by some of the Republican managers in the House that we did not have the time to consider this legislation and that the Members of the House had not had an opportunity to study it. Between now and the 4th of March we would have ample time to discuss and vote upon this bill. The Members of the House have certainly had time to study the Ford offer and the reports of the committees, for the subject has been before Congress for more than a year and a half. So, no reasonable or satisfactory excuse can now be assigned for not giving the representatives of the people in this House an opportunity to vote upon this important question, in which the great body of the American people are so vitally interested.

The farmers are demanding of Congress the acceptance of the Ford offer. It has the indorsement of the Mississippi Valley Association, the various farm organizations, union labor, American Legion, and every other organization which has investigated the subject.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any different reason for going ahead with the work now than there was a year ago when the gentleman and his Democratic colleagues voted to defer the construction of this work until October?

Mr. ALMON. I did vote with the majority of 40 Members in this House to postpone the $7,500,000 carried in the last Army appropriation bill for Dam No. 2 for 90 days, and I did so because I hoped that Congress would take up and dispose of, during that time, the legislation which had been reported to the House by the Military Committee looking to the acceptance of the offer of Henry Ford for Muscle Shoals, and I do not think that there was but little delay to the work by reason of that extension, for the reason that there was nearly $1,000,000 of other funds available and used between the 1st of July and the 1st of October on this dam.

Mr. STAFFORD. Permit me to state what was said in response to the inquiry by the chairman of our subcommittee:

Mr. ANTHONY. The proviso adopted in connection with the appropriation of $7,500,000 until after the 1st of October has resulted in delaying the work?

General TAYLOR. Very materially; yes, sir.

Mr. ANTHONY. Has it practically delayed the work one year?

General TAYLOR. It depends altogether on what happens in the next few weeks. If the money had been available on the 1st of July, we could have started immediately and gone vigorously to work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALMON. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Members of this House who are members of the Rules Committee and the Republican steering committee of the majority, who have it in their power to bring the Ford bill before the House for consideration and vote, or keep it from being done, will cause to be reported to the House within the next few days a rule making provision for the consideration and vote upon the Ford bill. Whether they are in favor of or opposed to the Ford offer, I believe that they would be willing to give to the representatives of the people an opportunity to vote upon this important question.

I am delighted to hear and know that Mr. MADDEN, Mr. McKENZIE, Mr. GRAHAM, all of Illinois; Mr. LONGWORTH, of Ohio; and other prominent and influential leaders on the Republican side of the House declare in favor of the Muscle Shoals question being taken up and disposed of at this session of Congress, and am also pleased to hear them state that they are not only in favor of the completion of the water-power development at Muscle Shoals but that the plant at Muscle Shoals should be utilized and operated for the manufacture of fertilizer. This, I am sure, will be very pleasing news to the country and especially to the farmers, who are so vitally interested in this question. [Applause.]

I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think the RECORD ought to show what took place on the floor of the House in view of the fact that we were denied debate on the important question of voting $20,000,000 that was not necessary, so I object.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous censent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I shall support the item under consideration, carried in this bill. I think it is proper under all the circumstances that this dam should be completed as soon as possible. I was delighted to hear that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has devoted and is going to continue to devote his splendid abilities to a solution of this very vexing and important question. I want it understood that so far as I am individually concerned my opposition in the past to certain phases of this power and navigation scheme has not been at all because I did not think that some use ought to be made of that plant which we now have in existence, in the direction of producing cheap fertilizer. I have come to the conclusion that we ought not to wait very much longer to decide upon some plan. For one I shall be to a large extent guided by the mature opinion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. I agree also with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] that this Congress is perfectly capable of doing big things in a big way. I am prepared myself, though I have not formed any definite opinion as to exactly what ought to be done with this plant, to have it brought before the House at the earliest possible moment [applause], and I sincerely hope that it may be possible at this session of Congress to dispose of this whole business. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the expressions made by various gentlemen upon the majority side are extremely gratifying to those of us who for such a long time have been struggling here to try to get the policy declared in regard to this great plant—not only the dam but the nitrate plant itself. In the Sixty-sixth Congress the Ordnance Division of the War Department asked for an appropriation with a view of making alterations in the plant so as to manufacture ammonium sulphate rather than ammonium nitrate. They desired a fund for making the necessary changes and also for the power capital. It was while that bill was pending that the report of the Graham committee was made which declared that nothing should be done in the way of appropriating for the dam; and it went further than that and declared, and the majority side of the House adopted it as a policy, that there should not be Government operation.

Following in the lead of that, following that report, it will be remembered that, after a very warm contest here in the House, the House refused to make an appropriation to continue the work upon the dam. Of course, that was a great mistake; a great mistake. A year's time has been lost, and I do not know how much money—two or three million dollars, probably. But that is one of the mistakes that has been made, and that is past.

The particular thing upon which I wish to congratulate the House and the country is that we have the assurances now of many of the strong men upon the majority side, men who are in leading positions and who have strong words to say in regard to what shall be the procedure in the House, that the House is going to have an opportunity to vote upon this proposition before the conclusion of the present Congress. [Applause.] That is all I have to say at this time.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I should not take the time of the committee except that I spent three months on this subject quite recently, coming into it without any previous prejudice of any kind, sort, or description. What I have to say is embodied in minority views which are only three pages long, and as I may possibly leave out what is in these three pages I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including those minority views.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. To put in three pages of minority views which are out of print.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman can defer that until to-morrow. I would like the RECORD to show absolutely the proceedings of the House.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If the gentleman objects, I will not take any more time on that point.

Mr. Chairman, there is no sort of doubt that Dam No. 2 ought to be completed. It costs $40,000,000. Whether it was worth while to begin it I sometimes doubt. Perhaps a canal carrying the water around would serve the same purpose. But we have spent $16,000,000 upon it, and we appropriated $7,500,000 for it last year, and that dam should be completed. I say that because it will be profitable to complete it; it can be leased when completed. It can not be leased now, because no one is going in to spend $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 to complete it. Even Mr. Ford is not doing that. He asked the United States to furnish the money with which it should be done.

It will certainly pay. It furnishes, for 98 per cent of the time—that is, all of every year except a few days—it furnishes 100,000 horsepower, primary power, which, it is testified, can be sold on the switchboard at 5 mills a kilowatt hour, which amounts to $31.28 a horsepower, or $3,128,000 a year.

That is a great deal of money, and the dam is worth completing. I would like to see it used, if it can be, for making fertilizer. I do not consider that the Ford offer amounts to a row of pins for that. He says he will make fertilizers after the dam is completed according to demand, and he will make them if he makes 8 per cent profit; and we all know that in times of peace nitrates can be bought much cheaper from Chile than they can be made here, and the phosphorus and potash can not be made at all. He will not make nitrates but make fertilizer with materials bought from outside.

The nitrate plant upon that property will be useful to us in time of war, but it makes the nitrate at a cost of three or four or five times what nitrate can be bought for, and it is not worth talking about at the present time.

But the dam will bring in over $3,000,000 a year if you just lease the power. It likewise has on it an engine that cost $10,000,000 and furnishes 80,000 more horsepower, and which, by being worked a quarter of the year only, will add 80,000 horsepower to that 100,000, and the cost being only one-fourth; it is 60,000 net horsepower, or at that same rate $1,800,000 more net income.

Now, the odd thing about Mr. Ford's offer is that he asks that this great machinery be given to him, and that it shall no longer accrue in value to the Government. It is not to be leased but deeded. So far, therefore, I am not for the Ford offer.

Instead of offering us a fair amount for that property he does not propose to pay anything on what we have spent, but 4 per cent on what we shall spend, say 4 per cent on $20,000,000, or about $800,000 a year, beginning years hence. We have paid out $40,000,000, and 4 per cent on that is $1,600,000 a year, while he will get nearly $5,000,000 a year for power alone.

He proposes also that the United States shall take the risk of the dam going out at any moment. That is a thing that the lessee should take charge of, unless he pays sufficient rent to meet that danger. He likewise proposes that the United States shall actually give to him this nitrate plant, which we need in time of war and which cost $68,000,000, and spend $25,000,000 on another dam with only 34,000 horsepower, that is not likely to pay for itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from California to amend his motion to close in five minutes.

Mr. CURRY. I will do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California modifies his motion. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to discuss the paragraph for five minutes, and if the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] desires another five minutes, that ought to be arranged.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I would like to have it, but I do not ask for it.

Mr. MONDELL. I was not present during the entire debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Does the gentleman withhold his motion?

Mr. CURRY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am very much obliged. This is the first time I have come before the House on this matter, but I have given it my best study for three months.

Mr. Chairman, it is likewse proposed that we should deed to Mr. Ford a tremendous quarry of limestone that we have there, and all the railroads and connections, and also a camp at Dam No. 2 that will take care of 2,500 people, and a plant at Dam No. 1 that cost us from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000, and that he be given the absolute control of all the land adjacent. This would make it absolutely impossible to lease the plant to anybody else if he should break his contract. I am not in favor of giving away the property of the United States. I refer gentlemen of the House to the very brief statement that I made in minority views. I am in favor of a fair lease. I think this can be obtained better by submitting that question to the Secretary of War to negotiate the lease, subject to confirmation by Congress.

The House can not negotiate with 20 people. There were at least two good, solid people who were after it. One was the Power Co. of Alabama, against which there is a good deal of prejudice, but it is an honorable company. The other was Henry Ford. There will be many more when the dam is completed. I do not think this House is the place to find out who makes the better offer, to go over all the conditions and fix them up.

In committee we suggested many amendments. We proposed that Mr. Ford should absolutely agree to make fertilizer, and that he declined to do. We proposed that he should take a lease of the nitrate plant, and that he declined. He insisted upon having a deed, and when it came to that I took the position taken by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] that the first object of the nitrate plants of the United States is to supply us with nitrates in time of war, and that we would not give them up. I took the position, next, that he should pay a fair rental for the property, and that if he takes it for 100 years that he should take the risk of the dam going out.

I believe that is almost all I wanted to say. I ask permission to insert in the extension of my remarks this short report on the subject.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OLIVER. I recognize that the gentleman has given considerable study to this subject and that he has strong convictions upon it; but I do not understand that the gentleman is opposed to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and others this afternoon that the matter should come before the House and in some way a policy be determined on.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am not at all opposed to that. I do think, however, that it could be better done when the dam is completed; that you could get better offers then than you could when it is half completed. I think also that the House will get much benefit from the study made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and that we will have a better understanding of the matter, and have a very different bill from the one that is now before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting the minority views. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. For the reason stated before, Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. MONDELL. I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have not heard the discussion on the Muscle Shoals question this afternoon, except the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER]; but I understand that gentlemen have suggested the advisability of determining at this session of Congress the question as to what we shall do at and about Muscle Shoals. It has been my hope that it would be possible before the close of this session to have consideration and settlement of that very important matter. Whether or no it is wise to have a discussion in the House and an attempted settlement in the House, when we know very well that the Senate will take no action, is a question. Of course, it would give gentlemen in the House an opportunity to air and explain their views. We might be enlightened and secure additional information on the subject which would be helpful; but, frankly, I have been hopeful that some one would come forward with some proposal touching Muscle Shoals and the development there that the Congress might properly accept. I do not think any proposal has been made as yet that the Congress would be justified in accepting. In that view of the matter, and in view of the fact that it is not at all likely that the Senate will even take up the question for consideration this session, I am not sure that we should set aside important business that we may hope to conclude in order to take up Muscle Shoals. There is pending before the House legislation of great importance reported from a number of the committees, legislation that in all probability can be enacted into law at this session. We have before us Senate bills which are entitled to consideration, and which, if considered, will become law, and I think we should first give consideration to those measures that are likely to be completed and settled at this session before we take up matters relative to which there is great diversity of opinion and which the Senate will not find time to consider.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. HUSTED. Does not the gentleman think we are much more apt to get an advantageous offer on Muscle Shoals after Dam No. 2 has been completed and the power plant completed and we can show the country just how much power we can deliver at that site? For that reason, does not the gentleman think that perhaps it would be just as well to wait until that dam has been completed and the power house completed and the gates constructed and we know what we can do and exactly what we have to offer?

A MEMBER. We know now.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, we know now that we could give this property away with a vast obligation of Federal expenditure attached to the gift. We have known that from the beginning. If we were quite certain that this matter could be settled at this session and that the Senate would pass upon it, I think perhaps it would be our duty to take it up at once and discuss it; but I imagine that no one here believes that the Senate would settle the questions involved at this session of Congress, even though we might pass upon them. I have hoped that at some time some one will come forward with a reasonably fair offer touching Muscle Shoals. We can not afford to accept any offer heretofore made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SHILOH NATIONAL MILITARY PARK.

For continuing the establishment of the park; compensation of superintendent; clerical and other services; labor; historical tablets; maps and surveys; roads; purchase and transportation of supplies, implements, and materials; foundations for monuments; office and other necessary expenses, including maintenance, repair, and operation of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle, $20,000.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have introduced a bill that I should like to call to the attention of the House at this time, and which is in line with the paragraph that has just been read. It proposes to take over the road from the Shiloh battle field to the city of Corinth and to connect the two national parks, which are only about 20 miles apart.

Mr. Chairman, there is no other place on American soil that is of more interest from a historic standpoint than Shiloh, where at one time Northern courage and Southern valor grappled for the supremacy of the New World—ground that was once wet with the best blood of America.

It is 20 miles from the railroad on the banks of the Tennessee River, and the closest point that can be reached by rail is Corinth, Miss. No other American battle field of importance retains its original characteristics and appearances as does Shiloh. No cities have grown up around it. There have been no vast structures or buildings or railways or other improvements to deface its original topography or impair its natural beauty.

There is no battle field on American soil, there is no place on American soil, in my opinion, where the pride of the man from the south, where the pride of the man from the North can be more fully gratified without prejudice or without ill feeling toward the other side than the battle field of Shiloh, where honors were equally divided; where the same sun that set on that fatal day saw Albert Sidney Johnston, one of the greatest military leaders of all time, go down on a field of glory, also saw arise to imperishable fame another figure who became a leader of world-wide renown—Ulysses S. Grant.

I said that the road should be taken over and improved. Thousands of people from all over the country every year go to look over the battle field. I see men before me from Illinois. I remember that on that battle field is a great monument, and on it is this inscription: "Illinois erects this monument to her sons who here gave their lives to perpetuate the honor and glory of the United States." I see men before me from Iowa. One of the most magnificent monuments I have ever seen on any battle field is erected by the people of Iowa on the field of Shiloh. Before me are men from the South. One of the greatest monuments on American soil is the one erected on the Shiloh battle field by the Daughters of the Confederacy.

Yet, strange to say, the only road connecting it with the railroad is a toll road and is owned by a private monopoly. You can not visit it, your wives and children can not visit it, without being taxed by this concern. They charge from 25 to 75 cents for every vehicle that travels over it. The old soldiers who wore the blue and those who wore the gray can not visit Shiloh without paying tribute to the people who own this roadway.

I have introduced a bill to take over that road, which can be done at a very small cost, a very reasonable expense, and make it a national highway. In doing that you will connect the Shiloh battle field and the Corinth National Park, where thousands of men who wore the blue in that great struggle lie sleeping beneath the sod of the sunny South. I say it ought to be done, and I believe if the people of the United States understood it they would agree with me with one accord that the Government ought to take over the road and unite these two national parks, in order that the people of this generation, their children, and their children's children, might freely visit this wonderful battle field and dra··· an inspiration from the examples of those men, on both sides, who gave their lives in support of the principles for which they fought.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I have just listened to the speech of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] with a good deal of approval. There is one point which he overlooked which tends to make it quite popular in my country, for most of the fellows that won that battle live in my State, and if you can do anything to make it easier and cheaper for them to get there and see where they licked Confederates, I think it would please them. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANKIN. In order to do that we will have to have the road, because they will have to go to Corinth and return about twice.

Mr. LITTLE. That is my understanding. I think in all seriousness it is a very sensible thing to do. These old fellows that go there to see where they fought and won one of the greatest battles of the war are not men of great means, and every nickel and dollar that they spend on a trip counts. Aside from the fact that it is a big celebration for them and a big event for their children and grandchildren, it is always a trip that they can take within their means. It is a trip that the old soldier can take, he can go about that far; it is a pleasant trip, and they are nice people down there. If the gentleman can secure an amendment of that kind I shall be very happy to vote for it. The uniting of the gray and the blue on the places where the blues won, it seems to me, is a very happy way of getting at it, and I join with the gentleman from Mississippi in the hope that these opportunities may increase and that Shiloh gets what the gentleman thinks it ought to have.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not want to be misunderstood. I said that the honors were evenly divided. While Albert Sidney Johnston lived the grays advanced, and when he went down reinforcements arrived, Grant rose, and the tide turned the other way.

Mr. LITTLE. A friend of mine who was an officer on Grant's staff and knew Rawlins, his old chief of staff, told me this story: After Grant got under way, Shiloh had been lost, and Grant got started again. Rawlins said, "General, we are doing better." "Yes," Grant said, "It is doing pretty good, but Albert Sidney Johnston will be in Chicago in 30 days." Over and again he so remarked to Rawlins. Finally the battle went the other way, and they came in and reported that the Confederates were retreating. They went out and looked around and said, "General, they are gone." "No," said Grant. Again they so reported. "Oh," Grant said, "Johnston is coming around some other way."

They reported "no enemy in sight." U. S. Grant paused a moment and then spoke, "Albert Sidney Johnston is dead." That was Grant's view of that fight. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Pacific Branch, Santa Monica, Calif.: Current expenses, $50,000; subsistence, $305,000; household, $114,000; hospital, $180,000; transportation, $2,500; repairs, $47,500; farm, $19,000; in all, Pacific Branch, $718,000.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman a question regarding the $180,000 appropriation for hospital at the National Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle, commonly called the Pacific Branch. I note that the amount has been increased from $100,000 last year to $180,000 this year. What is the reason for that?

Mr. ANTHONY. The increase is necessary because of the fact that the Pacific Branch has been largely turned into a tubercular sanitarium, and there is a correspondingly increased number of nurses necessary in taking care of tubercular patients. They are largely World War veterans.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, that is exactly the point that I wish to develop by the question I put to the chairman. It is evident that those gentlemen in control of the Veterans' Bureau, handling the hospitalization of World War veterans, and particularly those cases suffering from tuberculosis, are attempting to turn the National Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle into a tubercular hospital. The hospital facilities at this great institution should be developed along general hospital lines, and no one has any objection to that, but it is located only from 40 to 50 feet above sea level and about 2 miles or 3 miles at the most from Santa Monica Bay, on the Pacific Ocean, a region renowned for its scenic beauty but renowned also for its fogs, which are the curse of every tubercular sufferer. World War tubercular patients have no business there at all. Everyone knows that fog is very inimical to the recovery of tubercular patients, although I understand some of Colonel Forbes's so-called experts deny this. In the last few days there has been a considerable shake-up in the Veterans' Bureau here in Washington, and the Lord knows it was needed. I think it has been largely precipitated by just such actions as this upon the part of those in charge of the welfare of the disabled World War veterans. I am not going to attack or attempt to restrict or decrease this amount, but I want it to go into the RECORD that the ex-service men of California, as shown by the resolution adopted at the last department convention of the American Legion at San Jose, and particularly the veterans of southern California, which is the center of gravity or concentration for tubercular men coming to California, protest against the further development of any tubercular hospital facilities for World War veterans at Sawtelle. In this they have been joined by prominent citizens and members of high standing in the medical fraternity and by the manager, Major Grant, of the twelfth district at San Francisco. We ask that a separate tubercular hospital be constructed at such a distance from the center of gravity or concentration of ex-service men in California and at such an altitude above sea level and at such distance from the sea that it will be removed from those fogs, which are so highly inimical to the welfare of the ex-service men who are suffering from this dreadful disease. Many sites are available but none are acquired. The Veterans' Bureau, which has that vital matter in charge, should no longer defer action in the matter. There are to-day, as any fair-minded investigation will disclose, a large number of cases of tubercular patients in and around the Los Angeles territory who will not accept treatment at the Sawtelle Hospital, because they know that that climate is unfitted for the treatment of the disease with which they are afflicted. This question is one that must be threshed out sooner or later in Congress, if those in charge of the Veterans' Bureau in Washington and elsewhere in responsible positions continue to ignore all entreaty and assume an attitude that can only be interpreted by the ex-service men as meaning that the bureau exists for the purpose of satisfying chambers of commerce and others who are desirous of having these facilities developed in localities where they will be of commercial benefit to those in the particular locality rather than for the recovery of disabled ex-service men, for which the bureau was created.

It is a shameful situation which Congress and the country will not tolerate much longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, as I said a few minutes ago, many months ago the American Legion in the Department of California, after thorough investigation, went on record by unanimous vote, in the passage of a resolution, against the further placement of tubercular patients in these foggy localities. No action whatever has been taken by the bureau to provide facilities elsewhere in the Los Angeles territory. The unwarranted action which has caused further development of tubercular hospital facilities for World War veterans at Sawtelle has been the source of criticism from one end of California to the other. There are none so deaf as those who will not hear. The matter has even been taken to the President, himself, although I can not believe all the information ever reached him. I have no doubt, if this condition continues to exist, that many Members of this Congress who do not desire and who generally oppose congressional investigations, will be compelled to demand an investigation of the Veterans' Bureau in order that matters of this kind may be speedily remedied. The bureau does not exist other than for the welfare of the veterans for which it was instituted, and if the recent shake-up does not cure the disgraceful situation existing, at a very early date Congress should take such drastic measures as may be necessary to protect those of the Nation's defenders who have fallen victims to the most terrible of all diseases—the great white plague. [Applause.] I propose to again discuss this subject on the floor and to disclose letters and other data affecting the tubercular hospital situation in California. I hear many rumblings and much criticism from substantial Members of this House from various sections of the country, but the Veterans' Bureau seems deaf, dumb, and blind to all facts and entreaty. It is time this House should ask itself what we propose to do about it, for that is what the country is doing and the country desires an answer. [Applause.]

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I have been trying all day to get a few words in on the river and harbor appropriation. I have a vital interest in the matter, not a selfish, personal interest, but one of those interests that affect the entire State of Texas. I want also to say a few words with reference to the Bureau of the Budget. I am in favor of economy. I think that is the common judgment of this House, but I believe the American people and all of us make a distinction between those ordinary current departmental expenditures and those other expenditures that really mean a permanent investment for the American people. I believe in drastic economy in the former class of expenditures, but I think the American people to-day are expecting us to cut down current expenses—those expenses for which there is nothing to show at the end of the current year—but where we can make permanent investments that mean something to the American people that the American people are in favor of it.

The project that I am interested in is the Corpus Christi project, and I am referring to it merely as an instance of some of the other projects carried in the estimates of the Chief of Engineers. The Corpus Christi project means a general benefit to all of the people of the country, and especially to the people of Texas. It means the establishment of a port of entry to northern Mexico. I call attention to the fact that the establishment of a port at Corpus Christi means that you are saving in railroad transportation to the northern part of Mexico more than 200 miles, you are saving more than 600 miles when you are carrying products from north Atlantic ports or the ports on the Mississippi River, and more than 200 miles as compared with the next closest port—Galveston, Tex.

I referred to it merely as an illustration of the fact that river and harbor development is a great national policy. I believe in the power of the Bureau of the Budget; I believe in the Bureau of the Budget. I think that their powers, within proper limitation, are all right, but I do not believe that where the limitation of appropriation affects national policies that we ought to defer to them, and for the stronger reason do I believe that it is absolutely a concession of congressional power to them to permit them to control appropriations where the effect of those appropriations is to nullify and to invalidate congressional action. Now, that is exactly the proposition that we have to-day, taking the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget as contrasted with the recommendations of the Board of Engineers of the Army. If we are going to surrender to the Bureau of the Budget the right to say whether or not appropriations shall be made, or the amount of such appropriation, so as to defeat the right of Congress to say whether or not appropriation shall be made, I think that you are doing a thing that is wrong. [Applause.]

I have the highest regard and admiration for the Appropriations Committee and for all of the members making up that great committee, and I have an especial regard and admiration for its distinguished chairman. His independence, impartiality, and his scrupulous fidelity and devotion to the public service ideally fit him for the position he occupies. He holds the national purse strings as tightly as does the proverbial Scotchman the strings of his own private purse. I agree with the committee and with the country that at this time more than ever before in our history governmental expenses must be kept within reasonable limits, and that, I believe, is also the common judgment of Congress. But I am also quite sure that Congress and the American people expect this Government to function as a real 100 per cent going concern and not as a nation fearing bankruptcy. There is a distinct difference between those financial outlays that go to pay the ordinary running expenses of the Government for which there is nothing to show at the end of the fiscal year, and those other governmental expenditures in the nature of permanent investments which insure substantial returns to the American public. With reference to the first class of expenditures, retrenchment can hardly be too drastic, whereas the other class of expenditures may well be made upon a much more liberal basis.

Money expended, if wisely spent, for river and harbor development and improvement is strictly a national investment and insures large returns to the American people. The people are not complaining so much of the size of the public expenditures as they are of the manner and objects of such expenditures. No national investment insures safer or larger returns nor insures benefits more equitably distributed among and enjoyed by so many of our people than do investments for river and harbor improvements. The projects are first scientifically passed upon by the Board of Engineers and, ordinarily upon the board's approval only, enacted into law. These are the first important steps, and when they have been taken and Congress has authorized the projects it seems to follow logically that Congress ought to take the next step and make the appropriation necessary to carry its order into effect. The amount of appropriation reasonably necessary to be made should be based upon well-considered, expert estimates of the Chief of Engineers. That only should be the extent of his power and function. It should be, and in fact is, for Congress alone to decide whether or not to appropriate. That decision was, in fact, impliedly reached when the authorization was made, because an authorization without a substantial appropriation is a manifest absurdity. When the money is appropriated, it should be spent under the control of honest, capable men, removed from all political influence. Our present system of supervision and control of river and harbor work by the Chief of Engineers of the Army meets that high standard of economical and honest spending, and the United States Government as a result is receiving 100 cents return for every dollar spent. One hears only words of praise of the Chief of Engineers and of his staff as to efficiency, impartiality, independence, and honesty. We are no longer subject to the charge of pork-barrel politics in connection with river and harbor appropriations. The country has learned that we are operating on a safe, sane, scientific, and businesslike basis, and much of the credit for this change of public sentiment is due to the efficiency of the present system of river and harbor improvement under War Department direction.

The Appropriations Committee first adopted the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget of $27,000,000 for rivers and harbors, and later increased the amount to $37,000,000. Both amounts were arbitrarily arrived at, and neither was the result of a fair consideration of the proposition nor in harmony with the estimates of the Chief of Engineers, and both in direct conflict with the acts of Congress authorizing the several projects included within the estimates of the Chief of Engineers. The Appropriations Committee's increase of the Budget Bureau's estimate from $27,000,000 to $37,000,000 does not strengthen the committee's case but weakens it, for its act must be construed as a repudiation of the Budget estimate, and at the same time the $10,000,000 increase is but a sop thrown out to defeat the pending amendment, and partakes of all the characteristics of a pork-barrel appropriation.

The Bureau of the Budget has an important function to perform in the scheme of economical administration, but I am bold to say that its warmest advocate will not claim for it the power to invalidate acts of Congress by failure to provide the means for putting in force such congressional acts. The bureau is an agency of the Chief Executive, and the latter's constitutional control over the legislative branch is exhausted with the veto. If we give the Budget Bureau the power, or any other agency of the Executive the power, or what amounts to the same thing, if we permit any such agency to exercise the power of withholding or denying appropriations to projects authorized by Congress, we are extending the veto power to an unheard of and dangerous extent. There is no word in the Budget act that would warrant the assertion that such control over Congress was intended to be conferred upon the Bureau of the Budget, and such a thought could not have been in the mind of the President nor in the mind of Congress; but the danger does not lie in a misconstruction of the words of the act, for their plain intent forecloses all such danger. The loss of legislative power may come from congressional acquiescence and self-surrender of power as well as from express limitation or delegation. It is so easy and such a temptation for one body to surrender a power if it can thereby be relieved of tedious labor and responsibility.

My interpretation of the Budget act is that the bureau thereby established has recommendatory functions only, similar to, but certainly of no greater force and effect than, the recommendations carried in a President's message. The Budget Bureau's recommendations are submitted to the President for his approval and, when approved, become in fact the President's message, no more, no less, by the very terms of the Budget law. These recommendations are entitled to have influence and weight with the Congress according to whether or not the recommendations are conclusions based upon more information or less information than is available to Congress. If based upon less information, the bureau's recommendations are entitled to little or no weight with Congress; if upon more or better information, Congress may, and naturally will, attach weight to the bureau's recommendations, but always and in either case only so much weight as it will. Ordinarily Congress will follow the bureau's recommendations, when accompanied by a statement of facts, for appropriations relating to strictly departmental expenses—that is to say, routine administration expenditure. Congress is, in fact, accepting the statement of fact and adopting the conclusions, because the conclusion is merely the mathematical result of the addition of the various items included in the statement of facts. When, on the other hand, the Budget recommendations refer to expenditures involving a national governmental policy and the putting into effect of such policy, and a fortiori, if involving or affecting past acts of Congress so as to wholly or partially invalidate such acts, congressional self-respect demands that the recommendations be wholly disregarded. This is self-evident, unless Congress proposes to delegate its legislative authority to the Bureau of the Budget.

The case of the bureau's recommendations with reference to appropriations for rivers and harbors is just such a case. Congress has authorized certain projects, and the Chief of Engineers estimates that it will require $56,589,910 for the next fiscal year to put Congress's order into effect. The Bureau of the Budget arbitrarily cuts that estimate to $27,000,000. The Appropriations Committee just as arbitrarily adopts that amount, but later confesses its own error or poor judgment, as well as that of the Budget Bureau, by again arbitrarily raising the amount to $37,000,000. The result of such a cut, of course, means that there must be a proportionate partial nullification of all of the projects authorized, or a total nullification of some of the projects, inasmuch as the Chief of Engineers has the power under existing law, to make allotments. In other words, where lump-sum appropriations are made the Chief of Engineers is authorized either to thinly spread the money appropriated to cover all the projects, or to allot to a part of the projects that in his judgment are most important, all the money necessary to complete them, and thus be forced to allot nothing at all to the remaining projects which were also authorized by acts of Congress. It is a fair and reasonable assumption that he will not follow the first course, because it is unscientific and directly opposed to his own recommended estimates of proper annual expenditures for each specified project. Forced then to the latter course the Chief of Engineers is required under existing law to exercise legislative power in the selection of the favored project. This is an extreme and unusual grant of power to an executive administrative branch of the Government, which in effect amounts to a delegation or rather a passive surrender of legislative power to another department or bureau. If it is the purpose of Congress to extend this limited power so granted to the Chief of Engineers, to the Budget Bureau, so as to cover appropriations in all departments of Government it ought to be clearly understood. I have not yet convinced myself that Congress so intends. Unquestionably the delegation and surrender of power by a large and indifferent and perhaps indolent body such as Congress is, to a small and select compact committee or bureau of greater industry and possibly greater average ability than the whole body, has its advantages on the theory that "too many cooks spoil the broth." It also has its dangers. Under our system of representative Government a wise statesmanship favors a very close connection and intimate relationship between the congressional Representative and his constituency, and is willing to sacrifice the hope of legislative perfection if assured of legislative responsibility. The fair and reasonable construction of the budget act that I have tried to place upon the law does no violence to that theory, and I hope that construction will prevail.

Before I close my remarks on the Budget Bureau, let me call attention to a glaring inconsistency on the part of the Appropriation Committee and the bureau with reference to the rivers and harbors item in the bill. The bureau and the committee both recommended a lump-sum appropriation for rivers and harbors knowing the power and control of the Chief of Engineers over that kind of an appropriation. They know that the Chief of Engineers has the selection of the projects to be improved and the power to make the allotments, and it seems strange that they are willing to accept his judgment on this larger matter involving not only scientific knowledge but a wide discretion, but they ask the House to wholly disregard the recommendations of this same officer in the matter of his estimates of appropriations necessary for authorized projects for the next fiscal year. If he is qualified—as he is—to allot the lump-sum appropriation, he is also qualified to wisely and safely advise Congress on the amount of proper appropriation. In the absence of expert testimony to the contrary the Chief of Engineers' recommendations ought to be conclusive. I know that I shall be concluded thereby, and therefor vote for the amendment increasing the appropriation to $56,589,910.

I have heard it said that "an honest confession is good for the soul," and therefore I may frankly confess that a somewhat selfish interest prompts me to favor the increase of appropriations for rivers and harbors. Of course, I have no personal selfish interest, and what I mean to convey is that my interest is for the district I represent. It is the duty of a Congressman to be active and work for the general welfare of the Nation, even where local interests are not involved, but it is especially the duty of a Congressman as it is his pleasure to do all in his power to advance the particular interests of his district where the general interests of a large section are also involved.

The pending bill provides for an appropriation of $37,000,000 for rivers and harbors. The amount necessary to take care of the projects that have had congressional authorization, according to the estimates of the Chief of Engineers, is $56,589,910. If the former amount is appropriated by Congress, it is fair to assume that so large a part thereof will have to be allotted to the larger seaports on the Atlantic coast that I have become fearful there will be no part of the appropriation available for the project that lies nearest my heart, and, I may also add, one of the most important and certainly most deserving projects in the Nation. I refer to the Corpus Christi project, in the fourteenth district, which I have the honor to represent.

General Taylor testified to its importance. At page 912, part 2, of the hearings, he says: "I see no reason why a port at Corpus Christi, comparable to Galveston, should not develop in the future"; and my good and genial friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], a member of the subcommittee that framed this bill, and who measures his words with great caution, was so impressed with the project which I had theretofore briefly presented to the subcommittee that he was impelled when referring to it in his interrogation of General Taylor to state most impressively, "General, describe generally that important project." Keeping in mind General Taylor's comparison of it with the great Galveston port, and Congressman STAFFORD's designation of it as "that important project," I will be pardoned in repeating that the Corpus Christi project is, in fact, one of more than ordinary importance.

I wish the membership of this House could understand the importance of the Corpus Christi port project to the State of Texas, and especially to southwest Texas. Its development has been the hope of all the people of that great section for 40 years or more, and they feel that their hope is about to be realized. As an evidence of their good faith, local interests have guaranteed 70 per cent of the cost of the project, or approximately $3,500,000, as against $1,394,800 on the part of the Government. All wharfage, docks, warehouses, and terminal facilities will be municipally owned and controlled, insuring fair treatment and service to all shippers and railroads. The city of Corpus Christi and Nueces County have already obligated themselves in the sum of $1,000,000 to acquire these facilities.

Four railroads with a combined mileage of 2,381 miles have terminals in Corpus Christi: The San Antonio & Aransas Pass; the San Antonio, Uvalde & Gulf; the Gulf Coast Lines; and the Texas-Mexican. The first two lines run north to San Antonio, Tex., connecting there with the trunk lines of the Southern Pacific; Missouri, Kansas & Texas; and the International & Great Northern Railroads. The Gulf Coast Lines extend from Houston, passing through Corpus Christi, to the Mexican border at Brownsville, Tex., opposite Matamoras, Mexico; the Texas-Mexican extends from Corpus Christi to Laredo, Tex., opposite Nueva Laredo, Mexico. Brownsville is 150 miles from Corpus Christi, and Laredo is 160 miles.

The completion of this deep-water port will develop a great American trade with Mexico, especially with the north and central sections, which include the richest part of our sister Republic. This takes in the great mining sections of Mexico, one of the greatest mining machinery users of the world. Supplemented by Ohio and Mississippi River improvement, steel products could be transported entirely by water from Pittsburgh, Pa., to the very doors of northern Mexico. Machinery and other goods shipped to that portion of Mexico from Atlantic ports or by river transportation to the Gulf of Mexico is brought 180 miles nearer to the Mexican border by way of Corpus Christi than by way of Galveston, Tex., and 600 miles nearer than by way of New Orleans. Corpus Christi will also have every advantage in respect to northern Mexico trade over the Mexican ports of Tampico and Vera Cruz, which are in the extreme southern part of Mexico, poorly and distantly connected as these ports are by rail with the northern part of the Mexican Republic. Corpus Christi is so situated geographically as to make it the port of entry for all of northern Mexico, and a great and profitable Mexican trade awaits the completion of this port.

A glance at the map of Texas reveals that two-thirds of its area lies closer to Corpus Christi than to Galveston or any other Texas port, and that two-thirds is the richest and most rapidly developing part of our great State. Within 100 miles of Corpus Christi a half-million bales of cotton are raised annually, all of which will be shipped by the nearest water outlet, saving hundreds of thousands of dollars to the cotton farmers. Trainloads of onions, cabbages, and citrus fruits are produced in the Rio Grande Valley each year. This section is aptly called the "Magic Valley," where three crops a year are raised in succession, year in and year out, and where the soil is so rich that commercial fertilizers are unknown and unnecessary.

Tens of thousands of acres of this irrigated valley are producing continually vast quantities of fruits and vegetables. Frequently these products are left to rot in the fields or along the railroad tracks on account of congestion in railroad traffic, and often when shipped the railroad rates on the long hauls are so excessive as to leave no returns to the producer. A short rail haul to deep water and then to the eastern market will solve the problem for the producer and release to the inland shipper who can not avail himself of water rates cars for his own goods.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1921, about 130,000 bales of botton were produced in the territory immediately contiguous to Corpus Christi. During the same period the four railroads serving Corpus Christi handled in and out of the city 152,442 tons of freight of all kinds and classes, 91,227 tons being inbound and 61,125 tons being outbound. Railroad traffic officials state that not less than 40 per cent of this tonnage, or 60,976 tons, could and would have been moved by water transportation had proper facilities existed at Corpus Christi.

J. A. Brown, freight agent of the Gulf Coast Lines, on December 30, 1921, in a communication to the Deep Water Harbor Association of South and West Texas, stated:

Our lines west of Houston could and would arrange, if fuel could be brought into Corpus Christi by water, to use between 400,000 and 450,000 barrels of fuel oil through that port per year. We purchase our oil delivered at Galveston and at Houston at a cost from Galveston, delivered to us at Algoa, of 9.3 cents per barrel. We then haul it past Sinton to Kingsville at a transportation cost which we might reasonably estimate at 5 mills per ton per mile for approximately 180 miles additional haul, as compared with the haul we would have if handled through Corpus Christi; so that we might reasonably figure that, as against receiving the oil through Galveston, via Algoa, it costs us 23.25 cents per barrel, or, in round numbers, $95,000 per year, more to receive this oil through Galveston via Algoa than it would cost if we could get it through Corpus Christi.

He writes further, under the same date:

We have been endeavoring for some time to figure a plan under which we might, without seriously jeopardizing the rate situation in Texas, assist the irrigation companies in the Rio Grande Valley to get fuel oil at a reduced cost. They use approximately 500,000 barrels per year. A port at Corpus Christi would immediately solve that difficulty and we could and would establish a rate which would save them in the neighborhood of 45 or 50 cents per barrel under present transportation costs; estimating 500,000 barrels per year, at a saving of 45 cents per barrel, would mean a net saving to the irrigation companies which would be passed on to the farmers and shippers of the lower Rio Grande Valley of approximately $225,000 per year. We produce in the Rio Grande Valley each year several carloads of onions, practically all of which, under normal conditions, move to New York and the eastern seaboard through Galveston, thence via water. A very considerable saving might be made in transportation cost by utilizing the port at Corpus Christi.

San Antonio, the metropolis of Texas, with a population of 175,000, is only 140 miles from Corpus Christi. It has been estimated by its chamber of commerce that on account of the difference in railroad freight rates between San Antonio and Galveston, as against San Antonio and Corpus Christi, a port at the latter point will save to San Antonio alone, on the present volume of business, more than $900,000 annually. San Antonio is as vitally interested in the early prosecution and completion of the deep-water project at Corpus Christi as is the port city itself.

It will make of San Antonio a trading and distributing center such as can hardly be foreseen at this time, and I repeat a prediction I made several months ago, that San Antonio and Corpus Christi will become the twin-city metropolis of the great Southwest. The benefit of a deep-water port at Corpus Christi to the farming and live-stock interests of all that section will be enormous. It will cause thousands of acres of our virgin soil now lying in pastures and used for grazing purposes only to be cleared and plowed and put in a state of cultivation, and all that section made to blossom as a rose and make it the garden spot of the world. Where the forks-in-the-road country stores now stand will spring villages, villages will grow into towns, towns into cities, and cities will double and treble their population, and there will be happiness and prosperity for all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. SISSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas, chairman of the subcommittee, a question. Mr. Chairman, there is some little confusion arising here. I understood from the chairman [Mr. ANTHONY] that there would be no vote taken on this bill until morning; that we would read the bill up to the point of a vote, and now there seems to be some conflict in regard to that, and I think that the Members ought to be informed.

Mr. ANTHONY. My idea is to finish the bill in the Committee of the Whole House, to go as far as we can up to the point of a vote, and then adjourn until to-morrow.

Mr. SISSON. That is the information I had and so gave to Members on this side. I have no objection to that course being taken, but I want the membership of the House to understand it and have no confusion about it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will say that yesterday afternoon the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NEWTON], and myself had an interview with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MADDEN. They did.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And my understanding was that there would be a final vote taken on the bill to-night. We have talked with a lot of men and they have made arrangements upon that basis and have engagements for to-morrow, and it would be a genuine hardship for them to have to stay here overnight under those circumstances. It will not take much longer to have the vote; the chairman of the subcommittee is always agreeable and pleasant——

Mr. ANTHONY. The intention on my part was to expedite the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Well, let us have a vote to-night.

Mr. ANTHONY. There will be probably two or three votes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. We can have the votes and dispose of it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For every expenditure requisite for and incident to the maintenance and operation, sanitation, and civil government of the Panama Canal and Canal Zone, including the following: Compensation of all officials and employees; foreign and domestic newspapers and periodicals; law books not exceeding $500; textbooks and books of reference; printing and binding, including printing of annual report; rent and personal services in the District of Columbia; purchase or exchange of typewriting, adding, and other machines; purchase or exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles; claims for damages to vessels passing through the locks of the Panama Canal, as authorized by the Panama Canal act; claims for losses of or damages to property arising from the conduct of authorized business operations; claims for damages to property arising from the maintenance and operation, sanitation, and civil government of the Panama Canal; acquisition of land and land under water, as authorized in the Panama Canal act; expenses incurred in assembling, assorting, storing, repairing, and selling material, machinery, and equipment heretofore or hereafter purchased or acquired for the construction of the Panama Canal which are unserviceable or no longer needed, to be reimbursed from the proceeds of such sales; expenses incident to conducting hearings and examining estimates for appropriations on the Isthmus; expenses incident to any emergency arising because of calamity by flood, fire, pestilence, or like character not foreseen or otherwise provided for herein; per diem allowance in lieu of subsistence when prescribed by the Governor of the Panama Canal to persons engaged in field work or traveling on official business, pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914; and for such other expenses not in the United States as the Governor of the Panama Canal may deem necessary best to promote the maintenance and operation, sanitation, and civil government of the Panama Canal, all to be expended under the direction of the Governor of the Panama Canal and accounted for as follows.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ARENTZ: Page 115, line 4, after the word "vehicles," insert "including operation of barge ferry now in operation by the War Department at Pedro Miguel across the canal each day for the use of the general public traveling in either direction."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order? I think this is a very important matter.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, on a reservation of the point of order I want to say that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], who has been studying for several weeks on this bill and who is one of the hardest working Members of this House, can not speak for five minutes on the bill. It occurs to me that it is a little out of order to take up a lot of time on extraneous matters that have no connection with the bill. The gentleman from Wisconsin was denied time when he had been working on this bill for three weeks. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, on page 337 of the hearings appears this dialogue:

Mr. ANTHONY. Where are these 9,000 troops stationed?

General WELLS. There is one Infantry regiment on the west side of the canal at old Camp Gaillard, and part of it spills over into Empire. The rest are on the east side of the canal. The Coast Artillery garrisons are at the termini of the canal, Forts Randolph, Sherman, and Grant. Another Infantry regiment is at Camp Clayton on the Miraflores dump and one regiment is a Gatun. The engineers, the medical units, and the Signal Corps are at Corozal.

Mr. ANTHONY. The force is pretty well distributed over the Canal Zone?

General WELLS. Yes, sir. There is an Infantry regiment at Gatun on the Atlantic end and one at Clayton on the Pacific end and one on the west side of Camp Gaillard.

This means that there is an Army camp on the west side of the Panama Canal. Men and supplies must be transported from time to time—in fact, daily—to the east side of the canal, where the commissaries, warehouses, and cities are located on the Canal Zone, and Panama City, the capital of the Republic of Panama, is situated. There is a well-traveled concrete road from Panama to Pedro Miguel, to the very edge of the canal. A barge ferry, located at Pedro Miguel above the lock, operates between the hours of 4.30 in the morning and 7 o'clock in the morning for the convenience of the military camp of Gaillard. And when asked by members of the congressional party recently at Panama—and remember this question was asked of two generals, a man high in naval affairs in the Canal Zone and of an executive officer close to the Governor of the Canal Zone—they stated that the tug and accompanying barge comprising the ferry had a pilot and a deckhand and an engineer and two soldiers were stationed at either side of the canal to raise and lower the short incline to meet the variable height of the water, there was not sufficient fuel or money appropriated by Congress with which to purchase sufficient fuel to operate this ferry for the transportation of the general public from the east side of the canal to the west side of the canal. On this account it was said the ferry was only in operation a few hours each morning for the services of the Army and no provision was made for the transportation of the general public.

Even under these circumstances an Army officer located on the east side, when he desires to go on the west side of the canal can not find anyone to give him permission to travel on this barge, and those on the west side of the canal at Guillard, who wished to go to Panama, do so only between the hours specified.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENTZ. I would like to complete my remarks. Then I will yield. I have only a few minutes.

The Panama Canal at its narrowest point is 300 feet wide. It divides the Republic of Panama into two parts.

The most productive portion of the Republic of Panama is on the west side of the canal. There is a road running through Pedro Miguel, through Empire, to the outskirts or the limits of the Canal Zone. Beyond that point the country is jungle. A road would be built from the interior of this western half of Panama to connect with this road if a means of crossing the canal was assured. The people of the city of Panama, the Panamanians, or the general public are not given permission to travel across the canal on the large ferry maintained by the United States Army at Pedro Miguel and in operation during the hours noted. There is absolutely no provision made for the passage across the canal in the treaty of the United States with Panama.

Here we have a territory, a country, a republic, divided in two, separated by 300 feet of water, and yet the American people, the American Congress, who have done so much in a constructive way for the world and the Republic of Panama in the shape of the Panama Canal that will stand forever as a monument to the industry, engineering ability, and wonderful spirit of the American people, allowing a condition to exist here on this great work alongside of the Pedro Miguel locks in the form of a ferry operated in the most antiquated manner.

Hand jacks operated by two men and the use of wedges raise and lower the incline approaches on the ferry barge to meet the variable height of the landing on either side of the canal. Several weeks ago a soldier lost his life while jacking up this incline or gangway. Here may be seen twentieth century engineering and fourteenth century methods side by side.

The principal point I wish to make to my colleagues is the fact that there is no canal crossing between the Atlantic and Pacific. When they want to go on the west side of the canal the Panamanians and the general public can not get permission to cross the canal on the ferry mentioned except after considerable negotiations with the military authorities. In order to reach the territory of the Republic of Panama west of the canal, and this great area contains the greatest agricultural and grazing area in the nation, one must go by sea from either the Pacific or the Atlantic end of the canal. No highway traverses the Isthmus connecting Colon and Panama.

I just wanted to present this case to Congress to determine whether the Congress, the United States Army, or the Panama Canal officials are justified in closing traffic to the west side of the canal by limiting the operation of the only ferry on the canal to a few hours per day and then allowing only the military to use the same.

I feel justified in offering my amendment and trust no one will object to it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that the amendment is legislation. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance and operation of the Panama Canal: Salary of the governor, $10,000; purchase, inspection, delivery, handling, and storing of material, supplies, and equipment for issue to all departments of the Panama Canal, the Panama Railroad, other branches of the United States Government, and for authorized sales, payment in lump sums of not exceeding the amounts authorized by the injury compensation act approved September 7, 1916, to alien cripples who are now a charge upon the Panama Canal by reason of injuries sustained while employed in the construction of the Panama Canal, $5,079,683, together with all moneys arising from the conduct of business operations authorized by the Panama Canal act.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANTHONY: Page 116, line 18, after the word "act," change the period to a semicolon and add: "and the Governor of the Panama Canal is authorized, in addition to the amount herein appropriated, to incur obligations in an amount not exceeding $850,000 for the construction at a total cost of not exceeding $1,520,000 of a new power plant at Miraflores."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, this refers to the construction of a new power plant and auxiliary steam power plant at Miraflores. When the bill came from the Budget it had a provision asking for $200,000 in money and an authorization for $650,000 to proceed with the reconstruction of the existing steam plant at Miraflores. The subcommittee at the time thought it well to defer this appropriation until they had the time further to investigate the situation at Miraflores, and since the bill has been prepared and has come before the House the Governor of the Canal Zone has visited the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and upon his urgent request, supplemented with the best of arguments, the committee have decided that it is really an emergency proposition, and therefore have asked that this authorization be included in the bill.

The situation is this: At Miraflores the locks are operated by the hydroelectric power which is generated there, but at certain times in the year, the governor says eight or ten times every year, they have to depend upon the auxiliary steam plant in the operation of the locks. He says that the boilers in this steam plant were originally taken from Gatun when the dam was constructed. He says they have reached a point where they are practically played out. At any time the auxiliary steam plant when called upon is liable to break down. He says if it should fail to work at one of these times and a ship should go to the bottom of one of the Miraflores locks it would probably break its back and the Government would be involved in damages of a million and a half, or perhaps even greater damages, and interminable delay in the operation of the canal would result. So upon his recommendation the committee have reconsidered this item and will ask the House to grant this authorization, so that the governor may place the contract for the material involved.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the foregoing appropriations for the Panama Canal shall be used to pay the salary for any position except mechanics and laborers at a rate in excess of the rate in effect for such position on June 30, 1922.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, on page 117 I move to strike out lines 12 to 15, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANTHONY: Page 117, strike out lines 12 to 15, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

None of the funds of the Panama Railroad Co. or the Panama Railroad Steamship Line shall be used for new construction pertaining to the operation of the Panama Canal.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the last paragraph in the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. What point of order does the gentleman make?

Mr. DENISON. I make the point of order that the last paragraph is new legislation in an appropriation bill and that there is no authority or justification for it in this bill. It provides that none of the funds of the Panama Railroad Co. or the Panama Railroad Steamship Line shall be used for new construction pertaining to the operation of the Panama Canal. This bill does not make any appropriations for the Panama Railroad Co. or the Panama Railroad Steamship Line, and there is no justification for this legislation in this bill. Nor is it germane to that part of the bill or to any other provision of the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. DENISON. I reserve it.

Mr. BLANTON. Wherein does it change existing law?

Mr. ANTHONY. In past years there have been large surpluses in the funds, both of the Panama Railroad Co. and the Panama Railroad Steamship Line. To-day there are large surpluses in the treasuries of those corporations. The capital stock of those corporations is entirely owned by the Government of the United States. To all intents and purposes these funds are Government funds. Under existing law the Governor of the Canal Zone has available in his hands the entire surplus of these organizations to use in any new construction on the Panama Canal that he may determine upon without consulting Congress in any particular. The committee thought it was entirely wise to place this restriction in the bill, with the idea that Congress should control all of the funds pertaining to the Panama Canal.

Mr. DENISON. Under existing law the Governor of the Canal Zone has not that authority. I do not think the gentleman intended to make that statement. It is the President of the United States who has that authority.

Mr. ANTHONY. The President exercises his authority down there through the Governor of the Panama Canal. It is simply a question whether or not these funds are Government funds.

Mr. DENISON. Yes; the President usually exercises his authority on the Canal Zone through the Secretary of War or the Governor of the Canal Zone. But the Panama Canal act confers the authority to expend the funds of the Panama Railroad Co. on the President of the United States, for purposes connected with the Panama Canal.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I make the point of order. The Panama Railroad Co. is a New York corporation. It has its own funds which it uses, and we are not making any appropriation for that railroad, and have not made any for years. I do not know that we ever did. Certainly there is no such appropriation in this bill, and under the Panama Canal act Congress gave the President the power to use the funds of that corporation, of which the Governor of the Panama Canal is the president ex officio; Congress gave him the power to use those funds wherever in his judgment he thought advisable in connection with the Panama Canal. This provision is an attempt to change that provision of the Panama Canal act in an appropriation bill, which the committee can not properly do. If that law of the Canal Zone is to be changed, it ought to be done after full and careful consideration by the legislative committee that has jurisdiction over Panama Canal legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct the Chairman's attention to the authorization of appropriation found in the paragraph on page 118, beginning in line 12:

In addition to the foregoing sums there is appropriated for the fiscal year 1924 for expenditures and reinvestment under the several heads of appropriation aforesaid, without being covered into the Treasury of the United States, all moneys received by the Panama Canal from services rendered or materials and supplies furnished to the United States, the Panama Railroad Co., the Canal Zone government, or to their employees, respectively, or to the Panama Government—

And so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. That may be a good argument as to the merits of the question, but it does not affect the fund in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. It directly affects the funds that under this bill are authorized to be expended for various purposes authorized in this bill. That authorization enables the funds arising from these activities to be applied to the appropriations herein authorized, and to that extent increased, the same as if specific amounts were voted. Those funds are as much subject to control under limitation of amendment as those specifically authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The provision in the paragraph is not the present law.

Mr. STAFFORD. We carry it in this bill. I respectfully call the Chair's attention to the fact that there was no point of order made against the provision on page 118. It was subject to a point of order, but no point of order having been raised, this is law as far as any proposed limitations on the expenditure of funds is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will not contend that it is existing law until passed by both Houses and signed by the President. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 119, after line 12, insert the following: "None of the funds authorized in this act are to be used by the Panama Railroad Co. or the Panama Steamship Co. for new construction pertaining to the operations of the Panama Canal."

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk calls attention to the fact there was a paragraph which was read but was passed over.

Mr. ANTHONY. That was an amendment suggested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] to the item of transportation under the Quartermaster Corps. I have conferred with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], and he said he was satisfied to let the language remain as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania, for a few days, on account of illness;

To Mr. LYON, for five days, on account of sickness; and

To Mr. BANKHEAD, for five days, on account of illness in his family.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3177. An act declaring a portion of the West Fork of the South Branch of the Chicago River, Cook County, Ill., to be a nonnavigable stream;

S. 4031. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Little Calumet River, in Cook County, State of Illinois, at or near the village of Riverdale, in said county;

S. J. Res. 258. Joint resolution providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress;

S. 4032. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Illinois, department of public works and buildings, division of highways, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Kankakee River, in the county of Kankakee, State of Illinois, between section 5, township 30 north, and section 32, township 31 north, range 13 east, of the third principal meridian;

S. 4033. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Illinois, department of public works and buildings, division of highways, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Kankakee River, in the county of Kankakee, State of Illinois, between section 6, township 30 north, and section 31, township 31 north, range 12 east of the third principal meridian;

S. 4069. An act to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge across the Colorado River near Yuma, Ariz.;

S. 4096. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the enunciation of the Monroe doctrine;

S. 4133. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of North Dakota and the State of Minnesota, the county of Pembina, N. Dak., and the county of Kittson, Minn., or any of them, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North at or near the city of Pembina, N. Dak.;

S. 4131. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Sioux City, Iowa, and to Union County, in the State of South Dakota, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Big Sioux River at a point about 2½ miles north of the mouth of said river, between section 14, township 89, range 48, Woodbury County, Iowa, and section 15, township 89, range 48, Union County, S. Dak.; and

S. 4172. An act to authorize the building of a bridge across the Great Pee Dee River in South Carolina.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the Dempsey amendment increasing the appropriation for rivers and harbors.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

There was no demand for a separate vote on any other amendment.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment by the gentleman from New York, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 103, line 8, strike out the figures "$37,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$56,589,910."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were 93 ayes and 29 noes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I challenge the vote because there is no quorum present.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, the House dividing, and there were 26 ayes and 88 noes.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 198, nays 73, answered "present" 3, not voting 154, as follows:

The name of Mr. KELLEY of Michigan was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. HULL. I am.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit, and I am a member of the committee. I am opposed to the bill and have been opposed to the bill for a good many years.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Mississippi. The gentleman from Mississippi offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SISSON moves to recommit the bill H. R. 13793 to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report it back forthwith with the following amendments: On page 16, line 18, change the amount "$53,494,207" to "$43,500,000," and on page 16, line 20, strike out the words "and twenty-five," and on that motion demands the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SISSON) there were—ayes 43, noes 167.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 20, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

6950. Also, petition of R. A. Middaugh, fire marshal for the State of North Dakota, urging the passage of House bill 13448, prohibiting the interstate shipment of nitrocellulose films after 1925; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 20, 1923.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, January 16, 1923.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary, George A. Sanderson, read the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 20, 1923.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS, a Senator from the State of Ohio, to perform the duties of the Chair to-day.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
President pro tempore.

Mr. WILLIS thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	George	Lodge	Ransdell
Ball	Gerry	McCormick	Reed, Pa.
Borah	Glass	McKellar	Sheppard
Brookhart	Hale	McKinley	Simmons
Bursum	Harreld	McLean	Smoot
Cameron	Harris	McNary	Spencer
Capper	Harrison	Moses	Sterling
Colt	Heflin	Nelson	Sutherland
Couzens	Johnson	New	Swanson
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Townsend
Curtis	Kellogg	Norbeck	Trammell
Dial	Kendrick	Norris	Underwood
Elkins	Keyes	Oddie	Wadsworth
Ernst	King	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Fernald	Ladd	Owen	Warren
Fletcher	La Follette	Phipps	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Poindexter	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to announce the unavoidable absence of his colleague [Mr. POMERENE], on account of illness, and wishes this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. DIAL. My colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained on account of illness in his family. I ask that this notice may continue through the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

DEALING IN COTTON FUTURES—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the other day I offered an amendment to the then pending bill to amend the cotton futures contract law. I have noticed in the newspapers since that time that it is said I tried to extend the number of grades tenderable on a contract. When I was a young man, just starting in life, a controversy arose in my town between the president of a female college and the editor of a newspaper upon the proper use of the letter "S" and the apostrophe. That controversy raged for six weeks in the papers. That taught me that it is a bad plan ever to disagree with the newspapers. So since that time, until now, if I said a proposition was black and the newspapers said it was white, I have just said, "Yes; I guess it is white," and have gone along about my business.

But, Mr. President, I am sorry I have been so incompetent in the last two years that I have failed even to get into the minds of the press what I am trying to do. Just in a sentence, there are 10 grades of cotton tenderable on a contract, with the right of the seller of the contract to tender any one or all of those 10 grades at his option. I am trying to make him specify which grade he would tender. As a compromise I am willing to go further and take the 10 grades and divide them into three classes and make him specify which class he will tender.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. DIAL. I will yield the floor in just a moment.

Mr. WARREN. I merely wanted to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. DIAL. Very well.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator if he has proposed any amendment to the appropriation bill now before the Senate?

Mr. DIAL. No; this is a personal explanation. In just a moment I shall conclude.

I am sorry I have not been able to get that idea into the minds of the press and the people. It reminds me of an Irishman who moved to my town a few years ago. The Irish, as is well known, are always polite. This particular one opened a dry goods store. A lady went in his store one morning while it was quite cold and thought she would have a little conversation with him. She said, "You are a stranger here, I believe?" "Yes, madam; I only moved here recently." She said, "You are a foreigner, I understand?" "Yes, madam; I was not born in the United States." "Oh, you are a Chinaman, I presume?" "Oh, no, madam; not a Chinaman." He escorted her to the door, opened it, and politely bowed her out. Then he turned around and said, "The ignorance of this country is appalling." So, Mr. President, that must be my condition if I can not get my proposition understood. The press has always been kind to me and exceedingly fair, so much so that I have no quarrel with it, and I am not going to criticize it now. My amendment deals with an exceedingly technical question. I expect to ask for its consideration as an independent measure at an early date. I am told by many Senators they will vote for it on its merits, but do not want to put it on other bills.

Heretofore I have been merely shaking the bushes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the amendment just referred to, which was offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the rural credits bill in regard to cotton exchanges, was defeated the other day. Many Members from the South who voted against the amendment have informed me that they also favor some legislation of that kind but were not certain that this exact amendment, without some changes, was the proper way to solve the problem. I want to say that I have talked to nearly all the Senators from the cotton-growing States, and we will undoubtedly get together before the next session of Congress if not during this session and agree on some plan by which, if we can do so, we will stop the New York Cotton Exchange from allowing the gambling that is done to depress the price of cotton. With less than 10,000,000 bales of cotton produced in the United States, the cotton exchanges sold in futures—nothing but gambling—more than a hundred million bales. If the exchanges can not be regulated so as to prevent such abuses and prevent gambling on the products raised by the sweat of the brow of the farmers who have suffered more than any other class of people of our country, we should do everything within our power to help the farmer.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 13793. An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RURAL-CREDIT FACILITIES.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I present a protest from the Country Bankers' Association of Georgia, in which they state that they are at this time performing the greatest service to the agricultural section of the country in the matter of credit, but that they have been ignored in the so-called rural-credit legislation in which everybody else except the country banker has been considered. I ask that their protest and Secretary Adams's letter to me may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. President, there are several hundred country banks in my State, and no city banks in the United States have rendered a greater or more conscientious service to the people. The officers and directors are nearly all farmers or interested in farming, and they will always do their duty as far as possible to help the farmers in time of need. It so happens that most of these men are my personal friends, and in visiting different sections and conferring with the farmers about conditions during and since the deflation period, which ruined financially thousands of our best farmers, these men who have suffered so much from the low price of the cotton and other products they produced have invariably told me their local bankers did their very best to help the farmers. I introduced bills in the Senate reducing the rediscount rate of the Federal reserve system and requiring the same rates for banks in the agricultural section as in the commercial centers, but this failed to pass. I offered a bill extending the time of rediscount on agricultural paper from 6 to 12 months, but this was defeated. I am glad we extended that time to nine months if we could not for a year, and this will help the farmers who depend upon local banks to carry their agricultural paper. I introduced last year a bill allowing these small banks to come in the Federal reserve system; it passed the Senate and is now before the House with a favorable report. If this bill passes, with the new law extending to nine months on rediscount on agricultural paper, it will help the farmers, bankers, and all classes in our section. I have also introduced and the Senate passed a bill amending the Federal warehouse system so as to greatly help the farmers in securing a low rate of interest and cheaper insurance on products of farmers stored in these Government licensed warehouses. I feel sure this bill will pass the House and become a law before Congress adjourns. When this bill becomes a law the farmer can use one of these warehouse receipts and borrow money in New York or elsewhere if the local bank can not accommodate him. Under this law a warehouse receipt will be so guarded and guaranteed that a banker can afford to make larger loans and at low rate of interest and will be safe in doing so. The warehouse receipt will show the grade of cotton and other products and will always be insured so as to protect anyone making loans.

There being no objection, the protest was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

THE COUNTRY BANKERS' ASSOCIATION OF GEORGIA,
Atlanta, Ga., January 18, 1923.

Hon. W. J. HARRIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HARRIS: Please accept my thanks for your kindness in supplying me with report No. 998 on the Capper bill (S. 4280, Calendar No. 974) and the copy of the Lenroot-Anderson bill.

I have also been favored by a friend with the Government Document No. 23937, giving the hearings on rural credits before the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate December 12 to December 22. This document includes the testimony and statements of Senators and Representatives, cooperative-marketing promoters, representatives of cotton, dairying, live-stock, grain, and general farming interests, chairmen of the War Finance Corporation and the Federal Farm Loan Board, but you look in vain for the statement or testimony of a representative of the country banks, which are expected in the final analysis to take care of the actual extension of credits to the individual farmers. The committee has failed to call into consultation the very people whom they expect to use as instruments in the execution of the measures the committee will recommend.

In order for any rural credits legislation to have the effect that is sought by those honestly trying to serve the interests of the farmer there must be either a Government fund from which loans may be made direct to the farmer—a method entailing so much expense in the establishment of new machinery and risks to the Government through probable inexperience of the newly appointed agents—or the established agencies that are expected to carry the new laws into effect must be satisfied with it to the extent that in their own interests they can utilize it.

Some of those making statements at the hearings referred to have undertaken to criticize the country banks for doing certain things and for failing to do certain things, and much has been said about the country banks at these hearings that was untrue. No matter how meritorious the bills may be the country banker will be naturally skeptical of a measure that was evolved out of conferences heavy with unjust criticism of his methods and motives and in which he has had no voice. Before becoming a party to same he will look carefully and at length for the joker contained in the measure. Do you not think it advisable before legislation is passed for the Senate and House committees to hear what he has to say? After all, he knows more of the actual conditions of rural credits than any of those heard from, and he is the one who above all others must have assurance that the bills are justly drawn to protect his interests as well as those of his customers.

I inclose herewith copy of resolutions adopted by the executive council of the Country Bankers' Association of Georgia last week. I trust that the suggestions may be followed and that before any measure proposed is finally passed country bankers representing various agricultural sections of the Union may be heard. Certainly none of the measures so far presented meet the situation to the extent needed and in the manner that would prove most beneficial to our agricultural interests.

I hope to be in Washington one day next week, and if so I hope to see you and others interested in this question.

Very truly yours,

L. R. ADAMS, Secretary.

Resolutions adopted by the Executive Council of the Country Bankers' Association of Georgia at a meeting held in Atlanta, January 11, 1923.

Whereas the Congress of the United States is at this time considering the matter of legislation to provide a permanent reserve of adequate credit to finance agricultural operations; and

Whereas the reports of hearings before committees having such legislation in charge indicate that advice in the matter has been largely received from sources exhibiting hostility to and expressing unfair criticism of the country banks of the United States and attributing motives for the methods pursued by the country banks in the conduct of their business that are not creditable to the country banks and not true in fact; and

Whereas there are only two ways in which the Government can extend credit to the farmers, i. e., (1) direct to the farmer; (2) through established financial agencies (the local country banks); and

Whereas the first method is impracticable and not advocated from any source of which we are aware, and the second method depends for its success very largely, if not wholly, upon its popularity with the country banks and whether or not in justice to themselves they can avail themselves of it; and

Whereas unless this result be achieved any plan must fail, no matter how meritorious it might be otherwise; and

Whereas if the country bankers are to be used as an important part of the plan adopted they are entitled to be heard in the formulation of such plans; and

Whereas we believe that information on this subject from bankers representing only country banks, the major part of whose dealings is with the agricultural interests, and whose primary and chief interests are identical with those of the farmers themselves, would be acceptable to Members of the Senate and House, who are seeking to place agriculture on a basis as nearly that of financial independence as possible: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we request the committees of the Senate and House having rural credits legislation under consideration to secure information and advice on this subject from bankers representing different agricultural sections of the country before finally passing any legislation on this point.

Resolved further, That, in our opinion, the basis of any legislation that will be of real benefit to the agricultural interests should be an intermediate credit system from one to three or from one to five years. The nine-month credit proposed in so many bills will not help much. The most helpful feature of the amendment to the War Finance Corporation act under which loans have been made for the past 18 months has been the statement that such loans could be secured for a period of three years. The farmers, and the banks handling their paper, can usually count on working out loans for agricultural purposes in three years, but should be assured that conditions of such loans will not be changed on the farmers or the bankers in the middle of such period, as has been done in some instances. Agriculture's turnover is annual—not monthly nor quarterly. It can neither inflate nor deflate as readily as commerce, and its financing requires the application of different principles and, while in position to cooperate with commercial financing systems, agricultural financing should be independent of such control. Extra financing for short terms is only needed under emergency conditions, while intermediate term financing—from one to three or five years—is a permanent need that is not now covered by any system.

Resolved further, That this council tenders the services of the president and secretary of the association to the committees of Congress in order that the views of the country banks of this State may be presented, if desired by such committees.

Resolved further, That copies of this resolution be submitted to the Senators and Representatives from this State, chairmen of the Banking and Currency Committees of the Senate and House in Congress, and to such other Senators and Congressmen as may be interested.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, when the Senate took a recess last evening we had concluded the committee amendments to the appropriation bill then under consideration and were awaiting the presentation of other amendments, notice of which had been given. I have on my desk some 10 amendments intended to be proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], but just at the close of the day's session an amendment was offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I am not certain whether the Senator from Mississippi desires the floor first, but at any rate we should proceed at once to the consideration of the individual amendments.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire that the amendment which I offered last evening shall now be stated by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated in full for the information of the Senate.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, line 2, after the numerals "$36,000," it is proposed to insert the following——

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to modify the amendment to the extent that it be offered to come in following the numerals "$25,000," on line 7, page 3, instead of after line 2, page 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as now proposed to be modified by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, line 7, after the numerals "$25,000," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended until the President shall have complied with the request of the Senate as expressed in Senate Resolution 258, adopted April 24, 1922.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Mississippi state to what the resolution mentioned in his amendment relates?

Mr. HARRISON. I have sent for a copy of the resolution, but I will state that in substance the resolution requests the President of the United States to transmit to the Senate the names of all persons who have been appointed postmasters or who have been appointed to other offices under Executive order.

Mr. WARREN. I think we should have the terms of the resolution stated more explicitly.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well, I shall have the resolution read later. If I recall correctly, some two or three days were spent at intervals in a discussion of the large number of Executive orders which had been issued by the President making appointments to postmasterships and other offices. The result of that consideration and debate was that the Senate most solemnly passed Senate Resolution 258, which reads as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is requested to furnish to the Senate the name of every person appointed by Executive order since March 4, 1921, whose appointment is by such order excepted from the civil-service rules, and to furnish to the Senate the reasons therefor.

I recall that in the consideration of the resolution then pending an amendment was offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], who I think at that time was the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, having the matter in charge, as he now is, proposing certain modifications of the resolution. The resolution as finally passed by the Senate, however, was in the language which I have just read.

Mr. President, it seems to me that since the resolution was passed away back in April, 1922—practically nine months ago—the President should have complied with the request contained therein. It was a simple request; it was framed in diplomatic language. There was nothing embodied in the resolution that should have given offense to the President; and certainly the mandate of the Senate has not reached that low ebb that a President of the United States—I care not how much power may have been given to him in recent months—should ignore it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi has stated that the resolution to which he now refers was couched in the usual diplomatic language. That, however, does not appear to be exactly the fact, for the resolution in positive terms requests the President to transmit the information, while the usual language in which such resolutions are framed contains the phrase "if not incompatible with the public interest." That is the respectful request which is usually made, while this resolution is a mandatory one, as if the President were merely some employee of the Senate or of some Government department, rather than the President of the United States, who was elected by the people, and any request for information from whom should at least be couched in the most respectful terms.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I might well reply to the Senator from Wyoming that his remarks might very properly be pointed at the Senate itself, because the resolution was passed by the Senate, and the very question which the Senator has raised was debated in the discussion of the resolution at the time. So I say that the resolution is a diplomatic request, and that the Senate of the United States would not have adopted a resolution which would carry an insult to the President. The resolution does not command the President to furnish the information; it merely requests the President to do so.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator from Mississippi remember whether or not there was a roll call on the adoption of the resolution?

Mr. HARRISON. The sentiment of the Senate was so unanimous in favor of the resolution that I do not think there was a request for a yea-and-nay vote upon it.

Mr. WARREN. The Senate has a way of acting with apparent unanimity when there are only two or three Senators present and a Senator wishes to railroad a matter through the Senate. Under such circumstances it sometimes goes through seemingly without objection because no other Senator seems to notice, but, as a matter of fact, it is hardly fair to say that a measure has been passed unanimously when there has been no roll call upon it, as there should really be upon all measures.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Massachusetts will wait until I reply to what the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has stated, I shall then gladly yield to him.

The resolution was even referred to a committee controlled by Republican members, and was reported by the committee to the Senate. It was then debated after it had been reported to the Senate by the committee, as it had been debated upon the floor of the Senate before it was referred to the committee. There was a lapse of some three weeks, I think, between the day the resolution was submitted and the discussion at that time and the day that it was reported to the Senate and was passed. There was no "railroading of the resolution" through the Senate. An humble member of the minority offered the resolution and the majority as a whole accepted it, reported it out of the committee, and passed it. If there was any "railroading" in connection with the resolution, it was on the part of the organization of the Senate controlled by the majority.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely wish to remind the Senator that during the eight years of Mr. Wilson's administration there were something over 60 resolutions of inquiry with regard to Mexico adopted by the Senate and sent to him, all, so far as I remember, properly worded, but not the slightest notice was ever taken of one of them. It never occurred, however, to anyone on this side to affront the President because for any reason he did not respond to the resolutions.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator says that President Wilson did not comply with the requests of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. He paid no attention to them whatever.

Mr. HARRISON. If President Wilson had not complied with the requests of the Senate, I know the Senator from Massachusetts, with his eagle eye, would have been among the first to have risen in his seat here and called for compliance with the mandate of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I did nothing of the kind. There were a great many resolutions relating to Mexico which I was very anxious to see answered, but they never were answered; and yet I do not remember that I ever called particular attention to the fact. I certainly should never have thought of taking such action as the Senator from Mississippi now proposes.

Mr. HARRISON. The resolutions referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts had to do with foreign relations—and during the discussion of the pending matter I am going to show what the present Executive has done with respect to resolutions dealing with foreign relations—but the resolution to which I am referring merely requested that a list be furnished of the names of men who were appointed to office by Executive order, as to which the President alone, I presume, unless it might be the Civil Service Commission, would know the facts. It was a question of such importance that the Senate desired to know the names on the list, and the reasons for the action.

It will be remembered that the Senate passed a resolution following the appointment by President Harding by Executive order of a postmaster at Marion, Ohio, his home town. There were a score or more of applicants for the postmastership at Marion, Ohio; but President Harding took "the bit in his own teeth" and issued an Executive order. I imagine he surmised and said to himself, "I have a friend there whom I want to appoint to the office, and, notwithstanding the civil-service rules, notwithstanding the number of applicants that may want the office, I am going to give it to this man." The whole country were aroused. The organization having to do with the reform of the civil service held meetings; they discussed the question and passed resolutions, not only denouncing the action of the President in that instance, but in numerous other instances. It was following that discussion which so aroused the country that the Senate of the United States, responding to that sentiment, passed this simple resolution as a parallel to which the Senator from Massachusetts tries to cite resolutions dealing with the great question of foreign relations. The resolution which was passed by the Senate last April merely deals with postmasters. There is no analogy between the two cases.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi is mistaken when he says that the resolution deals merely with postmasters. It does not mention postmasters, and very little mention was made of postmasters when the resolution was under consideration in the Senate. There was no extended debate upon the resolution at all. I think the resolution having been referred to the Civil Service Committee, that committee suggested some amendments to it, reported the resolution with amendments, and the resolution was afterwards passed, but the discussion on the floor of the Senate, that of the Senator from Mississippi, as well as of others—and there was not any lengthy discussion about it at all—did not relate particularly to postmasters nor did the resolution in terms relate to postmasters.

The resolution reads:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is requested to furnish to the Senate the name of every person appointed by Executive order since March 4, 1921, whose appointment is by such order excepted from the civil-service rules, and to furnish the Senate the reasons therefor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. STERLING. I will wait until the Senator has concluded, and then I desire to answer him.

Mr. HARRISON. Before the Senator takes his seat I wish him to answer a question for me.

Mr. STERLING. Very well, if I can.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it not true that at the request of the Senator from South Dakota and other Senators on the majority side when I offered the resolution and debate had taken place it was referred to the committee of which he is a member?

Mr. STERLING. I think so.

Mr. HARRISON. And is it not a fact that the Senator himself reported favorably upon the resolution?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. And championed it upon the floor of the Senate?

Mr. STERLING. After some amendments to the resolution it was reported to the Senate, and there was no particular objection to its being passed in the Senate; but——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. When the Senator has concluded, then I wish to be heard.

Mr. HARRISON. What I said was that the resolution was passed by the majority of the Senate; there was not sufficient opposition to it even to secure a roll call. It was referred to the committee of which the Senator from South Dakota was chairman, considered, and reported back to the Senate, and he championed it upon the floor of the Senate. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] also gave it his support, evidently, for he did not lift his voice against it. Yet now we find, after the President has ignored the resolution for nearly nine months, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] are trying to raise technical objections and complain that the words "not incompatible with the public interest" were left out.

Mr. STERLING. Do I understand the Senator from Mississippi to say that the Senator from South Dakota championed this resolution on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator reported it back.

Mr. STERLING. Was that a championing of the resolution on the floor of the Senate because I reported it back?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator would not come before his colleagues and report a resolution favorably if he was against it. I believe that the Senator is a sincere, honest man, and I assume that he was for the resolution when he considered it, brought it here, and asked his colleagues to give it support.

Mr. President, I do not know what else we can do. When we pass a resolution in such a solemn way as we passed this one and wait patiently for nine months for the President to comply with it, on such an important matter as this, and he ignores it and pays no attention to the Senate, what other recourse have we except to tie up the traveling expenses provided in this appropriation bill for the President, I know not for what? Whether it is for sailing down the Potomac upon a yacht or whether it is for entertainment, I do not know.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Des the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARRISON. In one moment. I am not asking an unreasonable thing when I suggest to the Senate a limitation upon the $25,000 appropriation that is proposed to be given to the President "for entertainment and traveling expenses" on the condition, first, that he complies with the request of the Senate of the United States touching the simple matter of transmitting to the Senate the names of those whom he has appointed to office under Executive order.

Now I yield to my friend from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. I merely wished to suggest to the Senator, since he asked what recourse there is since the President has not complied with the resolution of the Senate, that the minority at present might do as the majority did under the preceding administration, when repeatedly this affront—if it be an affront—was offered to the Senate, namely, grin and bear it.

Mr. HARRISON. Why, if there ever was a minority that embarrassed a President in all the history of the country—and the Senator was particeps criminis to it—it was when he and the Senator from Massachusetts and some 37 others signed a round robin to the President of the United States with respect to the League of Nations. Talk about the action of minorities! Why, it would come with poorer grace from no other Senator here than from the Senator from New Hampshire or the Senator from Massachusetts to talk about the action of minorities.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator from New Hampshire wish to ask me something else?

Mr. MOSES. I merely desire to suggest further to the Senator from Mississippi that if he is so voracious for the information he is talking about he can get it all from the annual report of the Civil Service Commission, wherein is printed every Executive order, stating the name of the person appointed, the office to which the person is appointed, and the reason which actuated the Executive order.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the very argument that the Senator from New Hampshire made when the Senate considered this resolution and deliberated upon it for days; and when, afterwards, the committee reported it—and I think the Senator is a member of that committee——

Mr. MOSES. No.

Mr. HARRISON. Afterwards, he did not raise his voice against it but allowed it to be passed, and therefore I assumed that he was for it.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the matter of what I said or did at the time is of small consequence; but as I recall, I made this same suggestion to the Senator from Mississippi then, namely, that the report of the Civil Service Commission contains a complete statement of all Executive orders that are issued. I think I said that to the Senator at that very time, and that remains true to-day. The Senator can get all this information from the report of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator can do nothing of the kind.

Mr. MOSES. Why not?

Mr. HARRISON. The report has not yet been made touching the matter.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I beg the Senator's pardon. The report has been made and I have it here.

Mr. HARRISON. Up until what time?

Mr. STERLING. The report for the fiscal year ending July 30, 1922; and if it is not all found in this report, appointments made by the President of the United States since that time, and the reasons for his making the appointments aside from the civil-service rules, can be ascertained over at the Civil Service Commission at any time, up to this very date.

Mr. HARRISON. When was the appointment to the Marion postmastership made? Does the Senator know?

Mr. STERLING. Here it is—January 23, 1922:

The Executive order of May 10, 1921, requiring candidates to take civil-service examinations for presidential postmasterships, is hereby waived so as to permit the appointment of French Crow to the position of postmaster at Marion, Ohio, without examination.

Now, the Senator from Mississippi would leave with the Senate the impression that, as a matter of law, the civil-service rules apply to postmasters. They do not, Mr. President, as we all know. It is a matter of Executive order, to begin with, as to whether or not civil-service examinations shall be held for postmasters, and the President has the absolute right to waive the civil-service examinations in the case of the appointment of any postmaster; but here was his own home town, and the order which he had previously made might well be waived in a case of that kind, and that was done.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have not discussed the propriety of the President issuing Executive orders that postmasters shall be appointed under the civil service or otherwise. I have not gotten to that. I will get to it; but the Senator knows that you are pretending in this administration to hold civil-service examinations in the appointment of postmasters.

Mr. MOSES. Oh, no; they are not only pretending to hold them, but they are holding them.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes; they are holding them, but in a most farcical way. Then, if they are holding them, the Senator disagrees with the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. MOSES. In the case of Marion, Ohio, no.

Mr. HARRISON. What the Senate wanted to know is, What other places are there and what other officers are there that have been appointed by Executive order, and the reasons therefor?

Mr. STERLING. This report will show every one appointed under Executive order.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, that will show it; but the Senate said they wanted the President to send it down here; and that shows that the President could perhaps have gotten that information very quickly and brought it up to date, up to the time that he makes it and transmits it to the Senate, and yet he has ignored

you. He thinks that you are too little and too powerless, too sycophantic, for him to comply with a request of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. MOSES. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRISON. I am going to read to you before I shall have concluded what he thought when he was a Senator, what he said then about the dignity of the Senate, how he talked against Executive and autocratic dictation, and how he has changed more than any other man who ever occupied that place.

Now I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, can the Senator from Mississippi cite a single instance where the Senate at any time during the history of this country, by any minority or majority party, has undertaken through a resolution similar to the one presented by the Senator from Mississippi to penalize the Chief Executive of the Nation for an alleged failure to comply with some request?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know of any other President who has absolutely ignored a request like this.

Mr. MOSES. Oh, Mr. President, President Wilson did it a thousand times.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes; President Wilson's name continually comes before the Senator's imagination, even in his dreams, like it does in the case of other reactionary Republicans. Every time something is said they say, "Oh, President Wilson did thus and so." His name is certainly a "bugaboo" to you.

Mr. MOSES. Oh no, Mr. President; I sleep soundly at night.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BURSUM. Does not the Senator from Mississippi believe that a resolution of this character, coming from the minority, seeking to reflect upon the Chief Executive, shows the littleness of this body and not of the President?

Mr. HARRISON. I am trying to show the bigness of this body, and the present attitude of the Senator and other Senators over there will convince the country of the littleness of this body. Why did you pass the resolution? Why did you not at the time fight the resolution?

Mr. BURSUM. The answer to the resolution is in the report.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes.

Mr. MOSES. All the Senator is doing, Mr. President, is to demonstrate his own pettiness.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire for his remark.

Mr. MOSES. Do not mention it.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, I will proceed, Mr. President.

Mr. BURSUM. The French have sent their army into the Ruhr to make the Germans disgorge. I suppose if the Senator had the power to do it, he would send some troops over to the White House to stop operations there.

Mr. HARRISON. No, Mr. President; I would not be discourteous to the President of the United States for anything. I like him very much personally, and I think he is a splendid gentleman. I am not saying much about him as a President, but I am saying that much about him as a man. I could have offered this amendment to his salary. It is carried in this bill—$75,000 annually. I could have offered it to the contingent expenses. I did not do it; but the American people are taxed $25,000 annually to pay the expenses of the President "for entertainment and for transportation." I have merely put a limitation to that $25,000 because it is the only way I know, it is the only course I can pursue, in order to bring to the attention of the President that he should comply with the request of the Senate, simple though it may be.

Mr. STERLING and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi——

Mr. HARRISON. I think I will proceed without interruption for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Is it information that the Senator from Mississippi wants, or does he want simply to parade here before the Senate the fact that the President has not answered this resolution? Is it information that he seeks, or is it the fact that the Senator thinks he will embarrass the President?

Mr. HARRISON. I called the attention of the Senate to this resolution briefly twice before since the passage of it. I have tried to bring it to the attention of the White House in that way, and we have waited nine months for the information, and it has not come.

Mr. STERLING. We have given the Senator the sources from which he can readily get all the information that the resolution calls for, and I suppose the President so thinks. That may be a reason why the President has not transmitted the information.

Mr. HARRISON. Why can he not comply with the request, then, to the extent that he thinks that is the case?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HARRISON. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. In the interest of fairness, I want to suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that this resolution not only calls for the name of every person appointed by Executive order since March 1, 1921, but it likewise asks the President to furnish the reasons therefor. To my mind, that is the most important part of the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. I agree thoroughly with the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. None of that information is contained, as I understand, in the report of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MOSES. To be sure, it is.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, let me correct the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I shall be glad to be corrected, if that is true.

Mr. STERLING. I think in nearly every instance in this list of Executive orders the reason for the Executive order is given.

Mr. NORRIS. Let us have the reason.

Mr. STERLING. I will read it.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator to read it in the case of the Marion post office. In that case, what is the reason?

Mr. STERLING. I have just directed the Senator's attention to the case of Marion, Ohio. No reason is assigned there. What I am saying now is that in nearly every instance, however, reasons are given; and I can see, perhaps, an obvious reason why no reason should be given in the case of Marion, Ohio.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator has stated now that no reason was given for Marion. I suppose the President could give no reason. That may be a good excuse why he has not answered the request of the Senate, but surely he could state that he can not give any reason. The Senator has not tried to give a reason. None is stated in this report, and the President has not given any.

Getting back to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], when this matter was up for discussion, at page 6379 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 22, 1922, when the Senate had been considering this proposition for several days, and was reported to the Senate by the committee, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] said:

> If there is no discussion—

That was after it was reported back—

> I have no objection; but the Senator must remember we are under a unanimous-consent agreement.

Now, the Senator never allows legislation to pass here unless it has met his critical eye. He knew what was in it, and so we must assume that he was for the resolution when he did not object to its passage.

Mr. President, there may be various reasons why the President has not complied with this request. I know he has been a very, very busy man. He has had the intricate foreign relations upon his hands, his unofficial observers over there telling one thing to a conference, and those high in authority here discrediting in part what the unofficial observers said. So there have been cross currents working, and the President has had all those things to deal with. I know they worry him. They have taken a good deal of his time. Evidently, too, the actions of the ambassador from this country to Great Britain have given him great concern, and certainly in the last week or two, since our ambassador to Great Britain has been making a visit to this country, it has been difficult for the President to keep him muzzled so that he would not explode over here and create as much confusion as he has several times by his speeches in Great Britain.

Here on the floor of the Senate some of the Senators on the other side have advocated to the President the passage of certain legislation, others have appealed to him to oppose it, and he has had to take up the differences which have existed between Republicans on the floor of the Senate and try to iron them out. The same is true at the other end of the Capitol and among the Cabinet members. There have been great controversies on many important questions. If we read the papers correctly, some Cabinet member would desire this bureau put over into his department, and another Cabinet member would desire to usurp the prerogative or the power of some other Cabinet member, and so forth. So the President has had many problems to consider, which have no doubt taken much of his time.

Of course, when the funding commission from Great Britain came over here they naturally sent advance agents to feel the pulse not only of the President and of the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury but they tried to find out other things from other influential Republicans, to lay the groundwork for the conferences between the funding commission of the United States and that of Great Britain. So Mr. Norman, governor of the Bank of England, came over some time before the commission representing Great Britain came. It is very true that Mr. Norman, in his representative capacity, did not see the distinguished Senator from Utah. I do not know why he did not. I make that statement only from what I have read in the papers. I take it as true, because I think the papers very rarely lie or misrepresent the facts. When the report came to the distinguished Senator from Utah, one of the distinguished members of the commission representing the United States Government, that Mr. Norman, the governor of the Bank of England, had been sojourning in Washington, conferring with the President and other high officials of the Government, it is said the Senator raised his hands in horror and said, "I can not believe that anything like that has happened." Mr. Norman no doubt went up to the see the President, and these responsibilities have been crowding upon the President when others should have been relieving him of them.

It would have been very easy for the President of the United States, in response to this solemn resolution, passed nine months ago, to have sent to the Senate a reply stating, "Oh, my time has been so much taken up in listening to the distressing appeals of the farmers and laborers and consumers because of the obnoxious legislation fastened upon them by a Republican Congress, because of the cross currents which are working among the leaders of Congress; my time has been so much taken up because of the differences of opinion between many of my Cabinet members, because I am trying to keep secret and exclusive upon these great foreign problems, so that no one in all the United States can know to-day what I am going to do to-morrow."

He could have reported that to the Senate, and we perhaps would have accepted it as a very good reason, because we know the appeals have come to him, we know that the differences have arisen here, and we know that the President has been hard pressed and often humiliated by the action of his leaders, so-called, in the Congress of the United States.

But when he was a Senator from the great State now represented in part by the Senator who now presides over this body [Mr. WILLIS in the chair], the President was zealous of the rights of a Senator, he respected the dignity of this great body, and time after time he raised his eloquent voice in behalf of the rights of the Senate of the United States. Day after day he has spoken forcefully against executive encroachments and autocratic domination. Senators on the other side remember it.

I recall that on the very day he was inaugurated he came before the Senate here among his friends and former colleagues, and from that rostrum he told us how he believed in the majesty and dignity, the independence and power of the Senate of the United States, and how he would ever, as Chief Executive of this Nation, see that the line was drawn between legislative and Executive authority; that he would never step beyond the powers which had been delegated to him as a President of the United States. If I recall correctly, Senators applauded his statements. They remember his speeches in the past. They did not believe it was possible for the new President, as President of the United States, ever to try to usurp their powers, their functions, or to dictate to them their actions.

This is what he said in one of his memorable speeches on December 6, 1920:

> I like the freedom, the association, the patriotic sense of responsibility which abides here. I am conscious of the great place which Congress holds in this Government under our Constitution, and from my service here I am particularly sensible to the obligations of the Senate. When my responsibilities begin in the Executive capacity I shall be as mindful of the Senate's responsibilities as I have been jealous for them as a Member, but I mean at the same time to be just as insistent about the responsibilities of the Executive. Our governmental good fortune does not lie in any surrender at either end of the Avenue.

Listen to this:

> Our governmental good fortune does not lie in any surrender at either end of the Avenue, but in the coordination and cooperation which becomes the two in a great and truly representative popular Government.

Only a short time before that the President had spoken. Here are some excerpts from his speech at that time to his colleagues, pleading for the dignity of the United States Senate, fighting Executive encroachments. This is what he said:

> I do not know that I take myself too seriously as a Senator. I have always had the notion, however, that this was a pretty important office, and out in my State they look upon an election to the Senate as an assumption of some considerable responsibility and a command to assume a part of the responsibility of the Government and of the Republic.

He said further:

> I do not know whether the Senate has stopped to think as it ought—sometimes I am afraid it has not—that under the stress and anxiety and unavoidable hysteria of war we are, either consciously or unconsciously, changing our long-established American institutions. We are very much altering our form of Federal Government.

Again he said:

> I would like to retain just a semblance of the respect for Congress, not only in the estimate of the American people but in the estimate of those whom Congress has provided places for here in the Capital of the Republic.
>
>
> Mr. President, if there were anything necessary to emphasize the epoch-making character of the pending legislation, it would be the vote which has just now been recorded. One hesitates to talk to a jury the minds of whose members are already fixed.
>
> There has not been a President of the United States from Washington to Wilson who had such cordial support on the part of the Congress as the Chief Executive of to-day, and I rejoice to say from the minority side of this Chamber the support of the administration in all its war measures by the minority has been cordial and almost unanimous. But I do not understand that that sort of a consecration to the cause of the war requires a Member on either side of this Chamber to follow every suggestion of the Chief Executive regarding our institutions of peace.

Further, he said:

> I do not think it is fair, Mr. President, to any self-respecting Member of this body to ask him to vote to put aside the power with which he has been charged in the Constitution, and the responsibility that comes to him with a commission from the people who sent him here.

Yet what has been his course in this instance of defying the Senate of the United States with respect to this important resolution, which respectfully called on him to transmit to the Senate the names of persons appointed under Executive order? He has gone beyond that.

Senators will not forget that after the joint resolution declaring the war at an end had passed the Senate and been transmitted to the House, and it was sought there to change it, the President then for the first time, as President, began to wield his autocratic power and exert his influence over the Congress of the United States. He wrote a letter; he sent his emissaries; he brought the power of his office to bear, and he compelled the Congress, not only the House, but the Senate, to surrender and pass the joint resolution as he dictated it.

Senators recall when the revenue bill was up and some of us here, led by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], were fighting to increase the surtaxes upon the large incomes of the rich, how Senators on the other side united, fighting militantly, resisting every effort of the minority and some on the other side to increase the taxes, and the President wrote his letter to Mr. FORDNEY, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and brought his influence into play just as much as possible to reduce the rate down to 40 per cent. That was the only time that enough independence was shown in this body to throw off the yoke of Executive domination and control and give to the people that measure of relief that was given them by the increase in the rate.

That is not all. Senators remember the packer legislation. Only the other day the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] and the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] told us about their stand on packer legislation. It has not been forgotten, because in the last Congress, when we really tried to put teeth in packer legislation, under the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] and the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenyon], who has now gone upon the bench, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and others who stood by them, the present President of the United States, as a Senator, voted against the bill.

When the new Congress came in and he became President, he sent word down the line that if you passed that legislation, as stringent as it was, regulatory as the provisions were in the preceding Congress, he would veto it. So you changed your minds and brought in the bill with the teeth in large measure extracted from it. He was using the power of his office against the American people to give them a sugar-coated pill of legislation instead of one that would really bring results.

But you did not stop there. What about the tariff bill, which my friend from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] helped to frame?

For the first time in the history of this Government a President of the United States sought, by special message to Congress, the power to fix the rates upon the importation of goods into this country; and his power was so great that you succumbed to his influence, you laid down, and passed the legislation as he sought in his message. Oh, if the fathers, who conceived the theory upon which this Government must run, could but return to us and see the surrender by Congress of its many powers to the Executive.

Next, take the reorganization measure passed by the Senate and the House.

The idea no doubt was first conceived by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. He had it passed through the Senate, and everyone thought he would be chairman of the commission to reorganize the Government service, because of his experience and his training and his interest in the proposition. So we passed the legislation, and the House did likewise; and then what happened? Then the distinguished President, who once reviled against executive encroachment and spoke in behalf of the dignity of the Congress, and the Senate in particular, sent word down the line and said, "I have a very distinguished friend, competent, able, and I want him as chairman of that commission." He directed that the law be amended to give him the power to name on a congressional commission a gentleman who was not a Member of either branch of Congress. So you laid down under the influence of the Executive and amended the law. Nothing has come of it. Why? I suppose because the heads of the departments are fighting among themselves over the reorganization. But nothing has been done.

Mark you, Senators, if the distinguished Senator from Utah had been made chairman of that commission, or if the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], the other Republican member of the commission, had been appointed chairman, we would not have dillydallied and procrastinated since April, 1922. The commission would have done something. Under their direction and leadership we would have had some kind of a plan now, some consideration would have been given to those great questions, and we could make a report by this time to the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The soldiers' bonus legislation—can anyone forget how smoothly the legislation was proceeding, how the Committee on Finance had reported it to the Senate after it passed the House, and we had considered it for days and days? Suddenly, just as we were getting ready to pass it, as a clap of thunder out of a clear sky, the news was flashed down Pennsylvania Avenue from the White House that the legislation should go back to the committee; and as representatives of the American people who, President Harding as Senator Harding said, should cherish the traditions of this august body, should always fight to maintain its dignity and its independence, you crouched, you succumbed, you surrendered under the power of this man, whose hand can shake the tree of patronage and from its branches fall the offices at your feet. That is his history. That is the way he is proceeding. That is the way he has repudiated statements made as a Senator in this body.

But, beyond that, let us take the funding commission. We considered that legislation. It was going through all right, but the President began to exert his influence and wrote a letter and said it must be changed in certain particulars and in some of the details. You surrendered. You threw up the white flag. You did not live up to the pleadings of Senator Harding when he fought for the independence of the Senate of the United States.

Then look at your own ship subsidy bill. None of you are in favor of it. There is no enthusiasm in the breast of a single Senator on the majority side of this Chamber for that measure. You are just pretending to want to pass it. You whisper, perhaps, in Lasker's ear that you are for it strongly, but do you show it by anything that is happening here? You know it has not any chance to pass.

Mr. WATSON. Why? Will the Senator tell me why?

Mr. HARRISON. Because you are not for it over on your side of the Chamber.

Mr. WATSON. Will the Senator——

Mr. HARRISON. I can not yield further. I do not want to discuss at this time that question with the Senator, because whenever I get into a discussion with the Senator I am charged, as I was charged the other day, with filibustering, and I do not desire even that soft impeachment laid at my door.

We will not forget the disarmament proposition. I shall never forget the strong personality of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] as day after day he fought here to have adopted a provision in the naval appropriation bill calling for a disarmament conference. Then the word came from the White House, "Do not adopt it," and it looked as though it was dead. But when the force of public opinion began to work, as it sometimes does, even on a Republican Senator, then the President surrendered to public opinion, and you in turn surrendered to the President and allowed the Borah disarmament conference provision to be adopted.

Why, Mr. President, what happened on the Borah economic conference proposition? He spoke eloquently, and we all knew he was right. The country believed he was right. There was strong sentiment for it everywhere, but like a frightened bird upon a rotten twig, for fear President Harding would cut the twig from under you, you were afraid to vote until you could communicate with him and ascertain his views. Finally one day somebody said that the administration had "feelers" out. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] got up and said, "Yes; there were 'feelers' out." Then the President's influence began to work, and there was a compromise effected. Well, the feelers have not felt much, have they? There has not been much done about it, has there? Oh, feelers! There was a controversy over the question whether or not even France had ever been approached upon the proposition. The idea of the administration being so weak and impotent as that in a great world crisis such as this we can not bring publicity to bear through the press of the country to make an impression that even France was being approached with a feeler. Some controversy arose about it.

Here was the Robinson resolution to appoint a member of the Reparation Commission. You did not know what to do with that. You were frightened. You put it off merely to ascertain the wishes of President Harding, and when you found out, then you had a letter written. Immediately you were all against it. Executive domination!

So it is, Mr. President. I only want to see the dignity of this body maintained. The President should have complied with the request contained in the resolution. He would admire your courage if you would pass the provision that ties up the contingent fund. Of course, if it is thought that the dignity of this body is not sufficient to warrant tying up a little appropriation and compelling compliance with this resolution, and if you prefer to give the $25,000 as expenses for the President for his entertainment and transportation, rather than to exert your independence and the right of the Senate, it is all right. When you oppose this provision, you demonstrate your weakness as a part of a great body and your fear of Executive authority.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi on the table.

Mr. MOSES. Let us vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming moves to lay on the table the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HEFLIN. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	George	Lodge	Shields
Ball	Gerry	McCormick	Shortridge
Brookhart	Glass	McCumber	Simmons
Bursum	Hale	McKellar	Smoot
Cameron	Harreld	McKinley	Spencer
Capper	Harris	McNary	Sterling
Colt	Harrison	Moses	Sutherland
Couzens	Heflin	New	Townsend
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Trammell
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Wadsworth
Dial	Kellogg	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	Kendrick	Overman	Warren
Ernst	Keyes	Phipps	Watson
Fletcher	King	Poindexter	Willis
France	Ladd	Reed, Pa.
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Senator from Wyoming had withdrawn his motion.

Mr. WARREN. I did not. In the interest of the expedition of public business, I moved to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HARRISON. I was going to withdraw the amendment if the Senator from Wyoming had withdrawn his motion to lay it on the table.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from Mississippi will withdraw his amendment, I will withdraw my motion to lay it on the table.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to congratulate the Senator from Mississippi, if I may, on his good taste in withdrawing the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Mississippi has withdrawn the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I have.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], which has just been withdrawn, is, in my judgment, not of very great importance, although it has excited some feeling in the Chamber which borders closely on being of a partisan nature. It refers to the enforcement of the civil service law and rules by the executive department.

Mr. President, personally I do not see any objection to the resolution which the Senate passed nine or ten months ago. I do not intend to criticize the present Executive or any of his predecessors for issuing Executive orders setting aside civil service rules regarding the appointment of postmasters and other officials. I think the rules governing appointments which are contained in the civil service law have been too often set aside by Executives, but that is only my personal opinion. I concede frankly that there are many instances where the President would be justified in setting aside civil service rules or civil service requirements pertaining to the appointment of postmasters.

I concede also that under the Constitution the President has authority to set such rules aside whenever he sees fit to do so. The law provides that the President shall appoint postmasters of the presidential grade, and under the Constitution that power may not be delegated to any other authority. I frankly admit that the President has the right to resort to any method he may see fit in the appointment of postmasters; and when he does resort to such method, regardless of whether he be a Democrat or a Republican, so long as I am in Congress I am going to help him carry out his purpose in good faith, even though I do not agree with him as to the wisdom of the course which he may be pursuing, for we must concede all the time that the authority under the law is the President's and that he may do whatever he sees fit in reference to the matter. Neither am I going to find fault with the President or with Members of Congress or with anyone else who is opposed to the civil service law in reference to the appointment of officials anywhere. They have a right to their opinion; and those who believe in the doctrine that "to the victor belongs the spoils" are as much entitled to consideration as are those who favor civil service. So I am not attempting to criticize the President.

I do, however, think, Mr. President, that no matter what course may be pursued by the President the American people ought to be taken into his confidence, and that full publicity should be given to whatever course is adopted and followed. Therefore it seems to me when, after a great deal of discussion and consideration and after a favorable report of the committee which had considered the question, we adopted a resolution requesting the President to give instances where the civil-service rules had been set aside by Executive order, and the reason for doing so, that we were well within our jurisdiction, that we were acting in perfect respect to the President, and that it could not successfully be charged that there was any discourtesy, either implied or intended, in our action.

It seems to me when the President set aside the civil-service rules he ought to be prepared to give to the country his reasons for doing so, and even though I did not agree that his reasons were good, if he gave them he would be within the strict performance of his duty and strictly within his rights, and I should respect him for having done so, no matter how much I disagreed with him. However, when the civil-service rules are set aside by the President, and no reason is given for his having done so, and the President declines to answer a respectful request which is propounded to him by the Senate for his reasons, it seems to me that no excuse can be given for that course of conduct.

It has been suggested here that other Presidents have done the same thing, that other Presidents have ignored resolutions which have been passed by the Senate. That is very true, Mr. President. However, if the course of an official is wrong it may not properly be excused on the ground that somebody else has likewise violated the law.

It has also been stated that the Senator who proposed the resolution did so for partisan purposes. Again, Mr. President, in my judgment, that is not a sufficient objection to the resolution. The court in every jury trial where the law provides for the instruction of juries will always tell the jury that in considering the case they must take into consideration the bias, the prejudice, or the interest, if any such appears, of any witness who may be testifying. That does not mean that the witness is disqualified, but that in weighing his evidence those things are proper for consideration in order to determine how much weight should be given to his testimony. I have never heard the eloquent voice of the Senator from Mississippi criticizing a Democratic official for setting aside civil-service rules, and it is proper to consider that; but, Mr. President, even though the resolution were proposed for partisan purposes, it is no defense on the other side to say, "You are just as black as we are."

Mr. President, the appointment of postmasters, in my judgment, ought to be under civil service as well as the appointment of rural carriers, and all similar officers; in fact, I would extend the civil service just as far as I could.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Rural carriers are now appointed under the civil service.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Michigan reminds me that rural carriers are now appointed under civil-service rules, but I am going to show something of the operations of the civil service law under the present administration, so that at least I may not be charged with having complained, as I did complain, under the Wilson administration of the way the civil service law was administered, and then of being silent when my own party is in power.

I know, Mr. President, that political platforms are made to get in on and then violated with impunity as a rule after the party is successful. Perhaps, the American people have but very little respect for platforms promulgated by political parties, and very few of the people I think read them; but it is not out of place to call the attention of those who are more partisan than otherwise as to what has taken place in the way of political promises made by the great political parties—the Democratic Party and the Republican Party.

The national Democratic platform of 1916 contained a provision in regard to the civil service; it was one of the planks of that platform, one of the various reasons assigned by the Democratic Party why they should secure the votes of the people. That plank reads as follows:

> We reaffirm our declarations for the rigid enforcement of the civil service laws.

In 1912 the Democratic platform contained a provision in regard to the civil service laws, which is thus reaffirmed. Let us see what it was. The provision in the Democratic platform of 1912 on the civil service was as follows:

> The law pertaining to the civil service should be honestly and rightly enforced, to the end that merit and ability shall be the standard of appointment and promotion rather than service rendered to a political party.

That is the platform of the Democratic Party—the platform that was adopted in a campaign that was successful on the part of the Democrats of the country.

In 1920 the Republican national platform contained something about civil service, and I want to read that. Here is what the Republicans said in their national platform of 1920. That was when they were successful:

> We renew our repeated declaration that the civil service law shall be thoroughly and honestly enforced and extended wherever practicable.

That is a declaration that they would not only enforce the civil service law in good faith, but that they would extend it and broaden it and take in other offices.

In 1916 the Republican Party made another declaration in its national platform, as follows:

> The civil service law has always been sustained by the Republican Party, and we renew our repeated declarations that it shall be thoroughly and honestly enforced and extended wherever practicable.

In 1912 the national platform of the Republican Party contained this provision:

> We reaffirm our adherence to the principle of appointment to public office based on proved fitness and tenure during good behavior and efficiency. The Republican Party stands committed to the maintenance, extension, and enforcement of the civil service law, and it favors the passage of legislation empowering the President to extend competitive service so far as practicable.

I might go on at length in practically every national platform of both of the great parties. One would think that there was no division on the question, that the country was unanimous, and that no matter which party was in power we were going to enforce this law in good faith; and yet, Mr. President, neither party has enforced it in good faith. Both are guilty. Again let me say I am not finding fault with the man or the party who does not believe in it. If a political party did not believe in civil service and proclaimed it to the world when it was asking for votes and succeeded, I should be the last one to criticize it for putting every one of the appointive offices in the Government service on the political pie counter. I believe in civil service. Other men just as wise and just as patriotic and just as honest believe that there should be no such thing; but I do not see how anyone can question the proposition that when we ride into office on a pledge that we are going to enforce the civil service law there is no excuse for our violating it.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SHIELDS. In that connection I should like to ask the Senator if he has read a statement made by Mr. W. D. Ffoulke, who, I understand, is president or some high officer of the Civil Service Reform League?

Mr. NORRIS. Would the Senator just as soon put that in after I conclude and let it appear in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, rather than right in the midst of them?

Mr. SHIELDS. I was not going to put it in at this point. I was merely going to ask the Senator a question in regard to it. I am going to put it in the RECORD later, but I want to get the Senator's views on it.

Mr. Ffoulke favored putting the officers whose duty it is to enforce the prohibition law, the Volstead law, under the civil service, and he says the Anti-Saloon League are opposing it, because the patronage was very instrumental and very influential in getting the Volstead law passed and they are opposed to putting their employees under civil service. I have letters from the Anti-Saloon League in Tennessee wanting them to go in, which I will put in the RECORD later—not now; I am not going to interrupt the Senator for that—but does he favor putting the prohibition officers of all grades under the civil service law?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am glad the Senator does. I think they ought to be under the civil-service law.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the gentleman yield;

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator if the Senator from Tennessee is through. Is he?

Mr. SHIELDS. That is the question I wanted to ask.

Mr. NORRIS. I have answered it, I hope, satisfactorily. At least I have answered it.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator has answered it very positively and emphatically, and I am glad to hear him say so.

Mr. STERLING. I have not read Mr. Ffoulke's statement, but I think Mr. Ffoulke is mistaken when he says that the Anti-Saloon League was opposed to putting the prohibition enforcement agents under the civil-service rules.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am not in the confidence of Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, as the Senator is, but Mr. Ffoulke says they are opposed to it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope Senators will not get into a controversy as to where the Anti-Saloon League stands on this question.

Mr. SHIELDS. No; I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Nebraska, who very kindly yielded to me for a question. I will bring up the matter later.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very glad to yield to the Senator, but he can see that when Senators engage in a controversy as to where that organization stands they will not get back to me, perhaps, during the day.

Mr. STERLING. I merely want to say that I have conferred with Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler with regard to legislation now pending which would put these employees under the civil service law, and he has not told me of any opposition.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am talking about genuine support of the matter, not moonshine support. I voted for the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, and I believe in its enforcement, but in a just and reasonable manner; and I believe that the men who are enforcing it ought to be under the civil service law, in order that we may have the very best men to enforce it.

Mr. NORRIS. I believe in the enforcement of the law; I think most Senators here think I am a crank on the subject; but the Anti-Saloon League can not dictate to me as to how I shall vote on anything, and if they want to prevent putting these officials under the civil service I am against them. I mean no disrespect to them. I believe there ought to be no exception made in that case. At least I would have to be convinced before I would favor preventing putting them under the civil service. I think we would get a better enforcement of the law if they were under the civil service law than we get when they are not under the civil service law.

Mr. STERLING. I am very well satisfied that the Senator from Nebraska will not find himself at variance in that respect with the Anti-Saloon League.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator is right. Of course, I shall be very glad if I am not, but I shall take that position even if I am at variance with them.

Mr. President, quite soon after the last general election, when it was known that the Republican Party had been successful, an agitation began as to what the new administration would do in regard to the appointment of postmasters. They had been put under a sort of civil-service status by President Wilson. There was a great deal of agitation about it. Politicians as a rule wanted the lid taken off, and I was particularly anxious that no backward step should be taken by the party which in that very election had pledged itself to carry out the real intent and spirit of the civil service law, and that had even said that it believed in its extension.

While the question was being discussed, I wrote to the Postmaster General, Mr. Hays, and I now send to the desk a copy of the letter that I wrote to Mr. Hays, and ask that it may be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 21, 1921.

Hon. WILL H. HAYS,
Postmaster General, Post Office Department.

MY DEAR MR. HAYS: I understand it has not yet been determined whether or not the orders of President Taft and President Wilson, made with a view of placing the appointment of postmasters under civil service, will be revoked. Whatever policy is adopted, it can have no possible influence upon my personal wishes or fortune. Every district in my State is represented by a Republican, so I will not be consulted when it comes to the appointment of postmasters, and can therefore have no personal interest in the policy that may be adopted.

I have, from my experience of over 18 years in Congress, reached the conclusion that the Post Office Department ought to be kept entirely out of politics, and I believe the present administration would make a serious mistake if it decides to annul these orders and put the postmasterships of the country on the political pie counter. The most important consideration, of course, is efficiency and economy in this great department. The postmasterships should not be considered as the property of men in office, to be distributed as they see fit, in the payment of personal political obligations.

I was very much pleased when President Taft put the fourth-class offices under civil service, and I was likewise pleased when President Wilson extended the order. My criticism has always been that these orders have not been enforced by the Post Office Department, under President Wilson, in good faith. The officials have resorted to all kinds of technicalities to prohibit the rule from operating when by its operation it would put a Republican in office and keep a Democrat out. I am satisfied that the people of the country approved these orders, but did not approve the way they have been enforced during the past eight years. The greatest efficiency in the department will, in my judgment, not be reached if all postmasters are to be appointed upon partisan political grounds. It is very likely that the order itself might be improved. It would be queer, indeed, if experience under the order would not suggest some change that would go toward improving it; but whatever changes are made, if any, ought to be made with the idea of promoting such improvement rather than to loosening the political strings and thus retracing our steps.

In addition to this, I think it can be safely stated that the giving out of postmasterships as a political plum is a detriment rather than an asset to any political party in control. Moreover, Members of Congress do not have the time, neither do they have the facilities, to investigate fully when they are called upon to make recommendations. It will not only do them more harm than good, speaking strictly from a political viewpoint, but it will take an enormous amount of time to give any kind of consideration to the selection of postmasters, and thus detract from their legislative duties.

I would like to ask you to talk this matter over with Secretary Weeks. He served in the House quite a long time—eight years, I think, in addition to his service in the Senate. He was for a while chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the House. He has had quite an extended experience, and has some very definite ideas on the subject. I have not written to President Harding about it, because I know he is too busy to give consideration to all these matters, but I have supposed that this question would be taken up and decided at a conference, probably between the President and yourself, if not other members of the Cabinet. It is because—and only because—I desire the most efficient administration in the Post Office Department that it is possible, and because I do not want the administration to make what I believe would be a serious mistake, that I have written you on the subject.

Very truly yours,

G. W. NORRIS.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, to that letter I received a reply, which I send to the Secretary's desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 24, 1921.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am very glad, indeed, to have your letter of the 21st. Personally, I am earnestly in favor of the principle of civil service, and in the fullest possible honest application of the principle that can be effectively made. I appreciate your letter, for I am really anxious to get the views of those who have had experience in these matters. I would be glad to talk to you about it at an early date also.

With the very kindliest regards, I am, sincerely yours,
WILL H. HAYS.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, notwithstanding the views expressed by the Postmaster General, the order made by President Wilson was changed, the doors were opened, and the appointment of postmasters placed upon a different basis. They still provided that an examination should be had by the Civil Service Commission, but the modified order provided that the Post Office Department should select a postmaster from the three highest on the list furnished by the Civil Service Commission from such examination.

On the face of it that does not look bad, but where, in the carrying out of that order, the Post Office Department submitted it to Members of the House of Representatives or Senators, or in case there was neither Representative nor Senator who was a Republican, then to a Republican committee, asking them to select from the list or to make a recommendation upon which the Post Office Department could act, everybody who knows anything about it knows, particularly the Members of Congress know, that that was practically throwing the thing back into partisan political control, and really nullifying the spirit, at least, of the civil service law and rules.

Not only was that done with reference to postmasters but it included rural carriers. I did not know that for a while, and I had written to some fellow who wrote me and wanted to see if I could not get him appointed to be a rural carrier, telling him that I had nothing to do with it; that it was under civil service; and that it would be improper for me to try to control the appointment. I was informed by my secretary, after I had written the letter, that I was wrong. I could not believe it. So I took that up with the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, who, under the law and rules, has charge of the appointment of postmasters, and on December 15, 1922, I wrote him a letter, a copy of which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 15, 1922.

Hon. HARRY H. BILLANY,
Fourth Assistant Postmaster General,
Post Office Department.

DEAR MR. BILLANY: I have been receiving some requests from people who have been examined for positions as rural carrier, requesting me to intercede in their behalf. I have been writing such applicants that the rural carriers are under civil service and that it would be improper for me to make such recommendation. I am informed this morning by my secretary that I am mistaken in my conclusion about these carriers being under civil service, and that, as a matter of fact, the eligible list is submitted to Members of Congress wherever they happen to be Republicans, and that they are allowed to select the appointees.

If this is true, I very much regret that the present administration has taken such a backward step. This simply means that men who are not in favor with the Republican committee or the Republican machine need make no application for these positions.

We have been for years protesting before the people that we believed in civil service, that we were going to enforce the law both in spirit and in letter, and it seems to me good faith to the people demands that we carry out this pledge.

I want to protest most vigorously against opening up partisanship in violation of the spirit of the civil service law and placing such positions on the political pie counter. Why should a Member of Congress, a Member of the Senate, or the chairman of a Republican committee be permitted to name the rural carriers of the country? If there is any virtue in the civil service law we ought to enforce it in good faith. If we intend to place these positions in the hands of partisan politicians, then we ought to be fair enough to make that kind of declaration to the people before election.

I protested against the placing of postmasters under this same partisan control, to Postmaster General Hays. He replied that he was in full accord with my position, but yet in a short time the order came allowing Republican Members of Congress, and where there was no Republican Member of Congress, then Republican Senators, or the chairmen of Republican committees, to select from the eligible list, the postmasters.

When we put the positions of the Post Office Department upon the political pie counter, to be dealt out for political purposes, we are taking a step backward and likewise violating the pledges we have made to the people of the country. If the civil service law is an improvement over the ancient pie counter method, then it ought to be enforced in good faith, and if the Republican officials are not going to enforce it, it will be one of the reasons why they should be turned out of office and Democrats put in their place.

It is no answer to say that the Democrats have done similar things. We promised to do better. As a matter of fact, it seems to me that in the Post Office Department we have gone backward. While the Democratic administration in many instances did not enforce the law in good faith, they did do better than to allow Members of Congress and other political leaders to name the rural carriers, and their order in regard to postmasters was far superior to the one that is in vogue now under the present administration.

Very truly yours,
G. W. NORRIS.

Mr. NORRIS. In answer to that letter, Mr. President, I received the following reply from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEW in the chair). The Secretary will read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, December 18, 1922.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR NORRIS: I have very carefully read your letter of the 15th instant, in which you state that you have been informed by your secretary that rural carriers are no longer under civil service because the eligible list is submitted to Members of Congress who happen to be Republicans and who are allowed to select the appointees.

I am very sorry that your information on this subject was not fuller and more nearly accurate, since it is because you were only partially informed of the procedure of appointment of rural carriers you have a very grave misconception of the method followed by the department. In order to make it quite clear to you, permit me to explain the practice.

The list of eligibles received from the Civil Service Commission contains the names of three applicants. Unless recommendations are received indorsing the second or third applicant, the department ordinarily tenders appointment to the first-named eligible. It usually happens, however, that indorsements are received in favor of one of the other eligibles, and then the department uses its discretion in selection of the appointee who it appears will best serve the interests of the service, observing, of course, the military preference extended to ex-service men.

The courtesy of submitting the names of the eligibles to Members of Congress is not, as stated by your secretary, confined to the Republican Members, but is a courtesy extended to every officer of the Government who requests this information. A large number of Representatives and some Senators have standing requests to be advised of the names of eligibles whenever there is a vacancy in the position of rural carrier to be filled in their district. Usually the Senator or Member indorses one of the eligibles, but the selection is invariably left to the discretion of the department. Nor are they the only persons to whom the list of eligibles is sent, as this courtesy is extended to every individual citizen who requests the same, and all indorsements are very carefully considered in making a selection to fill the vacancy.

Your information to the effect that the policy of receiving recommendations from Members of Congress is one that was adopted by the present administration is entirely erroneous. To my personal knowledge, the previous administration followed this practice. As a matter of fact, it is my belief that during the present year a decided step forward was made by confining the eligibility for appointment as rural carrier to patrons of the office at which the vacancy exists, instead of all residents of the county in which the office is located. I am sure you will agree that instead of being an evasion of the civil service law, this is a very decided endeavor to follow the intention and spirit of the civil service.

I trust that I have made clear the practice followed by the department in the appointment of rural carriers. If there are any points which are not entirely clear to you, I shall be pleased to advise you further.

Sincerely yours,
H. H. BILLANY,
Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. NORRIS. After I received that letter I again wrote to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, because he had really invited me to do so, if I understood him fully, and I propounded quite a number of questions to him as to the result of the operation of his policy. That letter was written on the 21st of December, 1922, but up to date I have had no reply to it. I ask that that letter, a copy of which I send to the Secretary's desk, be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 21, 1922.

Hon. HARRY H. BILLANY,
Fourth Assistant Postmaster General,
Post Office Department.

DEAR MR. BILLANY: I thank you for your letter of December 18. As I read your letter I can not help but fear that I was nearly right in my first construction. It seems the practice is to submit the eligible list to Members of Congress for their consideration and recommendation. I am curious to know whether, when recommendations are made by Members of the House of Representatives or the Senate their advice is followed.

You say that the courtesy of submitting names of the eligibles to Members of Congress is not confined to Republican Members. It would be interesting to know, if this list is submitted to Democratic Members, whether their recommendations are followed to the same extent and in the same way that recommendations from Republican Members are followed.

I can see no reason why Members of Congress should desire to have these lists submitted to them, except for the purpose, in reality, of giving them control of the appointments, and I would like to ask you whether that is not the result of the practice. Is it not a roundabout way of permitting the Republican Representatives and Senators to name the rural carriers in their districts and communities?

It would be just as bad, of course, to let the Democrats name them as it would be to let the Republicans name them; and if Members of Congress are going to be permitted to select the carriers, then there ought to be no partisan line drawn, and they ought to be all treated alike, regardless of politics.

It seems to me your rule in practical application will result during a Republican administration in filling these places with Republicans because they are Republicans. The rule followed under a Democratic administration would fill them with Democrats, and yet we are all pretending to the country that we have a civil service law and that we are enforcing it in good faith.

I am not finding fault with the man who believes in the old doctrine, "To the victor belongs the spoils," and who proclaims that doctrine publicly; but when we profess to be civil-service people when we are, as a matter of fact, spoilsmen we are guilty of deception. We ought to enforce the civil service law in good faith or else we ought to throw off our disguise and stand forth boldly on the doctrine "To the victor belongs the spoils," and that we are going to apply that doctrine.

In your letter you say that to your personal knowledge this practice was followed by the preceding administration. According to my view, this is no defense whatever. We promised to do better than the Democrats. We got into office because we made the people believe we would do better.

There certainly would be no objection in permitting the patrons of the office to make any showing they saw fit in regard to their postmaster, either in favor of or against anyone, but any showing made on partisan political grounds ought to have no effect and ought to be entirely disregarded. The patrons ought to be told that the political affiliations of candidates would have no consideration whatever. If Members of Congress are allowed to select rural carriers, it simply takes the matter away from civil service and makes the whole thing a mockery.

Very truly yours, G. W. NORRIS.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator whether he has received any answer to his letter?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I have not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest that the Senator write another letter and ask another question, whether or not in the appointment of postmasters it is not left to a referee to name in certain instances. It has been testified before a committee of the Senate that the question of the selection of postmasters was left to a referee, and some of his Republican friends came into his office where he had headquarters here in Washington and said, "John, you are going to make $50,000 out of this business this year." "Fifty thousand dollars?" he said. "I will make $100,000." A man of his own party testified to those facts.

Mr. NORRIS. That was the referee?

Mr. OVERMAN. The referee said he would make $100,000.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume that took place where there were neither Representatives nor Senators who were Republicans.

Mr. OVERMAN. There was a Republican at his office at the time.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think the letter of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General practically says—I am not criticizing it; I am simply stating what in effect it says—"we are going to put Republicans upon rural delivery routes and into all post offices wherever there is a Republican who has successfully passed the examination and was one of the three highest applicants." I do not think there can be any doubt of that. It is true the Fourth Assistant said "We permit Congressmen to make a recommendation, but after all we make the appointment on what to us seems right." I asked the question whether in following out that course he ever got a Democrat. If it was a Democratic administration he would never get anything but Democrats if there was one on the list.

In other words, we are putting up a pretense which in my judgment condemns us. It is worse than to throw off this mantle which we profess to have about us and come out in the open as to what we really are. We are parceling the appointments out to spoilsmen, to politicians, and we are permitting, as the Senator from North Carolina said, in some cases referees and in many other cases committeemen, who advise with the Congressman and tell him who are Republicans and who are not, if he does not know, to make these appointments. I talked just to-day with a Member of the House of Representatives who has made dozens if not hundreds of recommendations for rural-carrier appointments in one of our great States. I asked him if he ever had made a recommendation that was not followed by the Post Office Department, and he said, "Never one." So the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General's excuse was not very good when he said, "Oh, yes; we get applications and recommendations from Congressmen, but after all we appoint the man we think ought to have it." He evidently always thinks that way.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. For information I inquire of the Senator if in dealing with rural carriers the law is not mandatory that the one who makes the highest mark in an examination shall be appointed?

Mr. NORRIS. I think not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I may say to the Senator that I talked with the commander of the American Legion within the last week, who said that one of his members had been turned down. Although he was a brave man and decorated two or three times and stood the examination and was first on the list, he did not receive the appointment.

Mr. KING. I know that is true with respect to postmasters. I was under the impression that as to rural carriers there was a pretense of following the civil service law.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought so, too, but the Senator has not followed the correspondence which has been read.

Mr. KING. I was called from the Chamber and did not hear all of it.

Mr. NORRIS. While the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General pretends and claims there is that kind of rule, I think his own letter discloses clearly that there is nothing of the kind in it.

Mr. President, what will be the result? As I said in the letter which was read, it will result under a Republican administration in putting Republicans in office, and under a Democratic administration in putting the Republicans out and putting Democrats in. We can not do that way if we believe in the civil service. In my judgment we can not do that way or follow that course if we are to have effective administration.

Why should a Senator be allowed to name rural carriers in a whole congressional district or in a whole State if it happens to be there are no Republican Representatives from that State? Why should a Member of the House of Representatives be allowed to name the rural carriers of his district? That is the effect of the present practice. There is only one string to it, and that is the man who is appointed must get on the list. In the examination he must be one of the three highest. What will that mean, if anything? It will mean that under a Republican administration Democrats will refuse to take the examination, because they will know they stand practically no show of getting an appointment. It will mean that under a Democratic administration Republicans will refuse to take the examination, because they will not be given a square deal with the Democratic applicants.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. If three Republicans get on the list it is generally known the successful applicant must seek political influence to get the appointment. Is not that true?

Mr. NORRIS. It seems if he has political influence he can get it. There is no question about that.

Mr. OVERMAN. He can not get the appointment without it.

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose, if nobody made a request, that they would act without a request being made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not going to discuss the political side of the question, but I just want to say to the Senator that so far as my State is concerned, where they have had civil-service examinations I do not now recall a single instance where even the highest man, whether he was a Democrat or a Republican, has been appointed postmaster in my State. The appointment, strange as it may seem, has nearly always gone to the second or third man on the list, usually the third man, and the man making the highest average and becoming first on the eligible list almost invariably has been turned down.

Mr. NORRIS. How has it happened about the political affiliation of the appointee selected?

Mr. McKELLAR. When I interrupted the Senator I said I did not intend to discuss the political side of it, but as a matter of fact if there is a Republican on the list he is appointed.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course. Under a Democratic administration if there was a Democrat on the list he would get it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. KING. I will say to the Senator that in a number of instances which have been brought to my attention, where the Republican who had the indorsement of the Congressman and the local machine failed to qualify, failed to get on the eligible list, no appointment was made. I have known the matter to be held up for a year by some juggling and legerdemain, another examination to be held, and one or more of those who had been successful were edged out of the way until finally the man whom the machine wanted got the appointment by deferring it for a year or a year and a half.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will permit me further, I merely wish to say that, so far as Tennessee is concerned, under the last administration of President Wilson—I do not remember how it was in his first administration, because I was not as well acquainted with the situation; I was not serving on the Post Office Committee of the Senate and did not have as much knowledge as I had during his second administration—without any exception, so far as I now recall, in appointments of postmasters in Tennessee made by President Wilson during his second administration the highest man on the list was uniformly appointed to office under his direction.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. Is it not true that under the Wilson administration they first got all Democrats into the post offices and then adopted the civil-service rules?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is true. That was done by President Wilson. It was done likewise by President Taft. It was done likewise by President Cleveland and, I think, by President Harrison, in putting certain offices under the civil service law. They always do it at the close of the administration. While I do not believe in that and do not think it is right, that has been about the only way we have ever been able to get offices put under the civil service. The trouble always comes that when the other party is returned to power they annul the order, fill the offices with members of their own party, and then put the order back into effect. It is not a good faith compliance with the civil service law in my judgment.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a curious status of affairs exists respecting the civil service. The Senator from Nebraska is complaining that the civil service law and rules are not enforced. About a week ago I called at the Veterans' Bureau and directed attention to the fact that in certain Veterans' Bureau hospitals there were some employees who were incompetent to perform their work, and that it was obvious to the commanding officer of the hospital who himself desired to discharge some of them; he desired to demote some and to promote others who were competent. I asked the Veterans' Bureau why they did not give the commanding officers at the various hospitals, especially in remote sections, more of a free hand, so that they might discharge incompetent employees and employ and promote competent nurses. They said, "We are afraid of the civil service; we are afraid we shall be denounced for violating the civil service law." I said, "If you attempt to conduct a hospital and to employ, discharge, promote, or demote your personnel according to the civil service rules you will make a lamentable failure of soldier hospitalization." I am not in the attitude of attacking the civil service, but from the case being made here, a peculiar situation exists, to wit: The Senator from Nebraska complains that the civil service law is not enforced, while the Veterans' Bureau complains that it is enforced too rigidly.

There is a reason why civil-service rules might apply in post offices but not in a hospital. I wish, if the rules regarding the civil service are to be enforced, they be enforced in places other than the Veterans' Bureau hospitals, for if the civil-service rules be enforced in the veterans' hospitals there will be no latitude, no room within which to move, no discretion, no freedom of action to the commanding officer. I know at least in one hospital where injustices have been done to the nurses and to the personnel and to the soldiers because of a rigid adherence to the civil-service rules.

So, whilst the Senator from Nebraska complains because the civil-service rules are not enforced, I rise to complain of injustices perpetrated upon helpless soldiers because those rigid, harsh rules are enforced. That statement ought to go into the RECORD as a part of this discussion, in order that Senators and the country may know something about this much-mooted question.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Arizona has put it into the RECORD. Now I will make some comment on his statement.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish the Senator from Nebraska would do so.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it was not my intention to discuss the merits or the demerits of the civil-service law and rules, because when I began my remarks I believe I demonstrated that everybody pretended at least to be in favor of civil service. To begin with, I believe the Senator from Arizona has been misinformed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but I should like for the Senator to let me have a part of the time, in order that I may answer his question.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Nebraska ought to be the last Senator to talk about his having a part of the time. He consumes his equitable part of the time of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. But I am not getting it now, it seems to me. The Senator from Arizona will not let me answer one question before he asks a half dozen more; but I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. And I will let him talk for an hour, if he desires to do so.

Mr. ASHURST. I began my remarks by stating what the Veterans' Bureau told me. I could refer to my notes and show—be more explicit.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, let me answer that. Will the Senator let me take that up before I forget it?

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator is likely to forget it in the next few minutes, I will let him take it up now.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator said the Veterans' Bureau told him a certain thing was the fact. I said that I believed the Senator had been misinformed. That is not questioning the Senator's truthfulness or his honesty or anything else; but that means, if I understand the English language, that the official of the Veterans' Bureau told the Senator something that is not a fact. Does the Senator get that answer?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr NORRIS. That ought to be plain. Mr. President, there is nothing more certain under civil-service rules or law than that an incompetent official may be removed for incompetency. While I know nothing about the case the Senator speaks of, it is perfectly preposterous to say that a hospital can be filled with a corps of nurses and that even God Almighty can not remove them. It is perfectly foolish; there is no fundamental principle of the civil-service rules or law that provides anything of the kind. If there are incompetent nurses their superiors can remove them, and they ought to remove them, although, under the civil-service rules, they will have to give a reason for the removal other than a partisan one.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. If a physician or a nurse or employee in a hospital far removed from Washington, the seat of power, were proved to be incompetent and to be neglecting the soldiers, would the Senator, if he were the commanding officer of that hospital, discharge that physician, nurse, or employee, or would he wait for two months until the Civil Service Commission acted? Would he discharge that person or would he wait until he had untangled red tape for two months before he took proper action? When the Senator answers that question, then he may consistently speak in favor of a rigid adherence to civil-service rules.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator is through, I will proceed to answer him.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator tell me what he would do in that case?

Mr. NORRIS. I would remove the incompetent physician or nurse in about 15 minutes.

Mr. ASHURST. That is the answer I thought the Senator would make.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. The Senator asks would I keep an incompetent nurse on the back of a sick soldier for two months while an investigation was being conducted here in Washington? That is not necessary.

Mr. ASHURST. That would be necessary under the civil service.

Mr. NORRIS. There is not a hospital in the United States under our Government where that would be necessary.

Mr. ASHURST. It would take a long time to untangle and unwind the red tape that has enmeshed this Government.

Mr. NORRIS. If there is a nurse in a hospital caring for a sick soldier and she is not treating him properly, it would not take two months to get her out and get another one in. The question as to whether she was wrongly removed temporarily would be another matter. Now, let us see what would the Senator do? I suppose he would do as the present administration and the preceding one have done in the case of rural carriers. Somebody, we will say, applies to be a nurse out in Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. It so happens that the case I had in mind was not in Arizona. It happened to be not a thousand miles from the Senator's own State.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well, in my State, then; in Nebraska somebody applies to be a nurse in a Government hospital. We will steer away from the civil service; we do not want competency but we want political affiliation. So we go to the Member of Congress and ask him, "Who do you want to be appointed nurse?" and he replies, "Mary Jones." Why does he want her? Because she is the most powerful and influential woman politically in his district. She has never been inside of a hospital; she does not know a sick room from a wheelbarrow; but she is immediately appointed as a nurse to take care of a sick and, perhaps, dying soldier. Under the civil service, if it is desired to remove her, it is not necessary to go through with any red tape. The red tape was gone through with when she was appointed. That is the difference between civil service and political pie-counter methods, although an exaggerated case, probably.

Mr. President, let me say that I do not defend and I do not believe anybody can defend all civil-service appointments. I do not think they are perfect. I realize the Civil Service Commission makes mistakes; I realize that anything human can not be perfect; but if there be any other better method by which to fill clerkships, post offices, and rural carriers' positions than through the instrumentality of an examination conducted by the civil service, let it be suggested. There is nothing sacred about the civil-service rules; I will throw them all aside if I can get something better; but if appointments are put on the pie counter, if it is to be said that this man shall be a rural carrier because he voted for John Doe, and another man shall not be appointed a rural carrier because he did not vote for John Doe, the same principle applied to post offices, to clerkships, and to all other appointments under the Government, if carried out in practice would result in a Government so incompetent that no one could defend it anywhere.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I perceive a vast difference between the workings of the civil service as affecting post offices and rural carriers and as affecting a soldiers' hospital, where technically trained persons are employed to give proper medical treatment to soldiers. If the rules of the civil service in their evolution cause a certain person to be certified to a position as nurse or other employee in a hospital and it is ascertained by the commanding officer that that person, while a very excellent person, is incompetent to perform the particular duties of the office, I believe the commanding officer should, as the Senator says he would do, instantly dismiss that person or demote him or her.

The civil service law is enforced harshly in the wrong place. I think the Senator, if he were a commanding officer of a veterans' hospital and it were demonstrated to him that a physician or a nurse was incompetent, he would, as I would do, discharge them, notwithstanding the civil service.

Mr. NORRIS. That is a part of the civil-service regulations. It is not a violation of the civil service law or rules to remove an incompetent person from office.

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad to know that, because such a remedy is so rarely resorted to that we actually believe that such is not a part of the civil service law. I hope when the officers of the Veterans' Bureau and the commanding officers of the various veterans' hospitals read this copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD they will ascertain that they have power instantly to discharge incompetent employees or those who oppress the soldier, and also have the right to promote those employees who deserve promotion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Apropos of that, I have had statements on this subject made to me by a number of persons holding more or less important positions in the Government service who had under them a considerable number of employees under the civil service. I recall now one particular instance where a postmaster communicated with me. He had perhaps several hundred employees under his control. He called attention to the fact that there were a number of men who did all they could to repress active men from doing their work, and doing it well, and doing it above the requirements of the minimum grade; and when they would find an active individual, who was seeking promotion, who would work zealously and efficiently, they would say, "What is the good? We will get our promotions without zealous work if we reach"—I think it was—"60 per cent," or maybe 70, I am not sure—the minimum grade established—and their influence was demoralizing, and they would do that year in and year out. He said, "I do not dare to prefer charges against them. If I did, it would take weeks and months. It would involve me in a controversy. They would bring to bear the influence of their friends and all the influence which they could command, and I would be the target against which they would direct their javelins"; and others have indicated to me that the difficulty in securing removals, even in the case of gross incompetency, was so great as to deter men who wanted efficiency in their departments from seeking to bring about removals. I dare say that the Senator, in the plenitude of his experience and in view of his great information upon this subject, can not refer to half a dozen instances where charges have been preferred for the removal of incompetent and inefficient employees under the civil service.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator knows the head of a department who is shielding a lot of incompetent employees of the Government, and knows they are incompetent—and I assume if he knows it he can prove it by the record they make—and the Senator himself does not prefer charges against the head of that department, in my judgment he is not doing his full duty. To say, "There are a lot of incompetents here, but I do not want to prefer charges, because that will get me into a controversy," is no defense of the spoils system and no argument against the civil-service system. The same condition would exist whether we had civil service or spoils; and let me tell the Senator where a good deal of that kind of trouble comes from. It is because we are not adhering to the civil-service rules. Here is what happens—and that is probably what his informant had in mind: He is afraid to make charges against Clerk A, an incompetent clerk, because Senator B, from a great State in the Union, a Senator of the United States, is a friend of that incompetent clerk, and the head of that bureau is afraid to make the charge, because he knows that Senator will come to his rescue and say: "Here, I demand that that clerk be retained!" In other words, the Senator is putting into the proposition a political aspect that the civil-service rules, if enforced in good faith, would absolutely keep out of it. There is a danger in just what the Senator speaks of, but it comes because we are still injecting politics into it when we ought to keep it out.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I agree entirely with what the Senator says. I think we have a hybrid system of civil service. I think those in the various departments who would like to enforce the law and develop a high state of efficiency are deterred by the very influence to which I have referred and to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I agree with the Senator. I think that is one of the defects of the system. We ought to remedy it; but the way to remedy it is to put restraint on the Senators and the Representatives and the governors and the chairmen of State committees and other fellows, so that they will not be in a position to go into a department or a bureau and say to a man: "I want you to retain this clerk, or discharge that one, or promote this one, or demote that one."

Mr. KING. I was about to observe, Mr. President—I am trespassing upon the Senator's time and generosity—that the complaints about the civil service have been so numerous that I have sometimes doubted whether it was a success; and I have on my desk a resolution, which I drew nearly a year ago, directing the Civil Service Commission to make a thorough investigation to find out where the defects in the present system are and to recommend such additional legislation as they feel is necessary and imperative to give to the United States a scientific, a proper, and an efficient civil-service system.

I am in favor of having an efficient civil-service system or having none at all. I have felt and said here upon the floor that there is a good deal of a farce in the method under which the civil-service system has been and is being administered; and unless we correct the evils and secure greater efficiency than now exists, I suggest to the Senator that there will be a demand for radical changes, if not an abolition of the civil-service system in the United States.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield to the Senator in just a minute.

As to the resolution that the Senator from Utah is going to introduce, or has prepared, I want to say that I shall be glad to cooperate with the Senator in that respect. The resolution, as he has outlined it, if it is passed and a proper investigation is made under it, will, in my judgment, result in much good to the public service. I do not want to be put in the position of even intimating that I think for a moment that our system is perfect. It is susceptible of great changes. We all ought to bend our energies, in my judgment, toward improvement of the service rather than its abolition. I do not agree with the Senator, if I possibly may draw that conclusion from his remarks, that rather than have it as it is he would not have it at all. Even with all its defects—and there are many, I know—I think it is better than the old spoils system. I believe in honest consideration of it by careful investigation, not without any change, but that we ought to improve it. It is woefully deficient in a great many ways, and I should be glad to see the Senator press his resolution to see that kind of an investigation made.

I yield now to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, may I not ask the Senator if he will not conclude his remarks without interruption? I do not want to invoke the rule; but the discussion is going on, and has been for a long while, on a matter not before the Senate at all. Many Senators are here waiting, hoping the business of the Senate may proceed. I am very anxious to bring up this afternoon, if possible, one of the rural credit bills; and if the Senator would proceed without yielding for speeches, I am sure we would get along very much faster.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I did not expect, of course, to take nearly as much time as I have already taken. I am not to blame for the interruptions.

Mr. LENROOT. No.

Mr. NORRIS. But as far as the criticism made by the Senator from Wisconsin is concerned, I want to say that he can not apply that kind of a doctrine now and have an open proposition at all other times. I have not been in the habit of delaying the proceedings here, and I am discussing something that was properly brought out, and a proposition that the very bill now pending contains an appropriation to carry on. I do not think the Senator from Wisconsin can with good grace come in now and say, "I want you to stop; I want you to take up something else."

Mr. LENROOT. I have made no such request of the Senator. I merely asked him if he would not proceed without interruption, without yielding for other speeches in his time.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I will attend to whether I will yield or not. I do not think any other Senator should dictate to me.

Mr. LENROOT. Every Senator has a right to invoke the rule, and I propose to do it.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator can invoke any rule he pleases, Mr. President. I do not care anything about that. I will proceed without interruption unless I am interrupted, and I can not interrupt myself. If somebody else interrupts me, I will be interrupted, and I will decide whether I will yield or whether I will not.

Mr. President, in addition to taking up this matter with the Post Office Department and with the Postmaster General, I took it up with the Civil Service Commission. Upon the same day that I wrote to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General with regard to these rural carriers I likewise wrote to the Civil Service Commission.

I send a copy of that letter to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 15, 1922.

Hon. GEORGE R. WALES,
Commissioner, Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR MR. COMMISSIONER: I have just been informed that the Post Office Department is now submitting to Members of Congress wherever they happen to be Republicans, and where there are no Republican Members of Congress then to Republican Senators, and where there are neither Republican Senators nor Republican Members of Congress then to the chairmen of Republican committees, the eligible list of rural carriers furnished by the Civil Service Commission, and that in this way selection is made by the persons mentioned for the appointment of rural carriers.

I want to know how it came about that this order went into effect and whether it was with the consent of the Civil Service Commission. It seems to me that putting these positions on the political pie counter is throwing the door wide open and prostituting the civil service law, and the result will be that the service will deteriorate and become a political machine.

If we are going to have any civil service law at all, it ought to be enforced in good faith; and when the law is being thus prostituted it seems to me the Civil Service Commission ought to take the lead in protesting before the proper officials of the Government; and if that does not have any effect, then to protest publicly before the country.

Both political parties have been pledging themselves to the enforcement, in letter and in spirit, of the civil service law, and this ought to be done, or we ought to abolish the Civil Service Commission, repeal the civil service law, and let everybody know that all these positions of the Government are on the political pie counter and will be dealt out only to the partisan faithful.

Very truly yours, G. W. NORRIS.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, to that letter I received a reply from the commission that I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., December 19, 1922.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR NORRIS: You do not need my personal assurance to know that the matter referred to in your letter of December 15 has never had the indorsement or consent of the commission.

You know, of course, that section 10 of the civil service act forbids the receiving of any recommendation for office or place in the classified service from a Senator or Member of the House of Representatives "except as to the character or residence of the applicant"; and that in the civil service rules promulgated by the President in accordance with the act appears a provision for the certification of the highest three names from among whom the appointing office shall make selection "with sole reference to merit and fitness." To aid in making this selection the commission sends to the department with each certification the examination papers of the three eligibles certified, showing in detail their education and experience and their work in the written tests.

In 1913 the Post Office Department inaugurated the practice of sending to the local Member of Congress the names and ratings of the three eligibles certified to fill a vacancy in a rural-carrier position or a fourth-class postmastership; and, in November, 1913, the Postmaster General issued the following to the press concerning the practice:

"In answering an inquiry recently as to what influence political affiliations would have in fourth-class postmaster and rural-carrier appointments, Postmaster General Burleson stated that he desired it distinctly understood that it is his purpose to carry out the intent of President Wilson's order that these positions be filled in accordance with both the spirit and letter of the civil service law. The Postmaster General added that he does not delegate the power of appointment, nor in any case is selection made simply upon or because of a recommendation of a Member of Congress. He stated further that he has a duty to perform in making selections under the civil-service rules; that it is his desire to select in every case the most efficient man obtainable and that in furtherance of such desire he is using, and intends to continue to use, every available means of ascertaining the best of the men certified to him by the Civil Service Commission. In his efforts to secure the most efficient man for the postal service, and as part of the evidence upon which he reaches his conclusion, it is his practice to ask the Member of Congress in whose district the vacancy exists to advise him relative to the character and fitness of the three eligibles. In doing so the Postmaster General calls upon the Member, not in his capacity as a member of any political party, but solely as the representative of the community, regardless of political affiliations; and to emphasize his purpose in this respect the Postmaster General, in asking the Member of Congress for his recommendation, calls special attention to the fact that under existing Executive orders selections must be made by the department with sole reference to merit and fitness and any recommendation made to him must be based solely upon such considerations and without reference to the political affiliations of the eligibles. And further, he has directed that all letters recommending appointments based upon political considerations be returned to the writers.

"The Postmaster General states that he is in earnest in his efforts to obtain the best men, regardless of their political opinions, and whenever he finds in any case that he has been misled because of recommendations made for political reasons, the fourth-class postmaster or rural carrier so appointed will be promptly removed from office."

The commission has protested personally and officially against this practice and referred to its harmful effects in letters concerning individual cases. A quotation from one such letter to the Postmaster General will suffice:

"This is apparently an instance of political discrimination resulting from the action of the department in receiving recommendations from Members of Congress in connection with the commission's certification for fourth-class postmasters and rural carrier vacancies. While the department in inviting such indorsements quotes the regulation that no recommendation in any way based on political opinions or affiliations 'shall be received or considered by any officer concerned in making selections or appointments,' and the recommendation received in response thereto may make no reference to the political opinions or affiliations of the person indorsed, the number of complaints received by the commission indicates that in some cases Members of Congress base their indorsements upon reports of county committeemen and other politicians in the locality where the vacancy exists. A selection based on indorsements of this character is in violation of the provisions of the civil service act and rules concerning political discriminations and section 4 of the fourth-class postmaster regulations * * *."

There is no power or authority resting in the commission to go beyond such protests, except in any case where the charge is made with offer of proof that there has been any violation of the civil service act, then the commission makes investigation, and, if the charges are found to be true, recommendation is made to the Post Office Department for removal of the person thus improperly appointed. In some instances the department has carried out the commission's recommendations.

The commission is very definitely of the view that the inauguration and continuance of the practice has been detrimental to the Government service and has had a tendency to discourage competition through examination for these local positions of rural carrier and fourth-class postmaster.

Very sincerely yours, G. R. WALES, Commissioner.

Mr. NORRIS. Some time after the receipt of that letter I answered it, and I ask to have my reply read from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 4, 1923.

Hon. GEORGE R. WALES,
Commissioner United States Civil Service Commission,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WALES: I have been absent from Washington on account of the serious illness of my sister in Ohio and have not had time to give attention to my correspondence. In clearing up my desk I have just reached your letter of December 19, 1922. I desire to commend the position you have there taken. I have protested to the Postmaster General, and in his reply he said, in effect, the same thing Postmaster General Burleson said in the interview quoted in your letter. I have in answer to this letter again protested. It seems to me that when men who are supposed to be competent to be the head of our Post Office Department undertake to cover themselves up with such a thin shield of excuses, it must be apparent that they consider the friends of civil-service reform to be very easily deceived. The idea of claiming to carry out the real intent of the Civil Service Commission law, while they are submitting to Members of Congress the eligible list and asking them to make a recommendation as to which of three shall be selected is simply preposterous. It does not require even a wise man to see that this is just one method of completely circumventing the real intent of the law. It would be interesting to know what the result has been as far as political affiliations of these appointees are concerned. A Democratic Postmaster General submits the names to Democratic Members of Congress, a Republican Postmaster General submits the names to Republican Members of Congress, and in each instance the Congressman is notified that the selection must not be made on partisan grounds. The Member of Congress makes the selection, and in his letter of recommendation he claims to base it entirely on grounds that are not in any way partisan, but I venture the assertion that the result is always partisan selection of postmasters and rural carriers. Under a Republican administration in some way the Republicans get in, and under a Democratic administration in some way the Democrats get in.

I would like to have from you information on this subject. Can you give me the result of this kind of application of the civil service laws? I would like to know under the Republican administrations how many Republicans and how many Democrats get into office, and under the Democratic administration I would like the same information.

Very truly yours, G. W. NORRIS.

Mr. NORRIS. It will be observed that I asked the commissioner a question. In his answer he was not able to give me the information. There is no particular importance to be attached to his letter, except that he explained why he was not able to supply the information. Of course, I really ought to have known that when I wrote the letter. I ask to have the answer of the commissioner printed as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., January 6, 1923.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR NORRIS: I should be very glad indeed to comply with your request under date of January 4 were it possible to do so, but the particular thing we do not know and which we explicitly refrain from seeking to know is the political affiliations or convictions of applicants for civil-service examination. The commission's literature is very specific in pointing out that its action may not under the law be influenced by political consideration, and in the rural-carrier pamphlet of information sent to inquirers for examination appears the following:

"The President on December 30, 1922, issued the following Executive order:

"'Hereafter paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 1 of civil-service rule 7 shall apply to the appointment of rural carriers, and three eligibles shall be certified by the Civil Service Commission.

"'In all cases selections shall be made with sole reference to merit and fitness and without regard to political considerations. No inquiry shall be made as to the political or religious opinions or affiliations of any eligible and no recommendation in any way based thereon shall be received, considered, or filed by any officer concerned in making selections or appointments. Any such recommendation in writing forwarded to any such officer shall be at once returned to the writer, with attention invited to the purport of this order, and attention hereto shall be similarly directed in connection with any verbal recommendation. Where it is found that there has been a violation of these provisions by any officer concerned in making selections or appointments, such fact shall be cause for the immediate removal of such officer from the service, and the commission shall make prompt report of any such case for appropriate action to the Postmaster General or, as to presidential appointees, to the President. The appointment of the rural carrier concerned, if effected, shall be canceled.

"'Persons employed as rural carriers, while retaining the right to vote as they please and to express their opinion privately on all political subjects, shall take no active part in political campaigns. Any rural carrier taking such part shall be removed from the service or otherwise disciplined, recommendation as to the penalty to be imposed in each case to be made by the Civil Service Commission.

"'WILLIAM H. TAFT.'"

A similar paragraph appears in the fourth-class postmaster pamphlet of information:

"The competitive-examination system, with its ever-improving standards, is more and more commending itself to private industry as the right method of securing qualified personnel, and judging from the number of inquiries we have received as to our methods and tests this is in part due to its successful application to filling Government positions. We do not see how this reference to local Members of Congress can possibly help, and do see how it can and does hurt.

"Sincerely yours,

"G. R. WALES, Commissioner."

Mr. NORRIS. It would be interesting to know about this nonpartisan system, by which Republican committees are notified who are the three eligibles on the rural route running out of Podunk. They are told very carefully, "There is no politics in this, no partisanship. Your recommendations must be based upon merit. Whom do you want?" Although the committeeman may live 40 miles away from the rural route, he does know one thing which he finds out. He knows that "A" on the list is a Democrat, that "B" is a Republican, and that "C" is a Democrat, and immediately he recommends "B." He does it entirely on the ground of "B's" competency. He does not know anything about that. He has made only one inquiry, has asked only one question, and has had one question answered, and that is as to the politics of the applicant.

When it comes up to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, he says, "I am deciding this on nonpartisan grounds, but I always let the Republican have it." If the administration is Democratic, it is just the reverse.

Let me repeat what I said in the beginning. It seems to me that common honesty, fair treatment of the country and of the people, and of the applicants for these offices demand that we either enforce the civil service law in spirit, as well as in letter, or that we go before the people open-handed and admit that we do not intend to enforce it, and that we lied when we said we would enforce it. It ought to be enforced properly, or we ought to have the courage to say that we never will enforce it, and never intend to do so.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I rose for the purpose of offering an amendment to the pending bill and proceeding with its discussion, but I understand the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] wishes to refer to some observations which have just been made, and I am willing to yield for that purpose.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I will be very brief and promise not to delay the business of the Senate a very long time in the consideration of the civil service. I am led to call attention to a few matters in view of the course the discussion has taken in regard to that service.

I did not know this was going to be a field day in criticism of the civil service law and of the civil service rules and of the administration of the civil service. The discussion started out, as all are aware, with a complaint made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] because the President of the United States had not responded to a resolution offered by the Senator requesting the President to name the positions wherein the civil-service rules had been set aside or waived by the President of the United States in making appointments or in reinstating persons to the civil service. The discussion has ended by a general discussion of the civil service law, rules, and I may say, too, of the administration of the civil service. I contend that much that has been said by Senators to-day is wholly without warrant and without foundation, especially as their remarks relate to the administration of the law and the civil-service rules.

Senators perhaps may know of an isolated case here and there where justice has not been done, where there may have been some failure to observe the rule or where there has been inadvertence or mistake of judgment. But, Mr. President, those cases are comparatively few. When we consider that there are between 500,000 and 600,000 civil-service employees, two-thirds of whom, I think, are under the civil service law and civil service rules, we are led to wonder there is not more to criticize than there is in regard to the administration of the law and of the rules.

I want to call attention to the law. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] said awhile ago that he had a resolution which had been pending for some time——

Mr. KING. I beg the Senator's pardon. I said I had prepared one about a year ago and had it in my desk. I have not offered it.

Mr. STERLING. Very well. To do away with the civil service law and the rules framed pursuant to that law would raise such a storm of protest upon the part of the people of the United States—and the whole people of the United States—as has never been heard or witnessed, I think, throughout the country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. KING. I do not want the Senator to infer from any observation which I made that my resolution would call for the abolition of the Civil Service Commission. I intended to state, if I did not, that my resolution would call for an examination or an investigation with a view to determining what amendments should be offered to the existing law in order to secure efficiency in the administration of the affairs of the Government and to give us a scientific—I used that expression, as I recall—and proper civil-service system.

Mr. STERLING. That may be true with reference to the resolution itself, but I understood the Senator to say that he did not know but that the law itself should be repealed.

Now, what is the law? Just what is it, and what does it require? Let me read:

First, for open, competitive examinations for testing the fitness of applicants for the public service now classified or to be classified hereunder. Such examinations shall be practical in their character, and so far as may be shall relate to those matters which will fairly test the relative capacity and fitness of the persons examined to discharge the duties of the service into which they seek to be appointed.

Second, that all the offices, places, and employments so arranged, or to be arranged in classes, shall be filled by selections according to grade from among those graded highest as the results of such competitive examinations.

Third, appointments to the public service aforesaid in the departments at Washington shall be apportioned among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population as ascertained at the last preceding census. Every application for an examination shall contain, among other things, a statement, under oath, setting forth his or her actual bona fide residence at the time of making the application, as well as how long he or she has been resident of such place.

Fourth, that there shall be a period of probation before any absolute appointment or employment aforesaid.

Fifth, that no person in the public service is for that reason under any obligations to contribute to any political fund, or to render any political service, and that he will not be removed or otherwise prejudiced for refusing to do so.

Sixth, that no person in said service has any right to use his official authority or influence to coerce the political action of any person or body.

I want to say, in this connection, that amidst all the statements that have been made here to-day, as I recall them, not one instance has been named where political influence was, in fact, used for the purpose of securing this or that appointment to either a post office or to a position strictly within the civil service. It is easy enough to make these allegations. It is another thing to prove them, as the select committee of five from the Civil Service Committee of the Senate, appointed to consider a certain resolution introduced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], itself reported.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I may have misapprehended the position of the Senator, but I understood him to say that no evidence has been tendered and no case mentioned where political influence has been used to secure the appointment of persons within the civil service.

Mr. STERLING. No such statement made to-day, I want the Senator to understand.

Mr. KING. To-day?

Mr. STERLING. Yes. No such statement was made in all the extensive discussion which has gone on here in criticism of the Civil Service Commission and the civil service itself. I do not recall that a statement was made of a concrete case where it was shown that political influence was used for that purpose.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator concede that postmasters are within the civil service?

Mr. STERLING. No.

Mr. KING. Or that rural carriers are within the civil service?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; I think they are with the provision that selections may be made from the three highest eligibles on examination.

Mr. KING. I think the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] would contravene the position taken by my distinguished friend, and I think some of the statements which I made would be in contravention of his position.

Mr. STERLING. We will see.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am very curious to have the Senator tell the methods pursued by the special committee conducting the investigation under the resolution introduced by my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] in arriving at the conclusion that there was no political influence used in the civil service. Was a single witness called?

Mr. STERLING. Witnesses were given an opportunity to come.

Mr. CARAWAY. Were not the names of people given to the committee and was not the committee asked that they be subpœnaed, but they were not subpœnaed?

Mr. STERLING. The committee perhaps had some names. I do not know that there was any such request.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did the committee call a single witness except merely to refer the matter to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. STERLING. The committee gave full opportunity to the Senators who had filed letters and charges to appear before the committee with their witnesses, if they had them.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did the Senator say witnesses?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; with their witnesses.

Mr. CARAWAY. I would like to say to the Senator that that is the first time I ever heard of such a thing. I gave letters to the committee and asked that certain witnesses be heard, and they were never heard.

Mr. STERLING. And then from time to time, in addition to that, the findings of the commission or the hearings of the commission were published and were sent to all Senators who had filed any complaint at all.

Mr. CARAWAY. I filed letters with the committee and never heard of them from that time until the committee made its report.

Mr. STERLING. And the Senator will find in the report and in the testimony mention of every case and a discussion of every case which he submitted.

Mr. CARAWAY. Absolutely—a finding that there was not anything in it, without hearing a witness.

Mr. STERLING. And the Senator has never complained about those findings or about the report.

Mr. CARAWAY. The findings and the report were just what everybody expected them to be.

Mr. STERLING. Exactly.

Mr. President, if I may proceed just briefly, I continue the reading of the civil service law:

Seventh, there shall be noncompetitive examinations in all proper cases before the commission, when competent persons do not compete, after notice has been given of the existence of the vacancy, under such rules as may be prescribed by the commissioners as to the manner of giving notice.

Eighth, that notice shall be given in writing by the appointing power to said commission of the persons selected for appointment or employment from among those who have been examined, of the place of residence of such persons, of the rejection of any such persons after probation, of transfers, resignations, and removals, and of the date thereof, and a record of the same shall be kept by said commission.

Mr. President, I think I have read enough to show what the civil service law is in the main and to show, too, the spirit of the law. The spirit of it is to get persons into the civil service of the Government who by examination have shown their fitness for the places. In other words, the civil-service system is a merit system in contradistinction to the spoils system which was in vogue before the enactment of the civil service law. I remember to have read a statement made by Richard Dana, formerly president of the National Civil Service Reform League, that $39,000,000 had been saved annually in the increased efficiency of the employees because of the civil-service examinations they were required to take under the law.

Now, Mr. President, I come to a question that is a little more at issue in the discussion; and briefly, too, as to that. I alluded a little while ago to the complaint made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] because of the failure of the President to comply with his request. The Senator from Mississippi would convey the idea that the resolution related entirely to post offices, whereas it was general and covered all Executive appointments in which changes or waivers were made by the Executive in regard to the civil-service rules. There is not a word in the resolution itself in regard to postmasters—not one word.

The post offices are not under the civil service law or rules, but for the convenience of the Executive, and I think, too, in the interests of the general welfare, the President of the United States provided that a civil-service examination or, it is more proper to say, an examination analogous to a civil-service examination should be taken by the candidates for post offices. The rule was made under a former administration that the highest eligible in that examination should be appointed to the place. The rule was changed by President Harding to the effect that the names of the three highest eligibles ascertained by examination should be sent to the President of the United States first, or rather to the Post Office Department, though I am not sure as to the exact language—whether sent to the Executive or to the Post Office Department. In any event, the long investigation conducted by the select committee from the Senate Committee on Civil Service did not discover a single case, save perhaps one, in about 100, as I think there were, where the judgment of the Civil Service Commission was, in the opinion of the select committee, at fault. In that case there was abundant evidence of the entire good faith of the Civil Service Commission. It was simply an error of judgment, if an error at all. The committee in its report criticized the finding of the Civil Service Commission in regard to that one case.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is the Senator speaking of the report of the special committee of which I was a member?

Mr. STERLING. That was the committee of which the Senator from Tennessee was a member.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to take absolute issue with the Senator on the statement he has just made that there was not any case submitted to the committee which did not reflect upon the fairness of the action of the Civil Service Commission. I submitted at least half a score from Tennessee, which the committee, by a majority vote, a strictly partisan vote, voted down. Every one reflected seriously upon the action of the commission in certifying men who went in under the civil service at the behest of the political referee in Tennessee, who was selling his influence for civil-service appointments.

Mr. STERLING. And I shall call attention to that case. Of all the cases submitted to the select committee, the cases submitted by the Senator from Tennessee had the least foundation, and some of them——

Mr. McKELLAR. Then the commission ought to have been abolished.

Mr. STERLING. I will quote from the report in regard to Chapel Hill, Tenn. This is another case where it is charged that money had been paid to Mr. Overall, he being, I suppose, the "referee" referred to here.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and the canceled checks which he had received were submitted.

Mr. STERLING. The report states:

> The committee can do no better than to quote from the memorandum of the Civil Service Commission, found on page 163:
> "Senator McKELLAR next refers to the alleged appointment of a rural carrier at Cheap Hill, or Chapel Hill, Tenn., but here he fails to give any names or testimony or evidence indicating that any one of the three persons whose names were certified to the department for consideration in filling the rural-carrier position had paid money to Mr. Overall for any purpose whatsoever. The commission advised Senator McKELLAR in its letter of September 1, 1921, of the names of these three rural-carrier eligibles who were certified, and that the department had not reported selection from among the three; and the Senator also was advised of the provisions of law and rules relating to trafficking in appointments, and that 'if a prima facie case is submitted to the commission of violation of the Federal statutes relating to trafficking or of the civil-service rules, the commission will submit it to the Department of Justice for prosecution, or take such administrative action as may be appropriate.'
> "The Civil Service Commission has not since heard from Senator McKELLAR in this connection."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The fact was that the Civil Service Commission virtually admitted the payment of the money, but they asserted that under a fair interpretation of the law the Civil Service Commission was not the authority to enforce the law.

Mr. STERLING. How did they admit it? When did they admit it?

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, it was a pure technicality. So, having been overruled, as I was overruled by a majority of the committee—the entire Republican strength voting in favor of that system of appointing persons to the civil service—I took no further steps in the matter. I denounced it, however, on the floor of the Senate time and again, just as I am doing now. I think it is a most reprehensible custom. It is a custom that any party ought to be ashamed of.

Mr. STERLING. And one Democratic member of the committee joined in the report. The Senator from Tennessee was not here at the time the report was made and had not been here for some time previously. We did not know when he would return. The report was prepared, and I made the statement at the time that the report would have been submitted to the Senator from Tennessee before presentation, but there was a time limit on its presentation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was away for a few days, and while I was gone the report was made; and I never was consulted about it.

Mr. STERLING. There was a time limit under the original order for the submission of that report. The time was twice extended, and then, with the last extension, it was thought the report should be presented. I did present it after consultation and after going over the subject matter with the other members of the committee, including the Democratic colleague of the Senator from Tennessee, who was as ready, so far as that is concerned, to sign the report as was any Republican member of the committee. Indeed, we did not in its consideration or in coming to our conclusion consider politics in any way or in any sense whatever. The question was one of evidence, whether charges had been sustained, whether the Civil Service Commission or its examiners were in any way at fault.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to ask the Senator if the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], who signed the report and to whom the Senator from South Dakota is referring, was present at a single solitary hearing of the committee? I was present at all of the hearings with perhaps one or two exceptions, and I do not recall ever seeing the Senator from Louisiana at one of those hearings. So far as he is concerned, I do not know whether or not he heard the testimony; I do not know whether or not he examined the testimony or whether he merely accepted the the conclusions upon the statement of the majority members of the committee. The Senator is here, however, and may speak for himself and tell us about it.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, since my name has been brought forward in the discussion of this matter, I desire to say that I was a member of the subcommittee which considered this subject. I heard a great deal of the testimony and signed the report. The committee went into it, I thought, fully and fairly. There were some transactions that were, perhaps, a little questionable; but, so far as the evidence before us was concerned, I do not find anything there other than is presented in the report. We went into the subject with a good deal of care.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. Pardon me for a moment, and then I will yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wish to ask the Senator a question, if he will yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will yield in a moment.

We went into the matter with a good deal of care. I did not give my personal attention to all of the cases, I will say to the Senate, but I did give my personal attention to quite a number of them. My recollection is that we had a synopsis of each case presented to us by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. It was after what seemed to me to be a fair investigation of the whole matter that we prepared the report and I signed it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator from Louisiana recall the Tennessee cases at all?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not remember them.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure the Senator could not recall the Tennessee case in which it was undisputed that the Republican referee of Tennessee, John W. Overall, sold his indorsement for civil-service positions and received the money. I produced the canceled checks showing that the money went to his credit in the Broadway National Bank of Nashville, Tenn. Under those circumstances, the Civil Service Commission and the committee, acting purely in a partisan spirit, held that it was proper and right for a referee of one party to sell his influence for civil-service positions, when they knew of the canceled checks from the applicants for the position. If my good friend from Louisiana, knowing those facts, signed a statement approving it, then I am astonished at him.

Mr. RANSDELL. I know nothing about the matter to which the Senator from Tennessee refers.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know the Senator does not. I am sure he would not have signed the report if he had known.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have just stated that I did not hear all the testimony, but I devoted all the time I could to the matter. If there was any partisanship in it, I fail to see it.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator from Louisiana a question?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator from Louisiana know anything about the case at Greenwood, Ark.?

Mr. RANSDELL. There was considerable testimony about two or three cases in Arkansas, but I do not remember that particular case.

Mr. CARAWAY. Here is what happened: Democrats who took the examination made a sufficiently high mark to be placed on the eligible list, while the Republican who had been selected for the place did not. The Republican referee of the State, however, went to see the Civil Service Commission, and the commission raised the grade of the Republican without notice, and, without any further examination, gave him the job. Is that the Senator's idea as to the manner in which the civil service should be conducted?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not know anything about the details of the case.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is the fact. Does the Senator approve it?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not know, and I am not going to be forced to give testimony here about a matter I do not understand.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think the Senator does not understand a thing about the report.

Mr. RANSDELL. Very probably I now do not, but at the time I signed it I did; I knew what I was doing when I signed that report, and I did not find any partisanship in it. I did not find anything unjust in it, or I never would have signed it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why can not the Senator now say that he approves of changing the grade in order to put a Republican in office?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not know the details of the case at all.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is the fact; does the Senator approve that?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I decline to yield any further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. STERLING. Now, Mr. President, I will call attention to one other Tennessee case. The investigation—under the resolution ordering it—was an investigation of the examining division of the Civil Service Commission. I call attention to the case at Pulaski, Tenn.:

Pulaski, Tenn. (p. 162): Another case where had some inquiry been made it would not have been brought to the attention of this committee; a case where one candidate, Mr. Noble C. White, is alleged to have paid a sum of money to Mr. John W. Overall, Republican State committeeman, for the purpose of securing the postmastership at Pulaski. The memorandum furnished by the commission simply shows that Mr. White was not among the highest three eligibles certified to the department. Those certified were William D. Kirkpatrick, with an average per cent of 81.40; William B. Romine, 79.20; Mahlon H. Webb, 78.60.

It is claimed that Mr. White paid a sum of money to Mr. Overall, as referee; but even if the allegations were true Mr. White was not one of the three highest eligibles and was not considered for the post-office appointment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was wholly immaterial as to whether he was one of the three highest eligibles. I call the Senator's attention to another case that was before the committee, the case of Rutherford, Tenn. In that instance there were three eligibles, but a gentleman who had stood the examination and made about 40 per cent and whose wife had made about 66 per cent employed Mr. Overall to come to Washington, paid him a fee and paid his expenses, and Mr. Overall came to Washington, prevailed upon the Civil Service Commission to put the Republican politician's wife at the head of the list over the three eligibles, and the appointment of the wife came in here and was rejected by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator state again the name of the town?

Mr. McKELLAR. At Rutherford, Tenn. I repeat of the three eligibles two were Democrats and one was a Republican. The Republican could still have been appointed postmaster there, although he was third on the list, but he was not satisfactory to the Republican boss. So Mr. Overall came to Washington, went to the Civil Service Commission and had that commission put the wife of the politician, she having a rating of 66, at the head of the list, and her name was sent to the Senate in preference to the three eligibles, but the Senate rejected the nomination on my motion.

Mr. STERLING. I wish to ask the Senator as to whether any complaint in regard to the Rutherford office was before the select committee?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know whether it was before the committee or not. I know I made a statement about it.

Mr. STERLING. Then, how would the Senator from Tennessee expect us to investigate a case of which the committee had no knowledge?

Mr. McKELLAR. I made the charges before the committee, but was treated with the scantiest courtesy by the committee. They did not consider that case; they never considered it in open session, so far as I know.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I can not imagine that a committee, if I may allude to myself personally, but over which I might have the honor to preside, would show a lack of courtesy toward any Senator in this body.

Mr. McKELLAR. The report was made without notifying me at all at any time. If I had known about it, I would have protested.

Mr. STERLING. I am satisfied now, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee, that he made no charge before the select committee in regard to the Rutherford office. I do not find it mentioned in the report, although Tennessee offices are grouped in that document.

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be true.

Mr. STERLING. There is no reference to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be entirely true; but because no charge was made with regard to one of the offices is no reason why the civil-service rules should have been violated in the outrageous manner in which they were violated at Pulaski, at Chapel Hill, and at various other places in Tennessee, where places under the civil service were sold by the Republican referee, Mr. Overall.

Mr. STERLING. It is shown clearly, Mr. President, that the Senator has no foundation for charging the select committee with any delinquency in the consideration of the cases or in preparing and submitting its report. If the attention of the select committee was not called to the Rutherford office, how in the world could they have made any investigation in regard to it?

Mr. President, to hurry to a conclusion, I made a reference this morning in answer to the Senator from Mississippi to the fact that the Civil Service Commission reports show all the cases where the civil-service rules have been waived or temporarily suspended for the purpose of an appointment. I want to go back now to that. I have in my hand the civil-service report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. Under the head "Orders excepting persons named from the requirements of the rules," I find on October 2, October 20, and November 30, 1920, orders were issued by President Wilson making appointments waiving the rules.

I find, following the appointment of November 30, 1920, the following:

NOTE: The commission was not advised of the reasons for the issuance of the above order.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] in his long speech to-day pleaded for impartiality here as between Republicans and Democrats. Mr. President, when I consider the motives that actuated the inquiry this morning in the first place as to why the President had not complied with the terms of the resolution, I think I am quite warranted in reading these notes of the Civil Service Commission.

I find under the head of February 12, 1921, while President Wilson was yet President, that—

Mrs. May G. Pollock, of Illinois, may be appointed in the classified service without regard to civil-service rules.

No hint of any reason is given there for that order, but following it is the note of the commission:

The commission was not advised of the reasons for the issuance of the above order.

And so on through.

I think as between President Wilson and President Harding, as shown by this report, that for any given time they have made about an equal number of Executive orders waiving the rules, and I am not complaining of the Wilson orders as they appear in the report.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to say to the Senator that in a good many places in my State there are no Republicans competent to hold office, and the unfortunate part of this system is that it gives the referee an opportunity to sell the office to some one who may make him a bid. Therefore, in my section of the country the correct solution would be to give it to the one making the highest mark.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; but barring one case, which the Senator knows about, I recall none from his State in which charges were made.

Mr. President, I call attention to the report, that for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, under the head of "Orders excepting persons named from the requirements of the rules." It begins with the order of September 30, 1921. It goes down to the last order before this report was published, September 8, 1922, nearly a year. There are just 29 cases within that one year where orders were made excepting the persons named from the requirements of the rule—just 29 cases—and there are between five hundred and six hundred thousand employees in the service of the Government, two-thirds of whom, I think, are under the civil service law and rules. I submit, Mr. President, that that is a remarkable record when we consider the great number of employees and the small number of instances in which the President has appointed or reinstated, notwithstanding the rules; and I think among those 29 there are not to exceed three cases where the reasons in full are not set out, and set out in some cases at considerable length.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is just a brief suggestion that I want to make to the Senator from South Dakota. No doubt he will recall it when I mention it. I do not like to bring up partisan questions here in the Senate, but during the last administration the abuses of the civil service laws and regulations grew so great, in the opinion of a majority of the Civil Service Commission, that they took the matter before the President. There was one Republican member of the Civil Service Commission and two Democrats, but the position that was taken by the Republican member of the Civil Service Commission was so fair and was so soundly based upon the evidence in the various cases that one of the Democrats joined with him in protest against the violation of the civil-service rules and laws. They took the matter before President Wilson, and he fired both of them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STERLING. I will yield for a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is one thing that President Wilson and his administration did, however. When a resolution of the Senate was addressed to him, or addressed to the president of the Civil Service Commission, full facts and details were given in response to the resolution. I have here a report of date August 16, 1916, giving all the information as to every Executive order that had been made by President Wilson from the 4th of March, 1913, down. As I understood the contention of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] this morning, it was that the Senate had passed a resolution calling upon President Harding to furnish the same kind of information during his term of office, and he had paid no attention whatsoever to the resolution of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I think I will decline to yield further.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to call the attention of the disputants, as well as of the other Senators, to the fact that we are not reaching any conclusion upon any subject that is contained in the bill, and there is no motion before us relating to the bill that should call for so long a discussion of this matter.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I would have closed the discussion long ago if it had not been for the interruptions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. If the chairman of the committee may take three or four minutes of the Senator's time, he will thank the Senator to give it to him.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the chairman always.

Mr. WARREN. This is Saturday, late in the day. Monday, as we know, is calendar day, and it has been my desire to finish this bill to-day. I have been patient. I have submitted to all kinds of talk, the washing of dirty linen included, and I think that no good purpose is served by a further continuation of it; so I am going to appeal to all Senators to lay aside these many differences about post offices—there are some 100,000 post offices, for that matter, over which they might differ—and let us proceed with the regular business of the amendments that Senators wish to offer to this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I decline to yield further. I shall take but a few minutes in conclusion. I appreciate the request made by the Senator from Wyoming in regard to it.

Mr. KING. I wanted to help the Senator by making a motion which I intended to make heretofore.

Mr. STERLING. I do not believe it will help.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield at this point.

Mr. STERLING. I want to call attention to one or two circumstances under which these Executive orders were made. I have here one of which I have personal knowledge. It is under date of June 28, 1921:

> Miss Katherine M. Caesar, temporarily employed as clerk, Division of Loans and Currency, Treasury Department, since April 25, 1918, may be permanently appointed in her present position with condition against being assigned to other duty and against promotion beyond $900 a year except upon qualifying for appointment through appropriate competitive examination.
> This order is issued because of Miss Caesar's exceptional ability readily to locate lost papers in a more or less complicated system of filing, as demonstrated during her many months of temporary service; and also because, although having made earnest study and effort to do so, she has not yet been able to qualify through examination.

This Miss Caesar was a perfect genius in her particular line of work. They said down there at the Division of Loans and Currency that they hardly knew how they would get along without her, and the recommendation was made to the Secretary of the Treasury that he recommend to the President that he make an Executive order continuing her in the service under these limitations, namely, that she could not be promoted to any other branch of the service, and to the effect that her salary should not exceed $900 a year. For the work that she was doing she was entitled to a greater salary than any $900 a year.

Mr. President, calling attention again to the report for 1922, I simply wish that Senators might read over these 29 cases, and see the reasons given by the Executive in all but two or three cases why the Executive order was made.

In conclusion I want to say that I believe if Senators will examine the reports of the Civil Service Commission or confer with the members of the commission and get an understanding of their methods and their attitude toward the civil service law and rules, they will no longer be either as critical or as pessimistic as some of them seem to be to-day concerning the observance of the civil service law and rules, but rather they will be prepared to regard our civil service as a truly indispensable institution and will agree that on the whole it is well and faithfully administered.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I came in the Chamber in the midst of this discussion and would have had no occasion to engage in it if it had not been for the extravagant eulogy by the Senator from South Dakota to-day of his special committee and the Civil Service Commission. I have had any number of complaints——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me just to make a motion before he begins his speech on that subject? The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] objected because there was nothing before the Senate. I want to move, with the permission of the Senator from Arkansas, to strike out on page 6, beginning with the word "Provided" on line 14, to the end of line 18, and on page 8, beginning at line 1 and ending on line 4. These are the provisions that provide for appropriations for the Civil Service Commission for making examinations for first, second, and third class postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I shall be brief.

I examined with interest the report of the special committee. I have not it before me, but, as I now recall, the procedure was the same in nearly every case, namely, when the complaint was filed it was referred to the Civil Service Commission, and it offered some explanation. That was accepted as conclusive. To call that an examination of the facts is such a stretch of the expression "to examine into or inquire about a matter" that I do not presume anyone regarded it other than a farce.

Personally, taking one case, that of a man who wanted to be postmaster at Greenwood, in my State, and on the examination made sixty-odd—I believe it was 65—the Republican referee came, had it raised to seventy-odd, and had his candidate promptly given the post office.

Paragould, where I was more intimately acquainted with the facts, was also complained of bitterly. I had a correspondence and conversation over the phone with Mr. Bartlett while he was president of the Civil Service Commission. I was told that an examination had been held there, but papers were not available; they could not be seen by anyone. Afterwards I saw what they called an examination, which was simply the applicants filling out a statement of their qualifications for the office—not an examination, but were such as if he had said "I am a Republican."

The statement was made by Bartlett to me that certain people had given confidential information. I tried to get the facts about that, and it is conclusive that there was no fact to warrant the statement. It was a misrepresenation by the Civil Service Commission of the facts.

All those matters were filed before the committee of which the Senator from South Dakota was chairman. I laid the letters before the committee myself, and made an explanation of them touching many cases in my State and elsewhere. I never heard from a single one of those cases until the report of the committee was made. It was never suggested to me in respect to any of the cases that witnesses would be heard if a request should be made. On the other hand, a gentleman came all the way from Haverhill, Mass., and wanted to appear before the committee, but was not permitted to do so. I know my colleague had a witness who was at one time a member of the committee that passed upon some of the cases, employed by the civil service, and he never was heard. At this late day to say that was an examination into the facts is such a perversion of what actually took place on the part of that committee that I do not feel inclined to let it go unchallenged.

Every Senator knows what the Civil Service Commission has been doing. I never heard of a man in my State recommended by the Republican organization who failed to get on the eligible list. If he could not do it by examination, they amended the papers. That is what took place.

Unfortunately for the organization in my State, at one of the good towns the Republican failed to go when he was expected to appear, and three Democrats made the eligible list. The department refused to appoint either one of them, and had another examination, so that the Republican selected by the organization could get on the eligible list.

I do not object to the party in power having the offices. All I insist on is that it shall play the man and take the offices as party spoils, not to pretend they have a civil-service examination, which they know it is never meant for anybody except the ones selected by the organization to get offices.

I am not complaining about it. The Republican Party is not going to keep them long; so let it have them; but let it take them like men, and not under the pretense that they have a civil-service system or a merit system. How devoted the Senator from South Dakota is to the merit system. The President of the United States issued an Executive order and dismissed from the service 28 or 30 men and women in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in violation of the law, which provided that a civil-service employee should have a chance to be heard; but the Senator from South Dakota never would let us inquire into that unlawful raid on the merit system. To show how absolutely unfair this was, three women were dismissed, one of them drawing $2,500, and I think the other two $2,400 each. Under an Executive order issued some time later those women were allowed to go back to work, but at just half their former salaries. Their salaries were cut in half by an Executive order. Yet the Senator says the examinations are conducted and the departments controlled through the merit system!

The President has before him a report dealing with those employees who were so summarily and unlawfully dismissed from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. He has had it for weeks, and it exonerates the men and women he dismissed; but he will not give it out. He is letting men and women remain out of employment, living under the stigma of having been dismissed "for the good of the service," when everybody, including the Senator from South Dakota, knows that they were dismissed in order that active Republicans might have their places. As I said, these three women were finally put back to work in the departments under another Executive order, at just half their former salaries, with a statement that it would disarrange the Bureau to put them back in their old places, from which it is admitted that they were dismissed without any justification at all. I complain of the system as it is administered. I do not believe any Senator here wants patronage. It never got any Senator any votes, I am sure.

Senator POINDEXTER speaks of the Wilson administration. After President Wilson made an order that postmasters should be selected after examination and qualification by the Civil Service Commission, I never heard of anyone using any influence to prevent the person making the highest grade getting the office. I can say positively, so far as my information goes, that every man who made the highest grade got the place. I never undertook to interfere with it, and I do not know of any of my Democratic colleagues who did. We respected the order. To say that there shall be three eligibles, out of which a Republican Member of Congress or Senator may select one to be appointed is a camouflage, because the one they want always gets on the list. The Civil Service Commission being wholly Republican now, always gets on the eligible list the one the Congressman or the Federal patronage broker, whoever he may be, wants. If there is no line of communication open between the politicians and the Civil Service Commission on this matter, how does the commission always find out which one of the Republicans is wanted? He is always on the list. There is not a case in my State where the organization wanted some one that he did not get it. If a man could not pass the examination, they came up here and talked confidentially and quietly with the Civil Service Commission, and then the commission found out it had made a mistake; that the candidate had great executive ability or large business experience, which he himself did not know about when he filed his application for examination, because he was required to set that out. After he said everything about himself that he could think of, and then was not found eligible, the referee came up and reminded the commission that he remembered that the applicant had very many good qualities as a business man, and they looked over the case, raised the mark, and put him on.

In my State—and I venture to say the same is true of the Senator's own State—there is not a man the Republican organization wanted it did not get, civil service or no civil service, merit system or no merit system. Then he has the temerity to laud a system which everybody knows is being administered for the political advantage of the party in power.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to call the Senator's attention also to the way in which the soldiers are treated under this administration. The Senator will remember that by law we gave the soldiers a preference, and that is arranged in this way: In the administration of the law the Civil Service Commission adds 5 per cent to the soldier's mark, and frequently puts soldiers on the eligible list. In other words, they give him the preference; but they give the regular Republican politician the office.

Mr. CARAWAY. The soldier gets the preference and the Republican gets the office?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is exactly what happens.

Mr. CARAWAY. There was in my State a man who served in the Spanish-Ameriran War and was overseas two years in the late war. He had a post office down there, the appointment to which he got under an examination. They required him to give it up so that they could put a Republican in the office. They are removing all of the Democrats. Yet there are Senators who eulogize that system as nonpartisan and fair. I challenge any Republican on this floor to name a single postmaster who got into office over the objection of the Republican organization. It is perfectly foolish to pretend that you are observing the merit system. You know you are not doing it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the Senator's attention to another matter. There is a little city in my State by the name of McKenzie. Three soldiers who were Democrats were put on the eligible list, and thereupon the party bosses demanded a rehearing. They ordered a new examination on the theory that McKenzie had been changed from a third-class post office to a second-class post office in the meantime. I protested, and that was the only time my protest ever amounted to anything with the civil service. They did withdraw the order and finally appointed one of the three eligibles, all of them being soldiers. But in the meantime, as I recall, for quite awhile they had in the office a Republican as temporary postmaster.

I want to call the Senator's attention also to the fact that they appoint "acting" postmasters. For instance, a man was brought from the county seat of another county to Gallatin and made "acting" postmaster, and he was allowed to be "acting" postmaster for two years, in violation of the law, so that he could then stand the examination and get on the eligible list, which was done.

Mr. CARAWAY. The method of treating soldiers having been referred to, let me state this, that two of the men who were dismissed from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing were soldiers and entitled to preference in employment under the law. Yet the Senator from South Dakota would not even let us inquire into those dismissals, because he knew it could not be excused or justified. One man was dismissed so that a man could be given his place who had been a bookmaker, a tout, and a pimp, and everybody knew it. Another employee of the bureau was dismissed to make a place for a man who was then being sued by his wife, and a letter was filed showing that he had been criminally intimate with a girl 15 years old and was trying to have her visit a certain doctor, whom he was going to pay. The President gives that kind of men places and turns out ex-service men, and the Senator from South Dakota would not even let us inquire about it. Then he asks us to accept his statement that this great system is a merit system, and that the committee over which he presided investigated fairly the charges made against the system. I know there was no fair investigation at all, and the Senator from Louisiana now admits that he could not recall a single one of those cases. I know if he had gone into them he would not have signed the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 31, after line 13, insert the following:

For the construction of a national archives building in Washington, D. C., on square east 88, including mechanical equipment, and the drafting of plans and specifications, which plans and specifications shall provide for a building not to exceed $2,500,000 in total cost, $500,000, said sum to be disbursed and the building to be erected under the direction and supervision of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, my attention was diverted as that was read, but, as I understand, this is a provision for a new building, to be called the archives building?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is a proposition to provide $500,000 at this time.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if the committee is going to accept that amendment? Is there any objection to that amendment?

Mr. WARREN. There is no objection on the part of the committee, so far as I know. There has been a designation of the location. This is a provision for a building not to exceed $2,500,000 in cost, $500,000 to be appropriated for starting the work.

Mr. NORRIS. I dislike very much to take issue with the Senator from Washington and with the chairman of the committee on this proposition. I am not sure that if there was full investigation made of the matter I might not feel favorable to the amendment. But here it comes on the floor of the Senate without having been considered by the committee, so far as I know, or any investigation made of it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would like to suggest to the Senator that it has been before the committee a number of different years and has been approved by the committee at different times, and such an amendment has been agreed to by the Senate several times. It is in pursuance of existing law.

I hope the Senator will not oppose it. I think it has been demonstrated in the long consideration which has been given it—as a matter of fact, it has been under consideration for about nine years—that it is in the interest of economy.

Mr. NORRIS. I know, as all such expenditures always are. That is always given as a reason for every appropriation I have ever known to be made.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That may be true, but it is not always demonstrable, as it is in this case.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask first whether this is in accordance with existing law? Is that true?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; it is.

Mr. NORRIS. Have we such a statute?

Mr. POINDEXTER. We have. In the public buildings act of 1913 an archives building was provided for. In an amendment to that act, passed later on in a separate statute, in which the act was changed to some extent, all doubt as to the authorization of the building was removed, some question having been raised as to the language of the original act. The building was expressly authorized. The pending amendment, I may say to the Senator, is for a building on property already owned by the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. That is another question I was going to ask the Senator. Has the Government already title to the property?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It already has title to it.

Mr. NORRIS. That removes to a great extent the objection I was going to urge. I am glad to hear that. However, I want to say a few words on the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to know something about the status of the amendment. If it does not come within the rule, I intend to invoke a point of order against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Washington to say that it is provided for by existing law.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the case, and I shall call the Chair's attention to the law. On page 22, section 21, of an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, the following provision is made:

SEC. 21. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to prepare designs and estimates for a fireproof national archives building of modern library-stack type of architecture, containing not less than 3,000,000 cubic feet of space, suitable for the orderly storage of records, documents, and other papers which have accumulated in the various departments, independent establishments, and executive offices and in the files of the Senate and House of Representatives and are not needed for current use.

Then it proceeds with details as to the archives building.

Mr. NORRIS. That is not an authorization, in my judgment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will call the Senator's attention to a supplement and amendment to that act, entitled "An act to repeal paragraph 4 of section 21 of the public buildings act, approved March 4, 1913, providing for the construction of a national archives building," which is the act I just read. The amendment reads:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 4 of section 21 of the public buildings act, approved March 4, 1913, which reads as follows: "That before the said designs and estimates are completed inspection shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury of the best modern national archive buildings in Europe, and consultations shall be had with the best authorities in Europe on the construction and arrangement of archive buildings," be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the acquisition of a site for a national archives building, and the construction of the said building according to the terms of said act of March 4, 1913, is hereby authorized without such inspection and consultation in Europe.

Approved, June 28, 1916.

It seems to me that is quite a distinct authorization.

Mr. NORRIS. I am inclined to think that is right; but in pursuance of that act, was this particular real estate purchased?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The land was not acquired under that act. No land has been acquired in pursuance of the original act. The amendment provides for the construction of a building upon land which is already owned by the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. If no land has been acquired, then I was right in my belief, to begin with, that this Senator's amendment would require the purchase of real estate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, no.

Mr. NORRIS. It would not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; because it specifies a particular lot.

Mr. NORRIS. But as I understand it, nothing has been purchased. We would have to purchase that particular lot.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, no; that lot is already owned by the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. How did the Government get title to it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can not inform the Senator about that. It has been owned for a considerable time by the Government. I suppose it was probably purchased along with a large part of the tract owned by the Government in that vicinity.

Mr. NORRIS. Where is the lot located?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is located near the Pan-American Building. I think I have a diagram showing the exact location of the lot. The lot is surrounded by Twenty-first and Twentieth Streets and B and C Streets NW.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; not northwest, is it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; it is northwest. The number of the lot, according to the technical description of it, is E–88 on the city plat.

Mr. NORRIS. Where is it located with reference to the present office building of the Interior Department?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is located considerably south of that.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is west of the Pan American Building.

Mr. NORRIS. The information which the Senator has just given has cleared up to a great extent one of the objections I had in mind in regard to the proposition. There is still one matter which I think ought to be given consideration and that is the matter of economy, whether right now, when we are straining every effort to find something to tax in order to pay our debts and keep the Government running, we ought to go to the expense of $2,500,000 for this purpose. I know it can be said, and with a great deal of force, that a great many documents, and so forth, more or less important in value, are liable to be burned or otherwise destroyed because there is not a suitable place to keep them. It is, perhaps, false economy to run the risk.

But, Mr. President, I think to quite an extent the idea of building an archives building is propaganda mostly originating in the newspapers of the city of Washington—perhaps a worthy object. I am not contending but what we ought to have such a building, but I thing we ought to give very grave consideration to whether we should spend $2,500,000 in the construction of the building now when the question of taxation is so important. Everybody is trying to economize. Everybody has promised that he would try to economize in the Government. We have been proclaiming it everywhere. Everybody is asking for economy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know whether the Senator was here yesterday, but at that time in the discussion of the same matter the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who has made a special study of it, made the statement, which appeared in the RECORD this morning, that if provision were made for the storage of documents and papers which are now stored in rented buildings and in Government buildings, thereby releasing the space occupied by them and giving opportunity to use it for offices, several hundred thousand dollars a year would be saved. He made the statement, with reference to a million-dollar appropriation for putting up archive stacks in the Pension Office Building, that the million dollars would be saved by the Government in two years. I assume that those figures are based upon some more or less accurate calculation. I know from a long study of the general question that a great deal of money will be saved immediately the building is available.

So far as the newspaper propaganda is concerned, my interest in the proposition goes back away beyond the newspaper advocacy of it, so far as the newspapers are concerned which are dealing with the subject at the present time. I introduced the bill and it was enacted into law in 1913. I have been interested in the matter ever since. I know the Senate objected to the purchase of a piece of land, and I think a great many people thought it was sort of a real-estate deal or a real-estate promotion. In order to obviate that objection we have abandoned that feature entirely and propose to erect a building on land which the Government already owns.

Mr. NORRIS. When the Senator's bill was introduced, where was it referred? I presume it went to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It did.

Mr. NORRIS. What action have that committee ever taken? Have they ever made a favorable report on the bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They made a favorable report, and the bill was passed.

Mr. NORRIS. Then we do not need to pass it now.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was the authorization.

Mr. NORRIS. I am speaking of this building. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, as I understand it, would have jurisdiction of a bill providing for the construction of the building. I am not talking about the real estate. Has that bill ever been referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was referred to that committee, acted on by that committee, reported to the Senate, and passed the Senate and House of Representatives. It is the law which I have just read.

Mr. NORRIS. I say if there is already a law in every way perfected and complete, we do not now need to authorize construction of the building. That is all there is to it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that true?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is true, but the pending amendment is not an authorization. It is an appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator perhaps was not here late yesterday afternoon, when the matter was first discussed on an amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to appropriate $1,000,000 for the purpose of buying stacks for these archives and putting them in the Pension Building.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I am familiar with that matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am rather inclined to think that inasmuch as we have already authorized the construction of the building and as we ought to have the building, the proposition of the Senator from Washington is the correct way of dealing with it. It is true that the Senator from Utah stated yesterday afternoon that the stacks which are going to be put up at great cost and expense can be utilized hereafter in the archives building. They will be placed in the Pension Building probably almost at the cost of stopping business in the Pension Office while it is being done. I do not see how any work can be done there while the stacks are being put in, when the floors and walls are being taken out of a building that is 50 years old. We do not know whether it will be safe after they are put there.

The Senator from Utah stated that we could use the same stacks in the building which is proposed by the Senator from Washington to be built. My own judgment is that they can not and never will be so used. The Senator knows they will be found not in accord with the new building when the time comes, and we will have to appropriate another million dollars or more for other stacks at that time, and the stacks which are to be purchased now will be thrown away.

I think the economical way to handle this matter would be to proceed to erect the buildings and in the meantime not waste the extra $1,000,000 in putting stacks in the old Pension Building.

Mr. NORRIS. An appropriation for that was not put in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understood that it was.

Mr. NORRIS. Has a million dollars already been provided in the bill to construct these stacks?

Mr. McKELLAR. That item is already in the bill.

Mr. WARREN. An item proposing to appropriate a million dollars for the construction of stacks to be used for the storage of documents and papers in the Pension Office Building has been placed in the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, this appropriation should not be made.

Mr. McKELLAR. One or the other ought not to be agreed to. I am inclined to think that the other item should be disagreed to.

Mr. WARREN. The space in the Pension Office Building will be needed just as much though the archives building be constructed, unless we provide for the construction of a much larger archives building than is now contemplated, because the papers proposed to be stored in the Pension Building are the accumulation of the records of many years, including war periods, and are tremendous in quantity.

Mr. NORRIS. There is a great deal of room in the court of the Pension Office Building, where I suppose it is intended that the stacks shall be constructed.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. And we shall not have to tear down any walls, as the Senator from Tennessee has stated. The Pension Building is like a great shed. In the middle of it there is a large court running up for several stories and now unusued. I suppose it is intended to fill that space with stacks.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; at great cost and expense. Is the Senator from Nebraska advised as to whether the old Pension Office Building, which was erected many years ago, is fireproof?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not believe it is fireproof.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; it is a fireproof building.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not believe it is. Does the Senator from Nebraska think we ought now to expend $1,000,000 for stacks to house archives of the Government in a building which is nearly 50 years old?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] says that the building is fireproof.

Mr. WARREN. It is fireproof.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is a very great difference of opinion about the matter, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. It is fireproof as that term is generally understood, but, of course, there are no iron shutters over the doors and windows, as there would be, perhaps, in an archives building. The building, however, is constructed of brick and stone and metal, and the only wood in the construction, perhaps, is in the doors and interior fittings. It transpired in the discussion on yesterday that even the roof is entirely of metal and glass instead of being partly wood, as it has been claimed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to ask if Senators are discussing the question as to whether or not the Pension Office Building is fireproof?

Mr. NORRIS. That question has arisen.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I happen to know something about the construction of buildings, and I desire to say that as to storing quantities of inflammable materials, such as papers and books of the character of archives, they might as well be stored in a haymow as to be placed in the Pension Building. That building, while it may be constructed of metal and brick, is not of a fire-resisting character, by reason of the "well holes" and its open construction. If the archives of the Government are to be safely housed, they should be placed in a modern fireproof building without airshafts and elevator shafts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I will yield, although while I have had the floor other Senators have been doing the talking. I wish to do some talking myself. I should like, so far as I can, to answer questions or to get additional information as I go along from the various Senators who have interrupted me. I am only seeking information.

The Senator from New Jersey has stated that placing Government archives in the Pension Building will be like placing them in a haymow, although the building is constructed of iron and brick. I judge from his remarks that the building becomes inflammable by reason of the kind of material to be stored in it; that is, papers and documents; and, further, that the elevators and open spaces in the building create drafts, and which in case of fire would result in burning the documents which we propose to place in the building. Am I right in that conclusion?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I stated that by reason of its open construction the building was not fireproof or fire resisting. The Senator from Nebraska is correct in assuming that because of the open construction of the building it is dangerous, for just as soon as a fire occurs in a building of that character a draft is created and the building simply becomes a furnace. If we are going to store the records of the Government where they will be safe, we have got to provide a fireproof building, and the Pension Office Building is not, in modern parlance, a "fireproof building."

Mr. NORRIS. Very well. Now, Mr. President, as I sum the situation up, the opinion of the Senator from New Jersey is that the building itself will not burn, as it is constructed of iron and brick, and therefore can not burn; but we are going to put inside of it something which will burn; and therefore it will be a dangerous proposition, because the building is rather open in construction.

I doubt, however, whether the elevators in the Pension Building would create drafts which would be dangerous in case of a fire originating in the documents which are to be placed in the court of the building. Certainly unless the documents themselves to be put there should first catch fire they would be safe; there would be no danger of those documents burning because the building might catch fire and burn, for brick and iron do not burn. The fire would have to be started in the documents themselves. That would be true wherever the documents might be stored. They can not be made fireproof because they are made of paper.

The Pension Building, as everybody knows, has in its center a very large court; the offices are around that court; and what elevators there are in the building are not in the court but are in the rows of offices that extend clear around the building. In that court an immense amount of documents could be stored if the stacks were placed there. On yesterday, I understand, the Senate put into the bill an appropriation for $1,000,000 to construct those stacks. Now it is proposed to appropriate $2,500,000 to erect another building.

Mr. WARREN. But we now propose to appropriate only $500,000 for the new building.

Mr. NORRIS. I know it is now proposed to appropriate only $500,000, but we all know that $500,000 will not be sufficient to erect the building; in fact, the amendment itself shows that it is going to require $2,500,000 for that purpose.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the Senators who are now talking about the Pension Building being a fire trap should have been heard on yesterday when the amendment to which I refer was adopted, but I presume no Senator said anything about it then, and if he did the Senate did not follow his judgment, and thought it was safe to put these documents in the Pension Building.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I take it that the Senator from Nebraska is seeking information. While I do not pose as an expert, for 30 years I have been in the business of insuring buildings of the character under discussion. In the consideration of insurance area always has a great deal to do with the question of risk in a building which contains inflammable material. The Pension Building is a structure of tremendous area. In the event of a fire the fire would spread rapidly and could not be extinguished.

In addition to that, the elevator shafts are open. In a really fireproof building there are no light shafts, every floor being cut off separately without any such shaft; and wherever the spaces occupied by elevators or chimneys have to be carried through a floor such spaces are inclosed in brick. Furthermore, fire-resisting doors and fireproof glass is used upon all outlets to and from the shafts, which are then inclosed in an areaway. All of the openings are covered, not only with fireproof glass but with kalomine material covering the frame of the building. Every floor is separated with fire brick and a fireproofing material. In such buildings no matter how inflammable the material may be which is contained on each floor, each floor is a separate risk. That is the modern standard of construction which governs the fire rules of every city in the country, and no one connected with the National Board of Fire Underwriters, or with an up-to-date fire department, or a well-informed department of public buildings of any modern municipality would consider allowing a building to be constructed for the safeguarding of valuables or public records unless those modern methods and specifications were followed in the construction of the building.

To take a million dollars and put it in the Pension Building with the idea of providing a safe place for Government records is an absolute waste of money. A great building of that character can not be made fireproof and safe under any circumstances whatever unless it be torn down and reconstructed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, does the Senator think that the building which is going to be erected with the money which we are about to appropriate will be the kind of a building he has described?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not know; I have had no estimate given me, but two and a half million dollars will erect a very good fireproof building.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. But if the records are valuable and the object of the legislation is to procure a safe place, with the knowledge which I have of fire insurance risks and of building construction, I would advise the Senate to erect a fireproof building for them and not try to rebuild the Pension Office.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator's advice reminds me of the remark of the client whom the laywer found in jail. When the client told the lawyer of the charge, the lawyer said, "Well, they can not put you in jail for that," to which the client replied, "But here I am, in jail." We have already adopted a provision to squander a million dollars, according to the Senator's idea; it is in the bill now. That was done yesterday. The object then was to provide a million dollars to put stacks in the Pension Building. That was good enough then, but now the object is to spend $2,500,000 to erect another ornamental building; and in order to provide an argument for the erection of that building we condemn the work which we did yesterday when we provided a million dollars to erect stacks.

Mr. President, from the way the Senator from New Jersey has described a fireproof building, there is not a single such building now in the city of Washington; there is not one which complies with the specifications he has outlined; and I have no doubt whatever that if this money is appropriated and the proposed building is erected it will not be the kind of a building the Senator has described.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I venture to say there are 50 buildings of that character in the city of Washington to-day. I will furnish the Senator with a list of them, if he desires. I recall one or two factory buildings of that character now.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator would name one.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There is a building here in which bottle tops are being manufactured which is of modern construction.

Mr. NORRIS. That is not a Government building?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am not speaking of Government buildings.

Mr. NORRIS. I am speaking of Government buildings.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator said "buildings."

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know whether I used the word "Government," but I am speaking of Government buildings. This Capitol is liable to be burned down any minute, according to the Senator's idea. There are elevators all through it; there are courts in it; and there are many tons of paper and other inflammable material inside of it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And hot air. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. The kind of documents that are going to be stored in the archives building are not the most valuable papers the Government has. As I understand, the most valuable papers are the ones that are being used from day to day; but in that building it is proposed to store papers which we may get through with and put aside, and it is thought probably they had better not be destroyed but ought to be placed somewhere so that if reference is ever desired to be made to them they may be obtained, although they may be a hundred years old. In the Senate Office Building there are many stacks along one wing of the basement where tons and tons of papers are stored.

The papers belong to the Supreme Court of the United States, but I hardly suppose that any Supreme Court Justice or a clerk or a bailiff of the court goes down there to get a paper a half dozen times a year. They are papers in old cases which have been disposed of; but it may be that occasionally reference will be made to some paper which it will be necessary to procure, and so they are placed where it will be possible to send and get them.

That is the kind of papers, as I understand, that are going to be put into this new building. The Government would still live if it burned and all of them were destroyed; but, Mr. President, I anticipate that no such building will be constructed. It will have elevators in it; it will have different stories; there will be stairways in it, all made of fireproof material. If you should carry in a lot of combustible matter and put it in there, it might burn up. The building probably would still stand. So the standard that is set up as to the Pension Building is such a perfect one that it is not going to apply to this other building either. It is perfectly foolish, it seems to me, for the Senate to spend $1,000,000 to build stacks in one building that I think, from what has been said about it, is as fireproof as any of the other buildings and then the very next day provide $2,500,000 more to build some more stacks in another building. I want to say that the time will come when we ought to construct this building; but right now, Mr. President, when we are straining every nerve to keep the old ship of state going without getting more heavily mortgaged, we ought to hesitate before we go into this kind of business. It may be that we will lose something by doing what I advocate; but we have lived a good many years without this building, we still have the valuable documents, and we can keep on awhile, I think, until we are in better shape financially to do it.

Mr. President, 20 years ago I came to the House of Representatives. I was put on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. One of the first things that I ever did officially was to listen for several days to gentlemen talking in favor of an archives building. They showed that we had all kinds of documents that were in danger every day; that we might have a fire before night and make the Government absolutely bankrupt; and therefore that we had to have an archives building, and have it at once. There was a great propaganda in favor of it in the city of Washington. Every newspaper was filled with articles demonstrating the necessity of an archives building to save the old records. For days and days and months and months that went on; and these people came before that committee, composed of some good men and some suckers like me, and they poured that kind of argument into us until we were frightened. We thought the Government was going to fail. I did not sleep nights for fear a fire might take place and the whole thing might go up in smoke, and I could not hurry fast enough to help get that bill out of the committee. We reported it; we provided for the purchase of a square of real estate; and the propaganda for an archives building died the very minute we passed the bill and appropriated the money to buy the land upon which we should build it. We never heard anything about it until about 20 years had elapsed. Now again comes this great cry for an archives building. I was suspicious of it until I saw that we were going to build it on land that we already own, and then I confess that a good deal of my suspicion vanished.

The fact was, I think, that behind it all was a coterie of fellows who owned a whole block of land that they wanted to sell to the Government of the United States at a good price, and when they put it across they forgot all about the safety of these sacred documents.

Probably we made a good deal, because that land has become very valuable. It is the land where one of the best buildings that the Government owns now stands. We forgot the archives building so completely that about 15 years afterwards we provided for the erection of the present Interior Department Building on that square.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is relating some circumstances and details as to one part of which I am ignorant. I realize that we bought the block the Senator mentions, costing us $500,000, and I realize that one of the best office buildings we have now occupies it—that is, the Interior Department Building—but I do not realize, I do not remember, and I rather doubt whether the Congress had anything to do with putting the Interior Department Building on that block. However, that is not the point.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; the Congress did. It is perhaps quite immaterial, but it is within my recollection when we provided for the construction of that building. It could not have been constructed without an act of Congress, I take it.

Mr. WARREN. There is no specific appropriation for it; I am certain of that; but that does not matter at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was built before the war, was it not?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. There is no doubt, however, but that the people who erected that building have been paid for it.

Mr. WARREN. Of course they have.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not imagine that somebody sneaked up on Uncle Sam and constructed that building without making any charge for it.

Mr. WARREN. In other words, it was a part of one of the great lump sums that we very often appropriate, and the officials use them as they choose.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I think the Senator is mistaken about that. Maybe he is not; but at least the building has been constructed, and I think Uncle Sam paid for it.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. It is there and it is a good building, I think the best we have; so it may be that it turned out all right in the end.

Mr. President, to my way of thinking, the matter reduces itself down to a matter of economy only. It seems to me we ought to hesitate before we make this appropriation, before we start on this building, which we can get along without for some time. We shall have to construct other buildings in the city of Washington. There is other land that we have purchased for the purpose of erecting Government buildings on, but we are not doing it now. We are waiting because we have spent all our money; and it seems to me it is the part of wisdom to wait still longer, until Uncle Sam has more money. We ought not to branch out now, especially when we are going to fit up the Pension Building with a lot of stacks that will take care of the condition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I want to say just one word in reference to this matter.

We have in the bill an appropriation of a million dollars to fireproof, or attempt to fireproof, the Pension Building. After listening to the statement made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]—who, I know, with his experience in insurance matters, is an expert on these questions—I have become convinced that what he says is true; we are not going to accomplish the fireproofing of the Pension Office in this way. We have in the bill a million dollars. We own the land, block 88, on which it is proposed to build an archives building. It will cost only a million and a half dollars more to build the right kind of a building. I take it that if the Senate puts in the appropriation for an archives building it will strike out the appropriation for building the stacks.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. KING. I do not think the conclusion of the Senator is correct, if I understood the position of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the committee and the reasons prompting them to recommend the appropriation of a million dollars for stacks. Their position, as I understand it, is that we will spend a million dollars for the installation of stacks in the Pension Building; then we will spend two and a half million dollars for the construction of an archives building; and after it has been completed, it is contended that we may use those stacks, which cost a million dollars, and transfer them, together with their contents, from the Pension Building to the archives building; so that we will be spending three and a half million dollars.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator just to add a little more to what the Senator from Utah has said?

The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] claims that by putting these stacks in the Pension Building we would not only utilize space there that is now available in a fireproof building, but we would save the rental of space now being taken up by the presence of these papers that will be brought to the Pension Building. We are now paying very high rent for that space; and in his argument yesterday the Senator stated that we would save some five or six hundred thousand dollars a year in rent if we had these stacks in the Pension Building.

I merely mention that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I thank my friends very much for their interruptions. They may be right about it and I may be wrong about it; but I just want to express my viewpoint. Of course, I know that the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is a very earnest and active Member of this body, and a very influential one; but in the last analysis the Senate has to determine this question. It is not a political question. It is a purely business question.

I want to say that in the beginning I was disposed to take the viewpoint of the senior Senator from Utah. I thought here was a great space that we could use in which to put stacks, and I knew that the Pension Building, so far as its construction was concerned, was almost fireproof; that is, it has no inflammable material in it except the doors and windows, because I have been in the building many times and have examined it; but after I listened to what the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] said, I realized that the inflammable thing in regard to preserving these papers is not the building, but it is the papers themselves.

We are going to prepare to build a bonfire, and we must prepare to stop it, to localize it. So I think the position that the Senator takes is correct, and that if we want to accomplish this purpose, so far as fireproofing is concerned, the only way we can do it is to erect a building for that purpose. I think when the bill goes into the Senate, if the Senate puts $2,500,000 in here to construct this building, it probably will not agree to the other $1,000,000 item; and that is a question that can come before the Senate for consideration.

I listened with much interest to what my friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] said about the agitation for an archives building 20 years ago. I was in the same crowd with the Senator that thought we had to buy this land.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not want the Senator to be under a misapprehension as to my statement. The Senator from Nebraska was speaking of the Pension Building as a permanent building for the storing of the archives, and the spending of $1,000,000 to make it fireproof. I said that I did not believe $1,000,000 would make it fireproof; but, as I understand the object of the appropriation, $950,000 of the appropriation is to be applied for the purpose of furnishing files and stacks and places to store the public records temporarily until an archives building, properly constructed, can be built, and the appropriation and this improvement will save $600,000 in rent. I therefore believe that the appropriation is warranted. The interrogatory of the Senator from Nebraska was in regard to the expenditure of $1,000,000 in repairing that building to make it fireproof, and upon that I made my statement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood the Senator's statement. I am only making my statement. I do not think it is worth while for us to provide a temporary place to file these archives if we are going to provide a permanent place, because in the last analysis it will not take two years to build this archives building if we make the appropriation now and start at it. It will probably take the best part of a year to put in the stacks to take care of the papers temporarily.

I am not in accord with my friend from Nebraska that we do not need an archives building, although I remember our enthusiasm at the time. I think we do. Several years ago I was opposed to an appropriation for that purpose, because they were going to stop up one of the streets; but I think we do need an archives building.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator. The Senator misunderstood me. I think we do need an archives building, but I question the advisability of appropriating the money now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think we do, because they have a great many valuable and historical records, not merely of money value but records of the Great War, and if they were destroyed and the Government lacked evidence with which to defend itself, it might cost tens of millions of dollars. But, more than that, there are historical documents which should be preserved for the future. We owe something to those who come after us, and I think there should be a proper place to store the records.

There is in this bill an appropriation of a million dollars for a temporary building, to be erected on Government ground. There is no real-estate speculation involved in this proposition; but the building is to be erected on our own land, where there is now a temporary building of lath and plaster which will have to be pulled down in a year or two, a building erected for war purposes, which is now of no value. To appropriate two and a half million dollars for an archives building that may last hundreds of years instead of spending a million dollars for a temporary matter seems to me to be a good business proposition, and I am in favor of accepting the proposal of the Senator from Washington and making it a permanent matter and let the temporary proposal go out. I have simply said that to explain how I would vote on the proposition.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question of the Senator from New Jersey, who seems to be familiar with construction. It is proposed here that stacks which are to be used for the proposed improvement in the Pension Building may be used for a future fireproof building. Is that feasible or not?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Absolutely feasible.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then would you not have to build a building to fit the stacks, and would it not be very much better to build a building and then build the stacks, or have the stacks manufactured to fit the building?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand the plan is to build these stacks, or filing cases, or steel vaults, or receptacles for paper, of steel—whatever you are pleased to call them. The Senator has seen them, no doubt. He probably has some of them in his office, painted green. They are simply piled up on top of each other.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. They are simply receptacles for papers and records. They are to be seen in every county clerk's office. Those things are movable and can be put in the archives building and the records stored there.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that, but instead of erecting a great new building, such as is proposed by the Senator from Washington, to cost probably two and a half million dollars, would it not be very much better to have the kind of stacks that would fit in with that building, rather than to have stacks that are gotten haphazard from an old building?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not think there would be any loss whatever in the equipment of the building.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, against this amendment I want to invoke Rule XVI. I am not responsible for this rule; indeed, I opposed it on the floor of the Senate when it was proposed, but I want to see it impartially enforced in all cases. During the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill, whether it agreed with my feelings or not, whatever my state of mind might have been at that time, I tried in every way to have the rule enforced when I thought it was proper to do so.

I understand this amendment has not been estimated for by the Bureau of the Budget, and has not been reported by the Committee on Appropriations. Indeed, if it is an item as important as we are told it is, certainly the Director of the Bureau of the Budget would have had some estimate made, some one would have appeared before the committee in regard to it, and after a careful consideration the committee would have made some report to the Senate on the item. This item being entirely overlooked, I suggest that it comes within Rule XVI, and I invoke that rule at this time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if the Chair will bear with me a moment, my friend the Senator from Oregon is mistaken as to the matter of the Budget. This item is estimated for on page 458 of the Budget, under the head of "Public buildings."

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. Does that appertain to the item carried in this bill? Does it not appertain to a provision in another bill? I am told by the clerk of the committee that it was not estimated for by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Washington has the Budget for the wrong year.

Mr. McNARY. I thought so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is probably repeated in this year's estimate. I think it is carried in the current Budget. Aside from that question, I do not understand that the portion of the rule to which the Senator refers is applicable in a case where the appropriation is to carry out an existing law, as is the case here.

Mr. LENROOT. Where is the law for the building of an archives building?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It has been gone into at considerable length. I hand the Senator a copy of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to hear the Senator from Oregon on the point suggested by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. McNARY. The point I made was that it was not estimated for by the Bureau of the Budget, and I think the Senator from Washington will concede that statement to be a true one. Secondly, it has not been estimated for by the committee, nor is a provision for it contained in this bill. I am not conversant with any existing law on the subject. There is, perhaps, an authorization for some such building.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair read two paragraphs he is bound to consider in determining this matter, a portion of clause 1 of Rule XVI, reading as follows:

> No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law,

That is all that bears directly on this question. Then Public Act No. 119, Sixty-fourth Congress, approved June 28, 1916, in part reads as follows:

And the acquisition of a site for a national archives building and the construction of such building, according to the terms of said act of March 4, 1913, is hereby authorized, without such inspection and consultation.

The Chair would like to hear the Senator from Oregon on that point.

Mr. McNARY. As I said, I am not familiar with that provision. It seems to be an authorization which has not been taken into consideration by the Director of the Budget or by the committee this year. This amendment is offered by the Senator from Washington without either of the other elements accompanying it. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge if anyone appeared before the committee, or if any estimate was made relating to this?

Mr. WARREN. I will answer to the Senator by saying that were it not for the explicit law which was passed regarding the construction of the building, the point of order would rest very easily upon Rule XVI, which the Presiding Officer has read, together with the fact that it has not been estimated for this year. It was not considered in the committee in its hearings, in the first place, because it was not estimated for, and because of the fact that it had been so many times figured upon. But when the bill was brought upon the floor, and most of the members of the committee were here, they talked together about it and decided that it was a good time to let it go in and see what can be done with it in the House. Of course, it would have to be concurred in over there.

I will leave the point of order to the Chair. There is no doubt that a point of order would lie against the proposition except for the fact that it carries out existing law, as the Senator from Washington has said.

Mr. McNARY. Did anyone appear before the committee and ask for this appropriation?

Mr. WARREN. No; except here upon the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is true, so far as this particular provision is concerned——

Mr. WARREN. It has been put into the bill repeatedly heretofore by the committee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It has been favorably acted upon by the committee heretofore.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). The Chair is ready to rule. Without a doubt, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington does add a new item of appropriation. The only question, therefore, is this: Is it to carry into effect an act authorized by existing law, or, in the terms stated in the rule, "unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law"?

The portion of Public Act No. 119 approved June 28, 1916, which the Chair read a moment ago, seems to the present occupant of the chair to be an authorization. The Chair is therefore compelled to overrule the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I do not propose to take the time of the Senate at length, because I know the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is very anxious to have this bill passed to-night. I want to make a brief statement in reference to the Tariff Commission item.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I interrupt the Senator to say that I do not see that it is possible to pass the bill to-night. It is now 5 o'clock, and there are some other amendments to be offered.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have no objection to the observation of the Senator; but I thought he wanted to ask me a question. I desire to continue my statement, and then will leave the bill to its own fate.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator was proceeding on the supposition that the bill is going to be passed to-night.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Under the Tariff Commission item there is an appropriation for administration of $680 000, and $20,000 for printing and binding. The commission asked for a million dollars, and I had intended to offer an amendment increasing the appropriation to that amount. Of course, under Rule XVI that would be subject to a point of order.

I wrote to the chairman of the Tariff Commission and asked him as to the sufficiency of this appropriation. I have his reply, which I shall ask may be inserted in the RECORD, but I will read just a paragraph:

The Tariff Commission submitted in regular course, through the Bureau of the Budget, a supplemental estimate for the fiscal year 1923, in the sum of $250,000, and its regular estimate for the fiscal year 1924, in the sum of $1,000,000.

It was admitted by the chief of the bureau that the needs of the Tariff Commission were $1,000,000. I desire to point out briefly to the Senate the importance of the Tariff Commission's work under the new act of September, 1922, and to urge upon the Appropriations Committee the necessity of giving the Tariff Commission all of the money necessary for them to carry on their investigation and surveys which under the law they are authorized to make. It would be false economy for the Government in any way to restrict them.

At the present time there is nearly $600,000,000 of income through the revenue act. The stability of the present tariff rests upon the flexible system imposed in that act and the service to be rendered by the Tariff Commission in making the studies. At the present time the woolgrowers, the cattlemen, and others are asking for information regarding conversion cost. The Senate will call upon the commission for information. It is vital almost in carrying out the act that the commission be allowed proper appropriations to secure the necessary personnel in order that they may carry on and that the hundred cases now being investigated, including studies of the chemical tariff, as well as the pottery tariff, should be carried on.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION,
Washington, January 12, 1923.

Hon. JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR FRELINGHUYSEN: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of January 10, in regard to the sufficiency of the appropriations proposed in the pending deficiency bill and in the independent offices appropriation bill, to cover the expenses of the Tariff Commission during the fiscal years 1923 and 1924, in connection with the duties of the commission under section 318 of Title III of the tariff act of 1922.

The Tariff Commission submitted in regular course, through the Bureau of the Budget, a supplemental estimate for the fiscal year 1923, in the sum of $250,000, and its regular estimate for the fiscal year 1924, in the sum of $1,000,000. In submitting these estimates the commission was careful to state that they were regarded as the minimum amounts necessary to enable the commission to carry on the work imposed upon it by the several provisions of law relating to the commission. We are still of the same opinion.

While it is not possible to forecast with mathematical exactness the number and extent of investigations which may be required, or the expense of such investigations, either in the ordinary course of the commission's work or in connection with such applications as may be submitted under section 315 or in pursuance of the requirements of sections 316 and 317 or under the provisions of section 318, it is inevitable that such investigations, if adequately conducted, will in the course of a year necessitate the expenditure of more than the proposed appropriation.

It is believed that the commission should not be restricted by an insufficiency of funds with which to carry on the work thoroughly and with such promptness as to make it effective.

Very truly yours. THOMAS O. MARVIN, Chairman.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me to make a correction?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. From the proceedings of this morning I quote a short paragraph from the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]:

Mr. President, I merely wish to remind the Senator that during the eight years of Mr. Wilson's administration there were something over 60 resolutions of inquiry with regard to Mexico adopted by the Senate and sent to him, all, so far as I remember, properly worded, but not the slightest notice was ever taken of one of them.

I now call the attention of the Senate to a report entitled:

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in response to a Senate resolution of January 6, 1916, certain information relative to affairs in Mexico.

On February 17, 1916, it was read, ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Also, a "message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State, in response to a resolution of the Senate, June 19, 1919, in respect to claims against Mexico for the destruction of life and property of American citizens in that country," which was on August 1, 1919, read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed as a Senate document.

This was the message:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in response to the resolution adopted by the Senate on June 19, 1919, in respect to claims against Mexico for the destruction of life and property of American citizens in that country.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 31, 1919.

Mr. WARREN. Will not the Senator put those in the RECORD without occupying our time?

Mr. McKELLAR. It will take but a moment longer.

There was a third "message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of June 19, 1919, a report of the Secretary of State in respect to the action taken by the United States with relation to the protection of landed estates of American citizens in Mexico," which was likewise, on August 11, 1919, read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

I insert these in the RECORD for the purpose of showing that the Senator from Massachusetts was mistaken this morning in stating that no messages in response to similar resolutions had ever been sent in by President Wilson during his administration.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not mean to say those messages were in response to the only resolutions the Senate passed in reference to the matter mentioned by the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; but I call the attention of the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Massachusetts to the statement which the latter Senator made this morning:

All, so far as I remember, properly worded, but not the slightest notice was ever taken of one of them.

I have read three.

Mr. SMOOT. Out of 60 there were 3 to which response was made.

Mr. McKELLAR. The three reports were so comprehensive that it was probably not necessary to have all of them answered. The Senator from Utah, however, may be as badly mistaken as was his colleague.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to submit a unanimous-consent request. I notice that certain amendments are to be offered to the bill on the part of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. I know from the nature of the amendments and their purpose that they will consume a good deal of time. We have been in constant session now many hours. In view of the ceremonies here to-morrow, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its session to-morrow, it shall take a recess until Monday at the regular hour of 12 o'clock; that calendar day may be Tuesday instead of Monday; that at not later than 4 o'clock on Monday all debate on the pending bill shall cease, and the amendments and the bill shall proceed without further debate to a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McKELLAR. Reserving the right to object, I have certain amendments, as the Senator knows, about which I think I can say all I want to say in a very short time, because I intend to lump them, as I said to the Senator. I would like to be certain to have enough time to discuss them. I do not know what arrangement has been made, and I do not know how the time is to be allotted.

Mr. WARREN. I know of only three Senators whom I have mentioned, all of whom are now on the floor, and I am giving four hours, so far as I am concerned, exclusively to those Senators.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. In view of what has been said by my colleague, I am going to offer no objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the chairman of the committee had better modify his request a little, because I do not know that we can enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to vote without a roll call. We can agree to end debate at 4 o'clock, of course.

Mr. WARREN. I shall modify the request in that respect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator included in his request something about calendar Monday. I would suggest to the Senator that he simply include in his request a recess until 12 o'clock Monday. I will say, so far as having charge of the unfinished business, that I shall on Monday, at the close of the proceedings, move to adjourn until Tuesday so we will have a morning hour.

Mr. WARREN. So we shall have the morning hour?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; we will have a morning hour on Tuesday.

Mr. WARREN. With that assurance, I am willing to omit that portion of the request.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. FLETCHER. That involves the question whether the majority will permit us to have the calendar or not. Under the rule we are obliged to take up the calendar on Monday unless by unanimous consent to the contrary. I think we ought to agree to consider the calendar on Tuesday.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator should be satisfied with the assurance given by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator from Washington moves to adjourn on Monday afternoon, that will give us a morning hour, but it may or may not give us the calendar.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say frankly that, as the Senator probably knows, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] is very anxious to bring up the banking bill, which was up before, having to do with the taxation of national banks.

Mr. FLETCHER. I thought probably the Senator could do that after 4 o'clock on Monday. We close debate on the appropriation bill at 4 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That might be possible. If we could get that bill through on Monday, of course we would have the morning hour on Tuesday. I am perfectly willing to give the morning hour for the calendar.

Mr. KING. Would the Senator be willing to give the morning hour on Tuesday and the remainder of Tuesday to the call of the calendar and the bill of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. KING. With that understanding, that we may have Tuesday for the calendar and the measure of the Senator from Minnesota——

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I do not mean all day. I mean the morning hour.

Mr. KING. I meant all day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; I do not want to do that. I thought the Senator referred to the morning hour, which is of course two hours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming, as modified by the suggestion of the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

The agreement was reduced to writing, as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the memorial exercises on to-morrow the Senate will take a recess until 12 o'clock, meridian, calendar day of Monday, January 22, 1923; and that at not later than 4 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day all debate shall cease on the bill H. R. 13696 and all amendments that may be offered thereto.

DEPARTMENTAL USE OF AUTOMOBILES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS) laid before the Senate a communication from the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings, in response to Senate Resolution 399, agreed to January 6, 1923, relative to the number and use of automobiles by that office, which was ordered to lie on the table.

SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I present the certificate of election of my colleague, Senator KENNETH McKELLAR, as a Senator of the United States from Tennessee, to be effective March 4 next. I ask that it be read and placed on file.

The credentials were read and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

TENNESSEE EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Nashville.

CERTIFICATE OF ELECTION.

To the President of the Senate of the United States:

This is to certify that on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1922, Hon. KENNETH McKELLAR was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Tennessee a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1923.

Witness his excellency our governor Austin Peay and our seal hereto affixed at Nashville, this 17th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1923.

[SEAL.] AUSTIN PEAY, Governor.

By the governor:

ERNEST N. HASTON,
Secretary of State.

SENATOR FROM WASHINGTON.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I present the credentials of C. C. DILL, chosen a Senator from the State of Washington for the term beginning March 4 next. I ask that the credentials be read and placed on file.

The credentials were read and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

CERTIFICATE OF ELECTION.

This is to certify that at the general election held in the State of Washington on the 7th day of November, 1922, C. C. DILL received the highest number of votes cast for the office of United States Senator of said State of Washington and was therefore duly elected to said office, as appears from the official returns of said election duly transmitted to the secretary of state of said State, as duly canvassed and certified in the manner provided by law.

In witness whereof I have hereto set my hand and caused the seal of the State of Washington to be affixed at Olympia, this 2d day of January, A. D. 1923, and of our State the thirty-fourth year.

[SEAL.] LOUIS F. HART, Governor.

By the governor:

J. GRANT HINKLE,
Secretary of State.

PETITION.

Mr. LADD presented a petition of 42 citizens of Ray and vicinity, in the State of North Dakota, praying for the repeal in existing law of the discriminatory tax on small-arms ammunition and firearms, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3942) for the relief of John H. McAtee, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1026) thereon.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4315) to amend section 2 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved July 31, 1894, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1028) thereon.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. PHIPPS. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 13660) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1027) thereon.

I give notice that I shall call up this bill for consideration possibly on Monday or at the first opportunity. The committee also favors certain amendments which they have not included in the bill, which we propose to offer on the floor of the Senate. I ask permission that these amendments may be printed, so that they will be available for the information of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. CAPPER. I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Military Affairs the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 261) for the appointment of three members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. The joint resolution has passed the House and it is unanimously reported by the Military Committee. I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. KING. Let it be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That James W. Wadsworth, of New York; H. H. Markham, of California; and W. S. Albright, of Kansas, be, and they are hereby, appointed members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States, to succeed James W. Wadsworth, of New York; H. H. Markham, of California; and W. S. Albright, of Kansas, whose terms of office expire April 21, 1922.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 4381) granting an increase of pension to Richard H. Atkinson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A bill (S. 4382) granting a pension to Mary Louisa Clark; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHORTRIDGE:

A bill (S. 4383) authorizing the Secretary of Labor to permanently admit, under suitable regulations and requirements to be prescribed by him, Francesca Guglielmino, sister of S. G. Guglielmino, a citizen of the United States; to the Committee on Immigration.

A bill (S. 4384) authorizing the Secretary of War to set apart as a national cemetery certain lands of the United States military reservation of Fort Rosecrans, Calif.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 4385) for the relief of Finch R. Archer; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 4386) for the improvement of channel connecting the deep waters in James River with Hampton Roads, Va., and for the modification of the existing project for the improvement of said channel; to the Committee on Commerce.

LOSSES ON IMPORTATIONS OF SUGAR FROM THE ARGENTINE.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution. It relates to the payment of claims for losses sustained in the importation of sugar from the Argentine Republic by certain firms in the United States. Several special bills relative to these claims have been passed by the Senate and others are under consideration.

Believing that these bills will be before Congress for a long time, I have had a joint resolution prepared which authorizes the Secretary of Commerce to make an investigation and adjust these claims and report to Congress. I ask that the joint resolution be read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 272) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce of the United States to take over and adjust the importation or importations of sugar from the Argentine Republic, which importation or importations were made at the request of the Department of Justice, to relieve the shortage during the year 1920 and to pay the losses sustained on such importations, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

SERVICE CREDIT, CHIEF CLERK TO MARINE CORPS COMMANDANT.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7864) providing for sundry matters affecting the Naval Establishment, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

INADEQUATE TRANSPORTATION IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. Let it be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 414) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission is directed to report to the Senate, as near as they may be able to ascertain, the extent in which the railroad companies serving the northwest Pacific States failed during the last crop season, 1922, to supply adequate transportation facilities for the movement of the crops of apples and other perishable products, and at the same time investigate and report to the Senate the extent to which these transportation companies failed to supply adequate transportation facilities for other products of the States referred to, such as lumber, and investigate and report generally the question of the sufficiency or insufficiency of transportation facilities provided by these companies for the service of the section of the country referred to above during the summer and fall of 1922, with special reference to the movements of lumber and agricultural products in those States; and the commission is directed to report what in their opinion was the cause of such failure of adequate transportation facilities as they may find to exist, and to inform the Senate of what, if any, remedies the commission suggests or proposes as practicable for the remedy of any such failure or inadequacy as may have existed, the prevention of its repetition and the means of obtaining such remedy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent, in connection with the resolution just adopted, to have printed in the RECORD a letter relating to the subject matter of the resolution from Mr. John P. Hartman, of Seattle, Wash.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., January 9, 1923.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Regarding the fall-down in transporting the great apple crop of the Northwest, I now lay before you the facts which I promised some time ago, and hope that now that the holiday season is over you will be able to push this through the Senate and have some investigation while you are still a Member of the body.

The total crop of the three Northwestern States is not far over 30,000 cars this year, and besides that probably 5,000 cars of soft fruit were produced. It is the apples, however, with which we are concerned.

As you know, the principal varieties are Jonathan, Delicious, Spitzenberg, Newton, and Winesaps. The first two varieties are for early use—i. e., their season is over on or before the 1st of January.

We should be able to commence shipping Jonathans about the 1st of September, and as fast as picked they should go into the refrigerator cars and on the way to market, east. Commencing with about the 15th of September, we commence shipping the Delicious, and they should likewise go to market as should the Jonathans. These applies compose fully two-fifths of the entire crop of the Northwest, and if they are not marketed seasonably the loss is very great.

When the shipping season opened we found the shortage in refrigerators, and it grew increasingly severe as the season progressed. All of the Jonathans and Delicious should have been on the way to market by the 15th of October, but when that time arrived more than 50 per cent of these two crops were on hand, and, as they were mostly lying in common storage, were destroying, because they ripened rapidly.

The result of this breakdown is that fully 50 per cent of these two crops are a loss, or practically so; so that the crop has been produced at a loss to every farmer, i. e., two-fifths of the crop has been grown at a loss, which means that the whole crop will be produced without any profit to the farmer.

The State public service commission and the Federal authorities, after the breakdown was complete, got busy to see what could be done, held conferences, and in the latter part of November announced that there would be plenty of refrigerator cars, and took a lot of credit unto themselves of having relieved the situation.

This act did no good whatever. There was no urgent demand then for cars, for the remainder of the crop is shipped to the market in easy stages. Sometimes we do not move our Winesaps until May, and the Newtowns are not moved until January or February.

I will not assume to assign the many reasons of this breakdown and the way in which it might have been prevented, because that would be writing a volume, and it would be too long for a letter. I think there are reasons why this could have been prevented.

Briefly, may I state that, in the first place, the different railroads in the country do not cooperate. When offers of refrigerator cars are made by a connecting line they are not received, and each company blames the other for some condition imposed if they are turned over for use. That is too long a story to go into here.

The outstanding fact is, however, Senator, that there was a falldown; that of 30,000,000 boxes produced in this State we have a loss of at least 30 cents per box, or more than likely 50 cents per box. The result is tremendous stagnation in the farming district.

View it from another standpoint. The capital of the farmer is the value of his land and its equivalent. I would say that in two years the capital valuation has deteriorated at least 50 per cent throughout the United States, and your State has been no exception and may have suffered more than some others.

I do hope that you will start this investigation and have a committee that will desire to help, and let it be even broader than the apple situation, covering things generally, and I certainly will be glad to contribute my share.

With very sincere regards, I remain, faithfully yours,

JOHN P. HARTMAN.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 292).

Mr. MCNARY. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes. I ask that the report may go over under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be printed and lie on the table.

The report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 16, 17, 22, and 28.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 8, 12, 13, 14, 15, 20, 23, 24, 27, 29, 30, and 32; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For the investigation and improvement of cereals, including corn, and methods of cereal production, and for the study and control of cereal diseases, including barberry eradication, and for the investigation of the cultivation and breeding of flax for seed purposes, including a study of flax diseases, and for the investigation and improvement of broom corn and methods of broom-corn production, $697,505: Provided, That $425,000 shall be set aside for the location and destruction of the barberry bushes and other vegetation from which rust spores originate: Provided further, That $125,000 of this amount shall be available for expenditure only when an equal amount shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by States, counties, or local authorities, or by individuals or organizations, for the accomplishment of such purposes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$2,891,450"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$3,376,470"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$225,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$1,797,880"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$541,223"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$4,005,853"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon amendments numbered 11, 31, 33, 34, and 35.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.), under the order of December 12, 1922, the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Sunday, January 21, 1923, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate January 20 (legislative day of January 16), 1923.

POSTMASTER.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 20, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, we thank Thee for Thy redeeming love, unfailing care, and for Thy unerring guidance. May we ever cling to Thee with unbroken trust, for Thou art the sure foundation of a good, upright life. Always hear our urgent cry for divine help in meeting the tasks and requirements of each succeeding day. Bless us with that life that comes only from the living soul and the heart of strength. Give us that peace that never flows in, but always flows out. If any of our homes are in the valley, lead them through it and bring them to the mount of light and happiness. O keep our loved ones safe unafraid, and fold them in Thy arms. Whatever good or ill the changing years may bring, let our appealing hearts find rest in the Christ and in the glory of His cross. For His name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks made yesterday on the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the Army appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object for the time being, Mr. Speaker.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 4280) to provide credit facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries of the United States; to amend the Federal reserve act; to amend the Federal farm loan act; to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds and other securities; to provide fiscal agents for the United States, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4280. An act to provide credit facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries of the United States; to amend the Federal reserve act; to amend the Federal farm loan act; to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds and other securities; to provide fiscal agents for the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for about three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, on December 7, 1922, at the opening of general debate on the Treasury Department bill, I said:

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to be able to announce to the House that the Committee on Appropriations has five bills practically ready for presentation to the House. This bill is the first bill taken up for consideration. We hope to be able to present all the bills making appropriations for the fiscal year 1924 not later than the middle of next month.

The bill making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year 1924 is the last of the regular annual supply bills to be reported to the House. It was reported January 19.

The committee in the preparation of the 11 regular annual bills at this session began work at hearings on several of the bills as early as November 10.

The record of the House in passing all of the bills for 1924 by January 20, assuming that the legislative bill passes January 20, surpasses the record of any previous short session of Congress for expeditious preparation in the committee and passage by the House. [Applause.]

It will be interesting if I read the dates of passage by the House of the last of the regular annual supply bills at the short sessions of the last 11 Congresses:

Fifty-sixth, February 20.
Fifty-seventh, February 20.
Fifty-eighth, February 27.
Fifty-ninth, February 23.
Sixtieth, February 26.
Sixty-first, February 25.
Sixty-second, February 26.
Sixty-third, February 23.
Sixty-fourth, March 2.
Sixty-fifth, February 28.
Sixty-sixth, February 17.

No note is taken in the foregoing dates of the failure of any of the bills in the Senate or a presidential veto requiring their repassage at a subsequent date.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Just let me make a little statement. For the expedition which these bills have passed in the committee I have to thank every Member of the Committee on Appropriations. There has never been a division of opinion based on politics. Every man on the committee deserves the credit for the work done, and for the House I want to say that no committee ever had as hearty support in connection with this class of legislation as this committee has had, and I want to extend my very cordial thanks to every member of the committee and to every Member of the House, without respect to politics. [Applause.] There is no politics at all in this committee, and as far as I am concerned while I am chairman there will be none and there ought not to be. It is a great business proposition. We are dealing with all the problems of Government, and we ought to work to facilitate the enactment of the laws at as early a date as possible, to make for the greatest economy we can, and cooperate one with another in serving the people. It has been very gratifying to me as chairman of this committee to have had the hearty cooperation of everybody from every source, and I want to take this opportunity to express my very great thanks. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESS. It will be interesting to know the amounts which were carried in the earlier appropriation bills of the various Congresses.

Mr. MADDEN. We are preparing the data for a statement which I will be able to make next week, but I do not think we ought to do it until all the bills have passed the House.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for half minute——

Mr. BLANTON. May the gentleman have a minute to answer a question?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman from Illinois think it is such an accomplishment that it is worthy of being bragged about that we have been able to rush these supply bills through in the manner in which they have been rushed through without proper consideration?

Mr. MADDEN. They have been given proper consideration. I think they have never been given such good consideration.

Mr. BLANTON. They increased the estimates of the gentleman's Budget yesterday from $26,000,000 to $56,000,000 without any consideration at all.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman knows that I did not agree with that.

Mr. BLANTON. That is one illustration of the way they have been rushed through.

Mr. MONDELL. There was a solid vote in favor of doing that on that side.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MONDELL. There may have been one exception.

Mr. GARNER. There were five Democrats that I counted myself. There were five, instead of one. You are about as near correct as you usually are. You are one-fifth correct. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. I think the House will appreciate the statement that the appropriations of this Congress, having been pared down so differently from other Congresses, for dismantling the war machine, and so on, has made it more difficult than heretofore.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. We will get all the data and present it later on.

Mr. GARNER. When the gentleman from Wyoming winds up his service here with an oration recapitulating what the Republican Congress has done, especially at this session, he will not be justified in taking all the credit for his party for the performances of the House and the performances of the committees. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Wyoming in no statement he has ever made has ever taken all the credit or given all the credit to the Republican side, as the gentleman from Texas well knows.

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR SUNDAY, JANUARY 21, 1923.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will designate to preside over the proceedings to-morrow the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13926) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes; and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to three hours and a half, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to three hours and a half, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we ought to finish this bill to-day, and we can not finish it to-day if we have three hours and a half of general debate. I was going to suggest that I would like to have 15 minutes, but I am willing to get along without any time at all in order that the time may be reduced. We can not finish this bill to-day if we have three hours and a half of general debate.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think that with three hours and a half of general debate we can conclude this bill to-day. There is nothing controversial in it.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think it can be done, Mr. Speaker. I think if we go beyond three hours we can not finish the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. If we take the proper time we can not finish it to-day anyway, and we shall save time in the end by having proper time in which to discuss it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, then, that the general debate be limited to three hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to three hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and one-half by himself. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13926, the legislative appropriation bill, with Mr. MCARTHUR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13926, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13926) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be notified when I have used 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the estimates considered by the committee on this bill, including $959,935 in supplemental estimates, amounted to $13,666,791.60. The amount recommended by the committee is $12,603,376.60, which is $205,632.35 less than the appropriations for the current year and $1,063,415 less than the 1924 estimates.

This bill covers the Senate, the House of Representatives, the Capitol police, the Joint Committee on Printing, the legislative drafting service, the Architect of the Capitol, the Botanic Garden, the Library of Congress, and the Government Printing Office.

In general the committee followed the policy heretofore adopted of not recommending increases of salaries covered by the bill. There are under the House of Representatives some additional places authorized by resolutions of the House. These include an auditor for the Committee on Accounts, at $3,000; a clerk, at $2,000, for the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers; and a janitor, at $720, for the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service. There is a rearrangement of the employees of the Committee on Appropriations, which results in a saving of $1,000. The salary of two ladies' attendants in the retiring rooms are increased from $800 to $1,200, in accordance with a House resolution. A legislative clerk at $3,600 is provided in the office of the majority leader, also in accordance with a resolution of the House.

There is no other change in the House employees. There is an apparent increase of $40,000 in the item for miscellaneous expenses of the House, which is accounted for by the longer session which will begin in December of this year, and there is a reduction of $8,000 in the amount which is appropriated for folding speeches, this resulting from the fact that there normally are not as many speeches printed during an off year as in a year in which a campaign is conducted.

There is an increase of $1,000 in the sum for purchase of uniforms for the Captiol police. The amount carried two years ago was reduced from $4,000 to $2,000 last year. No uniforms were purchased for the House end of the Capitol police last year, so that it is necessary to provide an additional amount this year in order to take care of that item.

The items under the Architect of the Capitol represent a decrease, although there are several new items for repair and renewal of heating plant, the waterproofing of the portico in the center of the Capitol Building, and several other items of this sort, amounting in total to approximately $96,000.

There was submitted to the committee a supplemental estimate of $800,000 for the construction of an additional bookstack in the northeast court of the Library Building. This estimate the committee did not approve. While it is apparent that the space in the Library Building for books is very nearly entirely occupied, the committee was of the opinion that it should be possible to provide a building at considerably less cost in which a considerable amount of material now in the Library could be stored, thus relieving the space situation there. In other words, there is a considerable amount of material over in the Library which is not used currently and which could be stored in a much cheaper building, or in a building that could be constructed at a less cost than $800,000.

In the Library of Congress estimates of increases were submitted covering 371 employees and involving an additional appropriation of $85,000.

The committee did not allow these increases. The committee did provide for some additional employees asked by the librarian. These include one inspector of stacks at $1,440, three assistants at $960 each, one assistant in the document division at $960, one assistant in the law library at $960, one chief clerk in the copyright office at $2,260, one clerk at $1,800, three clerks at $1,200 each, one assistant in the card-index division at $1,500, and one book cleaner in the Library Building at $720.

The bill also covers an increase in the amount carried this year for temporary services in connection with the distribution and sale of card indexes of $2,000.

There is an increase of $5,000 for the legislative reference service, and $3,125 additional is carried in the bill to provide for a more adequate service in the Library on Sundays and holidays. There is also an increase of $500 for books of reference for the Supreme Court allowed upon the request of the Chief Justice.

In the Government Printing Office the bill carries a reorganization of the watch force which involves a net reduction in the whole appropriation for this force of $3,020.

I should like to say in this connection that the policy adopted last year of carrying in each appropriation bill the sum total required for the printing for the department appropriated for has resulted in considerable economy in the printing items and it is recommended that this policy be continued.

There is an increase of $13,966.80 in the amount for the employment of labor engaged in the distribution of documents under the Superintendent of Documents. This increase is due to a very large increase in the mailing lists submitted by the departments for whom these publications are sent out.

Four cataloguers at $900 each are omitted under the Superintendent of Documents and three are provided at $1,200 each, making no change in the total appropriation.

I think that covers in general the modifications of existing appropriations carried in the bill. Does any gentleman desire to ask any question?

Mr. FESS. What was the sum of the increase for the Library of Congress all told?

Mr. ANDERSON. The total increase under Library of Congress amounts to $27,195 over existing appropriations. It covers principally these added employees and some appropriation for additional map cases, additional shelving, and items of that sort.

Mr. FESS. Did the committee go into the question of the necessity for additional stack room over there?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; that matter was presented quite fully to the committee. As I said a moment ago it came up in a supplemental estimate which we considered as far as we could and did not approve, for the reason that we thought the matter could be handled more cheaply by providing an ordinary storage building where a large number of these books and publications which are not in general or current use could be stored, and that the whole proposition could be handled much more cheaply that way than by adding a new bookstack in the building.

Mr. FESS. Will that be on ground over there?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; I think it will have to be on cheaper ground somewhere, and ought to be.

Mr. FESS. I hope that the policy of the committee will not be to decentralize the Library by removing documents from the Library, and I hope that we will see the time in the near future when we can provide this additional stack room.

Mr. ANDERSON. I imagine that will eventually have to be done in any event, but some time or other we are going to reach the point when we will have to provide additional storage space. When that is done it ought to be storage space which could be used for the storage of documents and books which are not currently used, and there is an amount of that sort of stuff over there. It seems to me it is desirable to start that policy now instead of starting a policy of building a new stack in the building, which under present prices would cost around $800,000, about two and one-half times what the stacks in the northwest corner of the building cost 10 years ago.

Mr. FESS. Did the committee recommend this separate building?

Mr. ANDERSON. We did not.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. On page 21 of the bill there is the appropriation for the office of the Architect of the Capitol:

Salaries: Architect of the Capitol, $6,000; chief clerk and accountant, $3,000; civil engineer, $2,400; construction draftsman, $2,000; 2 clerks, at $1,200 each; compensation to disbursing clerk, $1,000; laborers—2 at $720 each, 2 at $660 each; forewoman of charwomen, $480; 21 charwomen at $240 each; in all, $25,080.

What particular work is done by the Architect of the Capitol and this force?

Mr. ANDERSON. The Architect of the Capitol has charge of all of the construction and repair work around the Capitol, and in addition has charge of the power plant which heats, lights, and furnishes power for the Capitol, House and Senate Office Buildings, the Government Printing Office, the building over here occupied by the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and several other buildings in this vicinity.

Mr. MILLER. Were the plans and specifications for the additional storage for the Government Printing Office prepared by the Architect of the Capitol?

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the gentleman mean the Printing Office or the Library?

Mr. MILLER. I thought the gentleman said the Printing Office.

Mr. ANDERSON. If I said that I misspoke. I meant the Library of Congress. Those plans will be prepared and the contract drawn and signed by the Architect of the Capitol, who is in charge of all of the repair work.

Mr. MILLER. Did this architect have anything to do with the enlargement of the Printing Office?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. MILLER. What does this man do? There is no construction work of any volume going on here.

Mr. ANDERSON. Oh, this is an old building.

Mr. MILLER. I am not inquiring about the building, but about this man and what he does.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am trying to tell the gentleman. If he does not want me to tell him, there is no use in trying.

Mr. MILLER. I would not have asked the question unless I wanted information.

Mr. ANDERSON. As I said a moment ago, he has charge of all of the repair work around the Capitol, and that is considerable in an old building of this sort. Then there is the painting and the renovating repairs around the House Office Building, the supervision of the elevator force, of the repair force, of the general heating plant, which, in addition to the heating of this building, heats the Government Printing Office and the building of the Geodetic Survey and of the Botanic Garden and several other buildings.

Mr. MILLER. I am just asking for information. I am not aware of any great appropriations that were made for reconstruction or anything of that character. There are some carried in the bill, but unless some appropriations are provided for I do not see how this gentleman could do very much work.

Mr. ANDERSON. There are appropriations running up around $500,000 altogether, which are expended under the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. MILLER. All under the jurisdiction of this man?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Oh, that is all right.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman stated that in his opinion eventually an extra building will have to be erected for the storage of documents and periodicals now and hereafter to be preserved in the Library of Congress. I would like to inquire whether the gentleman or his committee has any idea as to whether that building can be located on the present ground of the Library?

Mr. ANDERSON. I would not think it ought to be.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would consider it a very unfortunate thing if any portion of the Library should be far separated from the main building. The people who use the Library find it necessary to make their researches not only in the documents and in the periodicals which may be placed in such a building as that suggested, but they find it necessary as well to use the books which are in the stacks, and I hope the committee will give the matter very careful consideration before there is a removal from the main building of any considerable part of the Library.

Mr. ANDERSON. As far as I am concerned, my mind is not settled upon any particular policy. The matter came up so late that there was no opportunity to consider it from its various angles. Because consideration had not been given to the possibility of using an outside storage building, we did not feel justified in taking action in a matter which would result eventually in the expenditure of $800,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] has stated, this bill carries $12,603,976.60. That is a reduction of $205,632.35 from the appropriations of last year. That reduction was made possible because of the installation of certain boilers during this year in the Capitol for the purpose of distributing the heat to the Capitol and the House Office Building and other buildings under the control of the Architect of the Capitol. In other words, the sum of $270,000 was appropriated for the current year to put in these new boilers, and of course it will not be necessary to make a reappropriation for them in this bill.

The gentleman further stated that the bill carried $1,062,415 less than the 1924 estimates. The chief item, as the gentleman from Minnesota has explained, in that reduction is $800,000, which was requested for the bookstacks in the Library of Congress but which the committee did not feel should be undertaken at this time, thinking that perhaps it would be possible later on to have the necessary space provided for a much less sum. There is no question but that in time, and possibly very shortly, some provision will have to be made for the Library of Congress because it is becoming very crowded.

Mr. BRIGGS. Are the records being preserved in good condition, irrespective of the lack of stacks?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, yes. They are being properly preserved, but the books and pamphlets and other papers which are being collected by the Library and preserved by the Library are increasing from year to year, and while the Library has not reached its full maximum it is rapidly approaching that condition, and something will have to be done shortly to make provision for needed space.

Mr. BRIGGS. The documents are available, notwithstanding the fact that they have not all of the stack room necessary?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; certainly.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Has there not been a rather extraordinary increase in the number of books and pamphlets since the war?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I could not answer the gentleman as to that.

Mr. LONDON. I understand that there has been an unusual increase in the number of books, and that the Library really is short of space.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It will be short of space very quickly, and something will have to be done sooner or later to take care of that situation. There is another matter that I expected to discuss, but which I shall not do now on account of the limited time. That is the question of the salaries of the employees of the Library. The committee has made no increase. It has not felt under the new rule that it is proper for it to make increases. Those are legislative matters which should be taken care of by the proper legislative committee. There is no question, however, about the fact, and everyone who has investigated the matter will agree with me, that the salaries in the Library of Congress are far below those which are paid in other branches of the Government for services many of which are not so important, and I hope that at some time it will be possible to take up the question of salaries in the Library. While I would not favor an unreasonable increase, they should, at least, be equalized with some of those paid in other departments, and all of them should be given what might be called a proper living wage. I am sure that those of them who receive $50, $60, and $70 a month are not receiving a proper living wage.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; for a brief question.

Mr. LAZARO. I do not quite agree with the chairman of the committee in his statement that a supplementary report had been made to the committee asking for $800,000 for stacks for books, and the committee had come to the conclusion that there were a whole lot of documents that were not used which ought to be stored and room made for other documents that are needed, and then he wound up by saying that the committee had made no provision at all for the old documents. It seems to me that some provision ought to be made for these old documents until we can appropriate for the new stacks.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That was the suggestion made by the gentleman from Minnesota and is worthy of consideration. There are many old documents and old papers in the Library which are not in active demand that might possibly, as the gentleman from Minnesota explained, be stored in some convenient and safe building, and at the same time remain accessible to those who want to use them rather than go to the enormous expense of nearly a million dollars for bookstacks. It was only a suggestion made by the gentleman from Minnesota, and is something that will have to be worked out.

Mr. LAZARO. I simply felt that something ought to be done.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not understand that the Library will suffer for lack of space if we do not do anything in this bill. My understanding is that they have the space now to take care of valuable and important documents in the Library, but they are quickly becoming overcrowded, and sooner or later they will need additional space.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think they will have to have additional space in three years.

Mr. LAZARO. We ought to take good care of the Congressional Library and give them all the space they need.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I quite agree with the gentleman, and Congress will undoubtedly do so.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I was glad to hear what the gentleman from Tennessee said about the salaries of the employees in the Library. My recollection is that they are not included in the reclassification bill which we had before the House.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can not say definitely about that. I was of a contrary impression. I hope they are included.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Are they civil-service employees?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They are not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If not covered by the reclassification bill, I hope the appropriate committee will take the gentleman's remarks to heart and give it consideration. I know many of these employees, and I know they are working for meager pay.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Many of them are college graduates, receiving from $1,200 to $1,500 a year.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And many of them are linguists and know several languages.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I hope that they are included in the reclassification bill, but if not I hope the committee will take it up and give the question some consideration.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] referred to the splendid record made by this Congress and by the Committee on Appropriations in early reporting to Congress the regular annual supply bills. As he clearly showed, it is a record that has never been excelled, and a record for which I think Congress can justly take pride. [Applause.] The gentleman from Illinois was generous enough to say that every member of the committee on both sides of the party lines, and every Member of the House on both sides of the Chamber, was entitled to credit for the result.

That is true, but I think it is only fair to say that the chief credit is due to the gentleman from Illinois himself. [Applause.] He has established a number of what I consider very wise reforms in the way of reporting appropriation bills which I am sure under the Budget system will redound to the interest of the Government and economy in governmental expenditures. He has made a great chairman, and will go down in history as one of the greatest chairmen of that great committee. [Applause.] He has brought to bear all of his splendid and well-known business and executive ability in the performance of the duties which rest upon him as chairman. As he stated, there is no politics in the committee. Republicans and Democrats alike in the committee look upon it as a business proposition. We differ sometimes, of course, on questions of appropriation, and sometimes bring those differences to the floor of the House, but we do not show any politics or any partisanship to the committee. All members have been glad to give their support and cooperation to the chairman in his effort to conserve the public money and to report out appropriation bills at an early date so that Congress may have ample time to give them the fullest consideration.

I wish to repeat, and I say this from my heart, that during my entire service on that committee the committee has never had a chairman who has shown greater executive and business ability, greater interest in conserving the public money, than has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, on yesterday in the consideration of the item providing for rivers and harbors there was perpetrated on this floor a parliamentary situation the like of which in my 16 years of service I have never seen before. The river and harbor bloc, aided by the inland waterways bloc, absolutely declined to give opportunity to the committee that had spent days upon days on the item under consideration to present to the House its reasons for recommending $37,000,000 and the reasons for rejecting the amount of $56,000,000 as suggested by the Assistant Chief of Engineers.

An attempt was made prior to its consideration to have some agreement as to length of debate. Three hours was suggested, only to be objected to by a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON].

As soon as the first paragraph was read under the five-minute rule, within my rights as a member of the subcommittee, I rose for recognition, making the usual pro forma amendment of striking out the last word. I was proceeding with an explanation of the estimates of the department when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NEWTON], the first lieutenant of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. DEMPSEY], interposed a point of order that I was not speaking to the amendment. Rarely have I seen such tactics adopted. Never have I seen it resorted to where a member of the committee reporting a bill was for the first time attempting to get the floor to explain to the House the reasons for the committee making its recommendation of $37,000,000.

During the subsequent consideration of the item the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] took the floor. He was interrupted. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]—he, too, had difficulty in getting recognition. All the time that was given to the consideration of the amendment under the five-minute rule was 20 minutes, 10 minutes only in opposition to the extravagant proposal of the gentleman from New York, when the Member from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], a member of the inland-waterway bloc, moved to close debate. When, after the House had voted by an overwhelming vote the $56,000,000 in connection with the discussion of appropriations for surveys, I attempted to give some explanation of the action of the committee for its recommendation again a member of this bloc, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH], raised the point of order that I was not speaking to the amendment. Of course I knew I was not speaking to the amendment, so I desisted. The followers of the two blocs were in the saddle, and they drove ruthlessly their advantage without any regard to the rights of the only committee that had given any consideration to the estimates. There were men here ready to support not only the committee but the administration in the hour and a half in support of the committee's recommendation, if three hours of debate had been allotted—men who would have been listened to with interest, men who have made a special study of river and harbor projects for years and years. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], recognized by everyone in this Chamber and over the country as an expert on river and harbor matters, had gone over the report the night before so as to present his views on this important question of whether we should adhere to the committee's estimates or whether we should take the pork-barrel scheme, that of the Assistant Chief of Engineers. He could not be heard. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, wanted to lay emphasis upon the fact that the vital principle of budgetary reform was at stake. He wanted 10 minutes. The gentleman from Wyoming, the majority leader, wanted 10 minutes to emphasize and point out the fact that it was critical that the budgetary system should be adhered to. No opportunity other than for 10 minutes to be heard.

There has been some peculiar proceedings going on behind the scenes. The subcommittee on the War Department appropriation bill, of which I am a member, gave hours and hours of hearings to the various estimates of the department as to rivers and harbors. There are 120 pages of testimony in which every project in the entire country, for which estimates had been proposed, was gone into in detail. The Rivers and Harbors Committee has held no hearings on these estimates. They had had some executive meetings, I am told, to determine the plan of campaign they were to wage when this matter would come up for consideration. But there was a new bloc formed other than the bloc of the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, a bloc known as the inland-waterway bloc. They have been having dinners in the Capitol, attended by a number of Members; dinners, as I am told, given and paid for by some outside party interested in these appropriations. Far be it from me to cast any reflection upon the members of this bloc for getting good dinners at the House restaurant at the expense of some interested party. They are all honorable gentlemen. That bloc is under the leadership of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NEWTON], who had the valuable assistance of his colleague [Mr. ROACH], a member of this bloc. They were particularly energetic and active yesterday to prevent proper consideration of this item. It was as ruthlessly energetic a group to put through their exorbitant program with the minimum of debate as I have seen even under force rule for a long time.

During the general debate 26 minutes was yielded by me, in charge of the debate for the time being, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] to explain his position. There were many glaring misstatements in that speech that I thought should be answered. Why, in the speech that he delivered on the floor he stated there would not be one cent for any of the new projects carried in the river and harbor authorization of September 22 last if we did not increase the appropriations authorized by the subcommittee. That was a glaring misrepresentation, and without support in fact at all. Let me read to you what he says in his printed remarks on that question. Page 1870 of the RECORD:

> Yet if the appropriation for rivers and harbors is only $37,000,000, as proposed in the bill, very little will be done on the great projects approved in the September bill, of which New York Harbor, the Sabine-Neches Waterway, Coos Bay, and Umpqua Bay are only fair samples.

Then he goes on:

> It would be bad business judgment, when both the new projects and the old projects can not be prosecuted owing to the inadequacy of the funds available, to tie up the Government plants which are prosecuting the work of the old projects and transfer them to the new projects.

Now further:

> Nothing will have been appropriated for these new projects unless the amount embodied in the amendment is approved by the committee and that amount is appropriated.

How strange. How lacking in confirmation from the hearings before our subcommittee. What could have been his motive in making this misrepresentation? If he can read the hearings he certainly would not have so grossly misrepresented the facts. And what a wonderful change has come over this fighting Member from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] from that which he took two years ago, when as chairman of the subcommittee which reported this bill he brought into this House, as you older Members will remember, a recommendation for a lump-sum appropriation of $15,000,000, when the estimates of the same engineers were $56,000,000 for that year. Why did he not advocate the full estimate then, as he did this and last year?

The Democrats almost to a man in the fight to increase the $15,000,000 recommendation, and almost to a man yesterday, opposed his position and under the leadership of the minority Member, Mr. SMALL, proposed $28,000,000. On a record vote, let me say to the credit of the almost united Republican membership in the last Congress, only 13 Republicans joined with the Democrats. They stood by the recommendation of the gentleman from New York, head of the subcommittee on rivers and harbors appropriations committee of the Committee on Appropriations, in favor of $15,000,000 as against the proposal of the minority Member, Mr. SMALL, who wished to raise it to $28,000,000.

Why, at the prior session, when he was ranking Republican member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, before the appropriating power had been transferred from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to the Committee on Appropriations, a lump-sum appropriation carrying $12,400,000 was reported for river and harbor projects. The Senate raised it to $24,400,000, and as one of the conferees of the House this same Mr. DEMPSEY came back with a conference report in favor of $12,400,000. And, gentlemen, how much were the estimates of the department for river and harbor work when he voted $12,400,000 in 1921? The estimates were $42,541,000. This year the estimates are $56,000,000. Now he has changed front completely, because, forsooth, he is not charged with responsibility, and asks, for a second time in the history of the Congress and repeating his position of last year, the granting of the maximum asked for by the engineers.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Is there any river and harbor item in this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I am speaking in general debate, because I could not get time yesterday.

Mr. SNYDER. I was wondering why the gentleman, who is so anxious to save time, is wasting time by talking about an issue that is finished. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, this issue is not finished. The gentleman is too previous about that. Yesterday I could not get time because of the activity of those in the river and harbor bloc, with whom the gentleman from New York was cooperating, in stopping discussion.

Mr. SNYDER. This is the most wonderful post morten address I ever heard. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. I am going to present it for the benefit of the country, and the gentleman does not have to remain here unless he cares to.

Mr. SNYDER. I am going to stay and listen to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. I am glad to hear the gentleman is willing to listen. Perhaps he will get some enlightenment. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, what has been the history of the appropriations for rivers and harbors? What are the amounts of expenditures that have been made during the past 11 years for river and harbor work? This information was not furnished to the House yesterday. Perhaps when this bill comes back from the Senate, or from the President, perchance, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] may utilize this information; and if the gentleman from New York does not wish to utilize it, perhaps the country will like to know how much money we have expended for river and harbor work in the last 11 years.

In 1912 we spent $29,519,589; in 1913, $32,270,171; in 1914, $40,354,000; in 1915, $37,714,420; in 1916, $28,786,070; in 1917—the first time when we took the appropriation for river and harbor work on the Mississippi out of the bill and made a special permanent appropriation, to be expended by the Mississippi River Flood Commission—we expended $23,829,265; in 1918, $20,614,005; in 1919, $33,378,364; in 1920, $34,779,873; in 1921, $41,241,503; in 1922, $27,415,981; or a total, according to the figures that I have here, of $352,903,241, or an average of expenditure for river and harbor work, exclusive of the Mississippi River and the permanent appropriations that are not carried each year in the regular river and harbor act, of $32,082,112.

Now, what was the status of the appropriations at the last date available when the hearings were held in January? On November 1, 1922, there was unexpended of the appropriations that have heretofore been voted—and remember that these appropriations are all available until expended; they do not lapse with the end of the fiscal year for which they are made—on November 1, 1922, the last date available, there was unexpended $49,112,308.

How much was unexpended on December 1, 1921, a year before? Twenty-eight million three hundred and twenty-four thousand dollars; $21,000,000 more, remember, unexpended on November 1 last than there was within one month of the corresponding date in the prior year.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at present. I want to make my statement.

How much was unexpended on June 30, 1922? Seventeen million two hundred and forty thousand dollars. So that there was expended between December 1, 1921, and June 30, 1922, the difference, or $11,247,000.

As $49,112,308 was unexpended on November 1, 1922, and as we had expended in the six months' period of the past year $11,247,000, and allowing for one month's expenditure $2,000,000, that of November, which was not included in the prior year, which would make $13,247,000 as the estimate of expenditure until this coming June, there would be unexpended on June 30, 1923, $36,112,000. Thirty-six million one hundred and twelve thousand dollars unexpended, as against $17,247,926 on the prior June 30, 1921.

Now, add to that the $37,000,000 that was recommended by the committee for expenditure next year, it would make available for expenditure July 1, 1923, $63,112,382.

But this total does not include, remember, the $6,998,000 that we authorized for the continuation of the work at Muscle Shoals; neither does it include the $10,500,000 of authorization to enter into contracts on that project. Neither does it include the $6,000,000 item of appropriation for work on the Mississippi River under the permanent appropriation; neither does it include the $500,000 for the improvement of the Sacramento River under the permanent appropriation. But the $63,000,000 unexpended, without even these supplementary appropriations, would be the largest amount available and unexpended at any time in the history of the Government.

Let us take another angle as to the basis on which the committee arrived at its figures of $37,000,000.

Mr. MONDELL. What did the gentleman state as to the amount of unexpended balance?

Mr. STAFFORD. Deducting the amount expended in the seven months' period from December 1 last to June 30 last, $11,247,000, and adding thereto $2,000,000 for allowance of expenditure in November of last year, so as to cover the same period of time, namely, from November to June 30, that would equal $13,000,000. Deduct that from the amount unexpended on November 1 last, $49,112,000, and it would make available on June 30 next $36,112,000, as against $17,247,000, which was unexpended, according to the hearings, on June 30, 1922.

Add to the $36,000,000 that will be unexpended on June 30 next the $37,000,000 our committee recommended, makes a grand total of $63,000,000, the largest amount in the history of the Government that would have been available on July 1 of this year for expenditures.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand, then, that with the sum voted yesterday and the unexpended available balances there will be over $90,000,000 available for work next year.

Mr. STAFFORD. The sum of $23,900,000 should be added for the other separate projects carried in the bill, or, in round numbers, $87,000,000, according to my computation, which does not include the $19,000,000 which was so outrageously voted yesterday by the pork-barrel bloc.

Mr. MONDELL. With the appropriation of yesterday and the $36,000,000 together, they amount, as I figure it, to about $82,000,000—that is, without the appropriation for the Mississippi River.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; $82,000,000 without the $23,900,000 carried for Muscle Shoals, lower Mississippi River, and Sacramento River.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. My time is running. I would prefer to finish my statement. I will yield later on.

Mr. SNYDER. I believe the 196 men who have been called a bloc did not know they were doing such a good job.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from New York approves the outrageous expenditure of Government funds which was voted yesterday in violation of the Budget system. He is welcome to any credit that may attach to voting all that the engineers ask.

Take it from another angle, to show how the committee arrived at its figure of $37,000,000.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I want to continue. My time is running.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Why did not the gentleman say something about the $600,000 for Milwaukee Harbor?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be very glad to before I conclude if the gentleman and the House will give me time. But I will say, so far as the estimate for Milwaukee Harbor is concerned, in justification of myself——

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. You need that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think I need it with anybody other than perhaps the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the rules should be observed, that the gentleman should not be interrupted unless he yields.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. STAFFORD. During the war and ever since, and in fact during my entire service in this House of 16 years, I have followed religiously the suggestion given to me during my first term of service by my very dear lamented friend, the late Hon. James R. Mann, that I should never put myself under obligation to any department head or bureau chief where I was in a position on a committee to vote appropriations that that department or bureau might desire. [Applause.] I have never spoken to any member of the Corps of Engineers here in Washington or elsewhere since I have been a member of the Committee on Appropriations in advocacy of any appropriation for the Milwaukee Harbor project. [Applause.]

If it has merit—and General Taylor stated in the hearings last year that it was one of the very best propositions, and was listed in class A—I know that it will receive recognition it deserves without the personal importunings of Members, as is sometimes the case, of going down to get the favor of the engineers to get appropriations for projects that are not meritorious and that savor of pork.

Now taking another angle to show the way our committee arrived at our estimates, I wish to say there is a difference between unexpended balances and unobligated balances. I want to be very fair. I have given considerable study to these estimates and I only wanted on yesterday to have an opportunity to present the figures. I am a good loser. It is nothing to me personally. I want only to do my duty. That is all. I thought it was owing to the House to submit these figures to its attention. We had no opportunity. Taking it from another angle, there is a difference between unexpended balances and unobligated balances. The Engineer Department may contract and obligate some of these unexpended balances that I have been referring to. I want to show you how we arrived at the estimate and what we considered should be included in the estimate for the new projects.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not now. Later on I will be glad to.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I simply wish to ask the gentleman whether it is the $27,000,000 or the $37,000,000 that he is referring to.

Mr. STAFFORD. The $37,000,000.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Not the $27,000,000 which is the original budget?

Mr. STAFFORD. The original budget was $27,625,760. Of unobligated balances that had no ties connected with them at all that the department could utilize as it saw fit, on November 1, 1922, they had unobligated $33,319,679.50. On December 1 of the prior year, 1921, they had, unobligated, $18,550,082. The total of the estimates of the Assistant Chief of Engineers was $56,589,000. In response to a query put to the Assistant Chief of Engineers, Gen. Harry Taylor, by Mr. ANTHONY as to what the effect would be in case Congress only voted the Budget allowance of $27,625,000, virtually one-half of what was suggested for utilization in the coming year by the Engineers, General Taylor said substantially what he said last year:

> We should advise each district engineer that we had a total of $27,625,760 for allotment, which would be a little less than half the sum stated in the annual report as the sum needed; that he would have to get along with 50 per cent of the amounts which he stated to be needed for his district; we should ask him how he would divide up the total for his district for the best interests of commerce. I presume we would find every district engineer would report he needed more than 50 per cent of the original amount and that he would distribute 75 or 80 per cent or more of that amount. We would take the figures and check them over, going back and forth with the district engineers, and finally allot the money to those improvements where it would be of the greatest value to commerce.

So our subcommittee, basing its action on the statement of General Taylor, that the district engineers would come back in their reports for 80 per cent of the total estimates that they submitted, namely, $56,589,410, took 80 per cent of the total for all the projects, which included those that had been authorized in the act of September 22 last, which 80 per cent equaled $45,271,000. Bear in mind that there was available $33,319,000 unobligated on November 1, 1922. At the end of the year it was testified that there would be $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 still unobligated of this $33,000,000. Our committee thought there would be something like $18,000,000 unobligated. So we figured that taking the engineer's own word that 80 per cent of the total request would be all that was needed, or $45,271,000, we recommended $37,000,000, which, with the $15,000,000 or $18,000,000 unobligated on June 30 next, would make available for new obligations a grand total of $52,000,000 to $55,000,000, $7,000,000 to $10,000,000 more than the 80 per cent that would be required.

Take another angle. Of the new projects authorized under the September 22, 1922, act, which totaled $38,245,991, it was estimated that during the next fiscal year only $13,144,000 could be expended; 80 per cent of that was $10,515,000. So, adding the $10,000,000 to the Budget estimate of last year of $27,000,000 made $37,000,000. We had cut down the Budget estimates on the military activities $14,000,000, and we thought we were not doing any violence to the Budget and in nowise obstructing the President in his great policy of trying to keep the appropriations within the receipts by recommending $10,000,000 more than the original Budget estimates, so as to be certain to take care of the new projects carried in the river and harbor act of September last.

I find that I will not have time to go into the respective projects.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. There is the weakness of the argument. Why not explain your increase over the Budget?

Mr. STAFFORD. Because we wanted to make certain the new projects authorized so late as September 22, and which may not have been given consideration by the Budget officer, and we took 80 per cent and added that amount. That does no violence to the fundamental budgetary principle. We appropriated no more than what the Budget officer said should be expended for War Department activities.

I come from a harbor district. I am in sympathy with all harbor projects. My two colleagues on the committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], do not have any harbors or navigable rivers in their districts. For two years I have been on the subcommittee on military affairs, a subject entirely new to me, and I have given as much consideration to rivers and harbors as my other work would permit. I wish I had time to review the various projects for which estimates have been made, but time will not permit. Take the Ohio River project. I am in hearty sympathy with it.

The Ohio River project is virtually completed down to Louisville.

Mr. STEPHENS. We have 13 more to build.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Ohio says they have 13 more dams to build, but I wish to inform the gentleman that the engineers are considering abandoning some of the dams on the lower reaches beyond the confluence of the Tennessee and the Cumberland Rivers and have a permanently dredged channel. The dams on the lower reaches are twice as expensive as they are on the upper reaches because the river is much wider. They are now considering a permanent improvement of the channels each year rather than to build the adjustable dams.

Last year there was expended $7,000,000 on the Ohio because the water conditions throughout the country were more favorable last year for river and harbor work than for a decade or generation before. In the allotment for next year they estimated $7,000,000 for the Ohio River, and in reply to a question put to General Taylor he said that sometimes with high water when there was considerable rainfall they could spend only $2,000,000 and usually with average rainfall only $5,000,000. We have a right to conclude that with the average climatic conditions, with the average rainfall, that it will not be possible in the next year to spend $7,000,000. We should expect that they might spend $5,000,000.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. How do you draw your conclusion when they have spent $7,000,000?

Mr. STAFFORD. Because that was during an exceptionally dry season. General Taylor said that in an ordinary year they could expend but $5,000,000, and when the conditions are not favorable they could expend only $2,000,000. A 6-foot channel is available the entire year as far as Louisville, more than half the distance.

So we went through the various estimates, some of them very questionable. The Missouri River, for instance, where it is proposed to spend $1,000,000 on improvements and $500,000 for maintenace. The upper Mississippi and the upper Missouri are other instances. One member of the inland-waterway bloc, the gentleman from Iowa, who has been regaled with harbor dinners in the House restaurant, perfectly proper, was informed I understand by General Taylor that if the $56,000 000 was voted there would be available $1,000,000 for the improvement of the upper Missouri from Kansas City to Council Bluffs, when only $25,000 was estimated for maintenance according to the official reports.

There is the questionable practice in this whole matter. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is present, a distinguished Member of the House, the former leader against pork-barrel river and harbor appropriation. For years he had to stand here alone and fight the buffeting waves in the efforts of Members of the House to get appropriations for improvement and maintenance not warranted. But the scene has changed. For the second time in two years, and never before in its history, we find the House voting every cent of money that the district engineers ask, and have the Members go to the new power at the other end of the Avenue, to the War Department, and ask for some of this total appropriation that they could not get if the project was placed on its merits. Not only that, but voting the maximum amount of the estimates encourages not only the Chief of Engineers to yield and favor questionable projects but it encourages awarding contracts at high prices because of excess of work with only a limited number of contractors with equipment to do the work.

This fight is now transferred from the House and the Capitol to the White House. Never was I more thrilled by any statement during the hearings on the War Department appropriation bill than when Secretary of War Weeks stated to the committee that it was the policy of President Harding to keep down the estimates of the Budget within the limit of receipts.

He said it was the President's fixed policy not to exceed the revenue, to adhere closely to the requirements of the Budget law, and yet yesterday this House, without any consideration whatever by any committee other than the War Department Appropriation Committee, which was denied a hearing, ran wild to the extent of adding $19,000,000 more than the committee had recommended, and $29,000,000 more than the Budget had recommended. If we are going to maintain the budgetary policy, if this House, which is Republican, charged with responsibility, is going to uphold the hands of the President, it is vital that we keep within the income of the Government in making our appropriations. The responsibility is with us; it is not on the Democratic side. Two years ago, before the Budget law was in force, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], having charge of the bill as chairman of the Rivers and Harbors subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, came before this body with a recommendation of $15,000,000, when the estimates of the engineers were $56,000,000. The demand for economy to-day is just as strong as it was then.

The year before, as the ranking member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, he came into this House with a report for $12,000,000 of appropriations, when the estimates were $42,541,000. Then there was just as much need for economy as there is to-day. To his credit be it said that he stood here against the demands of the Senate, as one of the conferees in their attempt to increase the $12,000,000 appropriation to $22,000,000, and he carried the day. Two years ago when we voted this lump-sum appropriation of $15,000,000 on a roll call you stood like a phalanx against the importunings of the engineers for larger appropriations. And yesterday, with the Budget law in force, you take away the prop that is necessary to uphold and sustain the President in his great work. The greatest achievement of the Republican administration is the Budget law, and ours is the responsibility to carry it through effectively. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL].

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on threatened disaster to extension work.

The Congress and the country are entitled to a frank statement of facts in regard to the reorganization, about one year ago, of the extension work in the United States Department of Agriculture.

Partisan and sectional politics is more rampant and baneful in this reorganization and its administration than was ever the case in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving. The effects on agriculture are more far-reaching and disastrous.

Maladministration in the Department of Agriculture is repealing acts of Congress and defying the intent of Members of Congress, who enacted definite legislation for the national welfare.

Under the guise of "A national program of agriculture" and "A unified program," the whole order of proper procedure in extension work is being reversed and southern agriculture is being discriminated against. Present economic conditions make it clearly impossible for the southern farmer ever again to have his corncrib and smokehouse in the Corn Belt, but present practice in the Department of Agriculture is ignoring this fact and is wrecking, if not annihilating, the home-demonstration work for women and girls in all parts of the country. Under the new scheme of Assistant Secretary of Agriculture C. W. Pugsley, in charge of extension work, through his chief, C. B. Smith, more Federal and State funds are being spent for specialists, or experts, and overhead expenses than are allowed for men and women agents in the counties who do the real work of value.

Specialists in scientific studies have, of course, a high and important place, but the average agricultural expert is a man who states what everybody knows in language that nobody understands. He honestly believes that his use of unfamiliar terminology makes him appear wise and great.

The available records show that in 1921–22 there was allotted to cooperative extension work $18,500,000, of which the Federal Government contributed $5,580,000 under the provisions of the Smith-Lever Act. In addition Congress, by direct appropriation to the Department of Agriculture, made available $1,050,000 for farmers' cooperative demonstration work and $100,000 for extension work by the several bureaus of the department, cooperating with the States Relations Service, making a total from Federal sources of $6,730,000.

The State legislatures appropriated $4,880,000, the counties $5,850,000, and $1,040,000 from other local sources. Of the $11,610,000 contributed by Congress and the State legislatures, $6,786,000, or 58½ per cent was used for overhead expenses, which includes administration, publications, supervisors, and specialists or experts, leaving only $4,994,000, or 41½ per cent of all Federal and State appropriations, to go directly into the salaries of county workers. This means the larger part of the burden of county workers' salaries and expenses must come from the county and local people. This was clearly not the intent of Congress.

Farmers, editors, educators, and other public-spirited thinkers at home and abroad have heartily commended the establishment of the farm and home demonstration work in the counties. They will deplore its present mismanagement.

Secretary James Wilson administered this work in a broad, nonpartisan, national way. I have great respect for Secretary Wallace, and I am surprised that he permits the things that are going on in his department. Under the system now in vogue he would hardly be able to get voluntary information, for it costs a man his job to go over the heads of certain types of bureau chiefs. Certainly not the bravest employee would dare go over the head of Smith or Pugsley to the Secretary.

A great humanitarian service which affects the destiny of our civilization should not be conducted in such a way as to invite political reprisal with each change of administration. I, for one, here and now protest against these partisan methods.

The Department of Agriculture, in cooperation with the land-grant colleges, has the supervision of the expenditure of nearly $20,000,000 and the appointment of about 4,000 men and women in extension work. The usefulness in agriculture of all other scientific and teaching divisions is largely dependent upon the efficiency and success of the demonstration work. It had its origin in the South. The late Dr. Seaman A. Knapp was its founder. He was a native of New York and a former president of the Iowa Agricultural College. In 1903, when he began this work, he was a citizen of Louisiana. Upon his recommendation Secretary Wilson appointed the first county farm-demonstration agent in this country and the first woman county home-demonstration agent in the history of the world. More than 600 men agents and more than 250 women agents were at work in the South when the Smith-Lever Act was passed in 1914. In the discussions when this act was pending, Representatives and Senators, regardless of party, expressed approval of this work and the methods of doing it. They wanted it extended. Successful demonstration was the inspiration of the extension act.

Doctor Knapp's efforts were confined mainly to the Cotton Belt, because he was working under special appropriations for boll-weevil control, but he aroused interest and created a demand for demonstration work all over the country. He was the first to arouse in the farmer the pride of vocation, the ambition to do one thing well which leads to other better things.

In 1911, the year of Doctor Knapp's death, the first county agent in the North was appointed. After the passage of the extension act and its acceptance by the States it spread very generally. Under this rapid development it came to pass that there were two offices of administration in the United States Department of Agriculture—extension south and extension north and west. It will be freely admitted that a combination of these two offices was desirable, but any fair-minded person will say that good administration called for the utilization of the best talent, thought, and experience available from the two old offices, which had about the same number of experienced people in their respective forces at the time of consolidation. Let us see what happened.

When the reorganization was announced the head of the office of north and west was made chief. The head of the southern office, Mr. J. A. Evans, who was Doctor Knapp's first appointee and lieutenant, was relegated to a nominal advisory position. All the other members of his force, some of whom had been in the work under Doctor Knapp from the beginning, organizing and establishing important lines of the work in the South were assigned to unimportant positions in the new organization.

A distinguished group of agriculturists and field agents who were eminently successful in establishing and building up the invaluable demonstration work in this country following the brilliant leadership of Doctor Knapp and his distinguished son have been ignored. Among them are W. B. Mercier, H. E. Savely, E. A. Miller, I. O. Schaub, O. B. Martin, I. W. Hill, F. P. Lund, C. L. Chambers, Miss Ola Powell, Miss Madge J. Reese, and Miss Hannah L. Wessling.

In the reorganization not a single one of these was made a head of a division or even a chairman of a subcommittee, notwithstanding the long experience and successful administration behind them. The assignments were arbitrary, made without any regard to peculiar fitness for the job. Neither was anyone's advice as to the qualifications of the various members of the southern office asked for at time of assignments or since. Every subchief division head and chairman of all committees came from the northern office.

Regardless of the fact that Congress had provided for extension work in agriculture and home economics, suggesting two logical grand divisions, this reorganization plan, like Gaul, was divided into three parts. They are "projects and programs, methods of organization, and subject matter," with an administration office over all. The big chief, Dr. C. B. Smith, who, as a former member of the Office of Farm Management, had read a paper in the department years before, in which he minimized the influence of practical demonstration in agriculture as contrasted with other agencies of instruction, fits well into the new scheme. Two of his assistants, Messrs. Graham and Wilson, from the office of north and west, are put at the head of divisions.

The third place was left vacant for months, although the men and women who had helped establish the work and given it to the world were available. By and by an outside man, Mr. L. H. Goddard, from Ohio, was brought in and put in charge of projects and programs. Conditions soon became so intolerable in the division of organization that its chief, Mr. M. C. Wilson, had to be removed, but he was transferred to the Office of Administration and put in charge of reports and records with an increased salary. Then the divisions of organization and subject matter were combined and the salary of that chief increased also. The chief of this new combination made three little chiefs—all from the North—and their salaries were elevated likewise.

They had less experience and little success in comparison with those who were ignored because they were from the South. Then the big chiefs organized batteries of clerks with chiefs and messengers galore while the salary elevator kept rising. It is strange that successful civil-service clerks from all parts of the country who had worked in the southern office did not have a chance to get aboard the rising salary elevator.

The subdivisions of the division of methods were made to include county-agent work, home-demonstration work, and boys' and girls' club work.

These last subdivisions have a human suggestion about them. They come down toward the earth, dealing with the farm and the home. One would expect that the man, W. A. Lloyd, who had done most to develop county-agent work in the North and West, would be put in charge of the first of these subdivisions, but not so, because he is an Ohio Democrat and had to go. He was transferred to projects and programs and assigned to a district in the far West. Mr. A. B. Graham, with elaborate ideas about methods, programs, and projects, was appointed. Miss Florence Ward, who had been in charge of the very limited home-demonstration work of the 33 Northern and Western States, was assigned to projects and programs in agriculture and home economics and given a district made up of New England and some Middle Atlantic States. Miss Grace E. Frysinger, who has orthodox ideas about organization, methods, nomenclature, programs, and phraseology, has States in her district that have no home-demonstration agents, some have one, and some a few more, while the women in the southern work, Misses Ola Powell, Madge J. Reese, and Hannah L. Wessling, who had been so influential in getting from 30 to 75 women agents to a State, have been relegated to positions where no such influence for good can ever be exerted.

I present below a comparative table showing number of women home-demonstration agents in a group of 13 States taken from the Southeastern and South Central and a group of 13 States taken from the North Central. As far as possible, the States are paired according to the amount of Smith-Lever funds allotted to them. This table gives only white women agents in the South. There are also 94 negro women agents in the South.

Tennessee	27	Nebraska	4
Texas	67	Pennsylvania	0
Virginia	33	South Dakota	5
Total	500	Total	84

The above table reveals that the major part of this work is done in the South. The South, however, has little part in making "programs" and "projects" in the Department of Agriculture.

The same kind of treatment was given to the men who originated and developed the boys' club work, with its large and profitable record in crop and live-stock production, while the Rocky Mountain section was drawn upon to find a man, Ivan L. Hobson, of limited and local experience, to put at the head of the boys and girls' club work of the entire country. There can be no objection to his working among his own people, but it will hardly be contended that Rocky Mountain agriculture and Brigham Young theories of home making should be thrust upon all the American home builders.

The home-demonstration work was based upon the belief that "the great force which readjusts the world originates in the home." Congress made extension work in home economics coordinate with extension in agriculture, but the reorganization of the department makes it very subordinate. In the projects and programs it is put on a parity with cattle, crops, hogs, and sheep. The highest positions given to women are five or six degrees removed from the Secretary. The women in the department and in the States who developed this great educational system in a decade are pioneers and benefactors. No other nation has women county agents. Three-fourths of such agents are in the 15 Southern States. Other countries have sent representatives here to study the work in the South, and some of our women have gone abroad with their message of hope and promise. Perhaps some big and little chiefs in the department had better be informed that women are now citizens of this Republic. Some leading women are protesting the fact that the extension office in Washington has prepared an annual report form for the whole work which does not mention the word "woman" or provide properly for reporting many of their most valuable activities. The women of the country are being shamefully ignored by certain pinhead chiefs in the Department of Agriculture.

In the conduct of the extension work under this revised reorganization no important communications can be sent out by former members of the southern office. Even the unimportant ones must bear the approval of a petty chief of a different political and pedagogical faith. He is often one who has no personal information of southern conditions.

This practice has been going on for more than a year. Five of the best workers have resigned. Others remained for the sake of the cause and hope for better things. All of them came from useful fields of service. Some have written valuable books, bulletins, and other publications on agriculture which are in demand in this and other countries. But they are gagged now. Thus the teachings of the great founder of the work are being suppressed in spite of the fact that former Congressman Lever, the author of the extension act, said "Dr. Seaman A. Knapp stands out toweringly among a bare half dozen really great agricultural leaders in the history of our country.

Surely a mere statement of this situation will call for a remedy from a department which heretofore has been remarkably free from partisan politics.

Some explanation may be found in a difference of opinion on educational principles and methods. There are two schools of thought. The one begins at the bottom and works upward, the other begins at the top and goes downward. The one begins with a great idea, the other with an elaborate schedule. The one starts with the farm and the home, the other goes forth with national programs and projects. In the one the department was created for the farmer, in the other the farmer exists for the experts of the Department of Agriculture. The one depends upon growth, the other upon dogmatics. The one makes the demonstrator on his own farm the center of influence and instruction, the other scatters instruction from the specialists. The one starts with simple demonstrations in production and develops them through standardization and marketing, the other starts with didactic instruction and assumes the superiority of the instructors. This accounts for the multiplication of specialists or experts, and points to the threatened failure of the whole enterprise as Congress conceived it.

The one represents the vanguard of educational thought, the other is medieval in its philosophy. The one eagerly seeks to teach how best to grow corn and cotton, the other satisfies and inflates itself on high-sounding terminology. The one was the inspiration of Doctor Knapp in creating the demonstration work, the other is the conceit of petty chiefs and specialists now destroying it.

The demonstration method in agriculture has met with approval and support everywhere, even in periods of great rural depression. In fact, it shines when tested. Hard times enhance its value.

If Assistant Secretary Pugsley and Chief C. B. Smith are not responsible for this threatened disaster to the extension work, let them name the guilty. If they are responsible, let them be transferred or dismissed.

I am not speaking against any person, but for the life of extension work in the Department of Agriculture which two short years ago offered such promise to the American farm and to the American home builder.

I have already indicated that Secretary Wallace is perhaps not informed of the havoc that is being wrought in the extension work. Without their knowledge or consent I have named the witnesses who are able to give him exact information.

Be not deceived, Mr. Secretary; your department is losing the confidence of the people in the counties. Give less money and time to strait-jacket mechanical "programs" and office paraphernalia and deal with the human element in the counties; expend the money you have in the counties where the work, if it is to count, must be done. Give the men and women in this service a square deal; cut out cheap politics; reduce the amount of money expended in overhead expenses and get the demonstration work, by boys and girls and by men and women alike, down to the earth in the counties where the farmers live, and avert the impending disaster. [Applause.]

Due to a revision of the Kansas budget, there is a difference of $1,250 in county agent work between this table and the one by projects.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD].

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the newspapers of the country have given much publicity to the decision of Professor Lowell, of Harvard University, in which he refused to allow a negro to board in a dormitory with white students. Professor Lowell is right as far as he goes, but he does not go far enough.

There is, though, in his reasoning the idea which if expanded and enlarged means the solution to a large extent of the race question. What I shall say now is not for the purpose of stirring up bitterness between the races, but for the purpose of defending Professor Lowell's position and showing that he at least has a glimpse of the true light on this question. I want to quote the newspaper item on Professor Lowell's decision, but before doing so I want to quote from what I said on the race question on this floor on the 18th day of January, 1922, just a year ago. I want to show that the professor of the great New England university is coming to the viewpoint of the South on this great question, which is the only correct viewpoint. This question would be practically solved if no one would mess with it except those who are familiar with it.

Here is what I wanted to repeat from my speech on the Dyer bill:

Let us build up a better feeling between the races, not a more bitter one.

Mr. Chairman, the white race will determine what position in this great civilization the Negro race shall occupy. This will eventually be determined not by sectional hatred—not by partisan prejudice and not by political selfish narrowness. The white race will write the verdict of the negroes' rights in this Nation, and the white people of the South will help make, will agree to, and will approve the verdict. The verdict will be impartial. It will be fair. It will speak the truth. It will be made up, after a careful consideration of all the evidence submitted by the Negro race, in view of all the surrounding circumstances and under the laws of eternal fairness, justice, and right. The verdict will not be a directed verdict. It will not be a forced decision. The white race will decide what position the negro is worthy to occupy from the negro's own acts, from his merit or lack of merit, and not from demands made by negro propagandists of either the Negro race or white race, except that these propagandists by the creation of racial hatred are introducing a mass of evidence against the colored race. I will say more along this line later.

The white man's verdict on the race question will not be made up by bills pushed through Congress, except this kind of thing hurts the Negro race. The verdict will not be made up favorably to the negro by the Negro race forcibly exercising privileges contrary to the wishes of the white race. The Negro race suffers from this. It does not gain. If I had a case before 12 jurors I would, so far as possible, introduce my best evidence. I would not want to be obnoxious to the jurors. I would want to show them every possible courtesy. I would want to be polite to them. Some negroes are handling the matter properly. Others are not. The negroes of the South are making a better showing for the race than is being made by the negroes of the North. The white race of the South is helping the negro solve the problem. We would soon solve the race question in the South if we were only let alone by racial prejudice, vultures of other sections. The negro of the South is very much more polite and respectful to the white race than are the northern negroes. While the southern negro as a rule is courteous and polite to the white man or woman, the northern negro is arrogant, haughty, disrespectful, and insulting to the white man and his folks.

The negroes of the South are working out their own salvation in this country; the northern negro is working out his own condemnation. The time is fast approaching when the North will bitterly detest the whole Negro race. The worst negroes of the South, if they miss the penitentiary, the gallows, and the occasional lynchings, are coming north to add to your already haughty, contemptible northern negro population. This mixture of our worst with the northern bad Negro race will go on making themselves as obnoxious as possible to the white race. They will push you and your wives and children aside to get on street and railway cars first, and then take the best seats and slouch down on the seats and force you and your loved ones to sit by them while they, in order to be sure they appear your equal, make themselves as offensive as possible. They will push you and your folks off the sidewalks to show you that they have special rights and are exercising them. At the public parks and public gatherings they will be anxious to show the white man that they are his equal. They will be sure and get between you and the music, and stand if you are sitting. They will talk loudly and laugh boisterously while you are trying to hear, to show you they are exercising equal rights. They will puff their cigar smoke so you will get a full share, and they will spit so a little will come your way, so you will know they are exercising their rights. They will not dare sit together at the band concerts; they will mix as thoroughly as possible, so you will see they are there. As nearly as possible they will get one on each seat in the street and railway cars, to show you they are exercising their rights.

It does not differ how many seats are in your waiting rooms; they will, if possible, get a few on each seat, so you will have the pleasure of standing or sitting by them and knowing they are exercising their rights. What I am saying is the truth. I am describing the condition in Washington and the North where the negro is to-day. I am not talking about the South now. On Christmas eve night I was in that great, magnificent passenger waiting room here in Washington, the most magnificent waiting room in the world. There are many, many most splendid seats. There were present about one-third enough people to fill all the seats, and yet, upon careful observation, I found a few negroes on every seat in that great waiting room. Not a single seat left where a white woman or child could sit without being side by side with a negro. Yes, plenty of room, but no room where there were no negroes. The negroes of Washington and the North are determined to force themselves in as the equal of the white man. The so-called educated negro is the most obnoxious of all He thinks he knows how to swagger and not give an inch to any human being that is white. He thinks that to be courteous to a white person is to admit that he is not the white man's equal, and he must never do that.

The white people of the North will before long get the idea that there are no good negroes; no, not one. The northern negro and the mean southern negro who comes north will expect political equality, economic equality, and social equality. He is determined to push himself forward in these respects every time he can, and if he gains an inch he will swagger over it and make his colored brethren hate the white man all the more. The northern negro believes he is given a greater freedom with the white women up here. If he commits rape he expects the father and brothers, relatives, and neighbors of the outraged girl to plead for his protection and beg for him to become a great hero and have a fair and impartial trial with the outraged girl, if left alive, in court to testify and him to deny. He expects newspaper write-ups, and the folks, some saying, "The rapist, Mr. Jones, must be innocent," and bringing him flowers, and if convicted he expects executive clemency and probably a pardon, with an implied invitation to him and others of his kind to go and do likewise.

All the while the negro will be working his own condemnation, for as surely as day follows night so surely will the misunderstandings, the discourtesies, the insults, the outrages, the growing race hatred finally break forth not only in St. Louis, Omaha, and Washington but all over the North, and the awful carnage or race riots will hold sway. Why can not the northern negro see this and instead of being haughty, offensive, and discourteous to the white race be all that the southern negro is in the way of respect, courtesy, and politeness to the white race? You agitators had better quit teaching race hatred and teach race respect and good will. You better teach the Negro race to respect and love the white man instead of hating him. You better plead for good will, which will protect your innocent women and children against riots, instead of worrying over the rapist. You had far better plead for separate passenger stations, separate passenger cars, separate seats on street cars, and separate space at band concerts, and every other arrangement which will lessen the friction between the races and bring about a better feeling.

In the South everything has been done that can be done to lessen the friction between the races. A few of the worst negroes will be lynched. The negro in the South who commits rape knows what is coming. He simply commits suicide, that is all. If something is not done, and that speedily, hundreds will be killed in the North for every one we lynch in the South. You simply can not start a race riot where negroes are courteous and polite to the white folks. The white people will not stand for it.

When race hatred is fanned almost to an all-consuming flame and some one or score of men say lets destroy the negro section and dozens of men promptly say, "No; old Bill lives down there. Old Fanny, my good old cook, is down there. The negroes down there are the friends of the white people. They are polite and anxious to be our friends." No race riot takes place.

But, on the contrary, let every man in the crowd remember not a good negro but a bad one, not a good deed but a bad one, not courtesy and politeness but disrespect and vicious conduct, and then hell breaks loose. The good negroes are saving the negro race, the bad ones are destroying it. Why do not we worry about the good ones and not so much about the criminal and the rapist?

Here is the newspaper item about Professor Lowell's decision:

[By the Associated Press.]

NEW YORK, January 12.—President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard University, in a letter to Roscoe Conkling Bruce, prominent negro graduate of the university, published in the New York World to-day, defends the exclusion of negro students from the freshmen dormitories.

Mr. Lowell declares that while the negro is entitled to the same opportunity for education as the white man, "we do not owe to him to force him and the white into social relations that are not or may not be mutually congenial."

REQUEST FOR ROOM DENIED.

Bruce's recent request that a room be reserved in the freshman halls for his son, who is preparing to enter Harvard, was denied.

President Lowell's letter says:

"I am sorry that you do not feel the reasonableness of our position about the freshman dormitories. It is not a departure from the past to refuse to compel white and colored men to room in the same building. We owe to the colored man the same opportunities for education that we do to the white man, but we do not owe to him to force him and the white into social relations that are not, or may not be, mutually congenial.

WOULD INCREASE PREJUDICE.

"We would give him freely opportunities for room and board wherever it is voluntary, but it seems to me that for the colored man to claim that he is entitled to have the white man compelled to live with him is a very unfortunate innovation, which, far from doing him good, would increase a prejudice that, as you and I will thoroughly agree, is most unfortunate and probably growing.

"On the other hand, to maintain that compulsory residence in the freshman dormitories—which has proved a great benefit in breaking up the social cliques that did much injury to the college—should not be established for 99½ per cent of the students because the remaining one-half of 1 per cent could not properly be included seems to me an untenable position."

Professor Lowell says in brief, "we do not owe him," speaking of the negro, "to force him and the white into social relations that are not or may not be mutually congenial." Writing further, Professor Lowell says that to do so "far from doing him good would increase a prejudice" "that is probably growing." This is the truth, if not the whole truth. The time is fast coming, it is here, when everyone, white or black, North or South, who thinks about this great question must agree that every time the negro forces himself or is forced by others into places where the white race does not welcome him he injures the Negro race by offending the white race. The Negro race must succeed by being courteous and not by being offensive. If he attends a white school, he injures his race by creating a bitterness against his people. If the white students of the school stand for it, the white people of the Nation as a whole do not approve of it and condemn the people in charge of the school who permit it. Professor Lowell has caught a glimpse of the light. He and his school need more light.

Negroes ought not to attend his school at all. The so-called "Jim Crow" law which makes whites and negroes ride in separate coaches on trains, use separate seats in street cars, and use separate waiting rooms at the stations is a most excellent law for both races. In the South neither race offends in the least the other while traveling. The white man with his family starts for a trip, goes and returns and thinks no less of the Negro race after his return. In the North a white family is, while traveling, all the while face to face with the impudence, the insults, and the offensive conduct of the northern negro, who takes special delight in being offensive to the white race with whom he feels equal and to whom he feels superior.

You can not tell me the white people of the North all do not want to associate with negroes. The same feeling we hav in the South is here and is growing rapidly. The best th the Negro race could do for itself would be to say: "Give us separate cars, separate waiting rooms, separate parks, separate schools, separate libraries, and separate sections of town to live in. We do not want to offend the white people in the least. They are our friends. We are theirs. We plead and are willing to live for a still better feeling between the races." This would help mightily, the situation.

A school library was finished last year here in Washington, and the men in control said they wanted the negroes and whites all to use it, and said it was a library for all. I thought how wrong they are. It will not be a library for all. It will be a library for two classes only, namely, the white people who want to associate with negroes and the negroes who want to be offensive and who delight in forcing the white man to deal with him as an equal. There will be no place at this library for the white person who does not want to associate with negroes and no place for the negroes who do not want to do anything which will offend the white man, if there are any such negroes in Washington. I believe the negroes teach their children here to be as offensive to the whites as possible. The old and the young of the Negro race here are doing well their part of building up a contempt of the white race for the negroes.

On street cars, on railway trains, and in passenger waiting rooms, where the two races are forced to occupy the same seats and sit side by side, there is built up a race hatred that will eventually make the Negro bitterly hated by the white race, and which hatred will go far toward the destruction of the Negro race. The Negro race must have the good will of the white race in order to exist among the white race. The negro can only live in white United States by the grace of the white man. Why the negroes do not strive in season and out of season for the good will of the white man by which good will the negroes only can live, I do not know. Many negroes of the South see in the white man their friends and are day by day building up a good feeling between the races. The negroes of the South are making themselves a place by being courteous and polite to the white man and his folks. The negroes of the North are destroying the chance they have by attempting to force themselves where they are not wanted and by being insolent and offensive. Many negroes in the South would not under any circumstances come in at the front door of a white home unless specifically requested to do so. They do not want to use a white waiting room or ride on a train in the white coach if it offends the white man or white woman or white child in the least. These kind of negroes are the saving power of the Negro race. You have very few or none of them in the North. The average negro of the North takes a special pride in making himself offensive to the white race. He wants to ride with the white folks. He wants to use the same waiting room. He wants to use the same libraries, the same schools, and the same boarding house. He wants to live in the white neighborhood of the towns. He wants to do all this not because he loves the white folks but because he hates the white race and wants to show them he is their equal and their superior. He wants to do all these things not in order to be polite but to be obnoxious. You have here in Washington probably the most beautiful passenger station in the world, with hundreds of most splendid seats. You have worlds of space there and hundreds of seats for the negroes who want to be vicious and offensive to the white race and who gloat over making white folks sit by them, regardless of whether the white folks want to sit by them or not. You have in that waiting room not a single seat nor a square inch of space for the negroes who do not want to be offensive, who do not want to sit by white folks if not desired, and who prefer to sit with their own race and foster a good feeling between the races. You have in that waiting room all space for the whites who want to associate with negroes. There is no space for the white man, woman, or child who does not want to sit with strange, offensive negroes and who prefer to associate with the white race.

Millions and millions of the people's money have been spent and are spent each year on dozens of most beautiful parks here in Washington, and most splendid music is furnished—for whom? For only the whites who want to associate with negroes, who want to smell the cigar smoke puffed in his face by an offensive negro, who likes to have them walk in front of him and talk loudly, regardless of where he may move, and who prefers the boisterous laugh of the crowd of negroes in front of him to the music. These parks and music are also for the special use of the negroes who want to and do get a special satisfaction out of so far as possible appropriating all the parks and all the music to themselves by so acting as to prevent the white people from enjoying either. We need a few parks for the negroes who live in Washington and who do not want to be obnoxious—if there are such here. There ought to be some provision for the whites—and I know there are thousands of them—who want a breath of fresh air without being compelled to associate with offensive negroes.

Oh, the disgrace of the negro situation here in Washington! We have here in Washington a so-called reformatory for girls. It is filled up with negro girls and a few white girls. In other words, if a white girl makes a mistake or does some wrong for which she should be corrected she is forced to live with a bunch of negroes in order that she, a white girl, may be made better. The gang in authority in Washington who causes this to be done ought to be forced to eat with negroes, sleep with negroes, live with negroes, smell negroes, and work at hard labor with negroes in a penitentiary for and during the full end and term of their natural lives.

Gentlemen of the committee, the race problem will be solved when the negro race and the white race find out that the thing to do is to do that which will cause the least friction between the two races and promote the best feeling between the white man and the colored man. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, some weeks ago while I was not in the Chamber several gentlemen took a kindly interest in the bill to establish a Code of the Laws of the United States, which passed the House two years and four days ago, and made inquiry as to what had become of it during the last two years. I can not now go into this in much detail, but I can perhaps answer a few of the questions that were asked at that time. Let me preface my remarks by saying a word in respect to the history of what was done before the bill left here. Twenty-two months of hard work were put on the bill before it came into the House. We had the assistance and encouragement of more than 100 Members of this House who came in to see us and personally observed just what was being done. We followed the plans of the old, original, Revised Statutes, taking advantage of that experience, and, we hope, considerably improved the work that was done, especially as we had more time in which to do it.

HE WANTED TO LOAN ANOTHER BILLION.

The bill passed the House May 16, 1921, unanimously. As far as I know, no other man who ever tried a lawsuit has ever made any objection to the bill. We sent the bill to every department, and some of them helped us considerably. For example, the War Department made a very careful research of the bill as it affected laws respecting the Army. They found two mistakes, which we were very glad to correct. I was glad to be able to say that we found that in their array of military law there were 27 omissions, which we had supplied and which they inserted. Other departments took different views. The then Secretary of the Treasury, for example, found a "terrific blunder of such serious character" that he stated the bill could not possibly be any good. It seems a law had been passed authorizing an issue of $1,000,000,000 of Liberty bonds. The law was executed. That gentleman was greatly distressed to find that it was not included. He said the $1,000,000,000 worth of bonds were out, and it would be very embarrassing if they did not have anything to stand behind them; he was not quite sure whether the bonds could ever be paid. I suggested that since the law had been executed and was not in effect any more it would certainly be very embarrassing if we reenacted it, as we would if we included it in this bill, because he could then issue another $1,000,000,000 worth of bonds. I said I did not believe that was the best thing to do. I asked him who his attorney was, and he said that it was not practical to say. Gentlemen can judge from this of the kind of some of the help that we received.

NAVY THROWS OUT 71 SECTIONS ON THE "BEST OF OUR INFORMATION AND BELIEF."

The Secretary of the Navy called our attention to the fact that the rear admirals, the General Staff, the war council, and some other great men had very carefully considered certain legislation enacted by Congress and had reached the conclusion that it could not be put into effect, and not being putable, so to speak, "it evidently was not in effect," and therefore it would be necessary for us to drop those laws out of the bill. Not being gifted with any special authority we did not feel that we could drop them out, and we declined to do so. Let me show you a little something else about that Navy Department. They called attention to 71 sections which "to the best of their information and belief" were not any longer the law.

Just exactly what would you do, gentlemen, if you were a judge and a fellow laid a brief before you in which he stated that to the best of his information and belief such and such was the law? That is the way they started. What it really meant was that there were certain sections of our law they had entirely overlooked and did not have. We looked the stuff over very carefully. And there was one thing we thought was open to debate, and I think we took their advice. We had the very liberal assistance of gentlemen who wanted to leave out the law which was about a matter of precedence.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. In a minute. There are certain sections they wanted to omit, because "to the best of their information and belief" they were not there. I think they are right about it, "to the best of their information and belief." [Laughter.] But I am referring to questions of precedence ordered omitted because the war council, the General Staff, and three or four rear admirals objected and ordered it not to be put in; high treason; ought to be court-martialed and shot. They called attention to the little headlines at the head of sections, which are no part of this law, specially provided, and we did not ask the gentlemen to do anything but take the law as it is now. Their taste did not approve our headlines, which are no part of the law, but satisfied the committee. So we did not change them. That introduced into this matter from the beginning a misunderstanding, very unfortunate, and we were compelled to overrule many suggestions, because we could not omit the law on their "information and belief." They became indignant and are so still. They demanded that we omit the law, change our section headlines, and omit 71 sections on their information and belief. We declined, and for that reason, and that alone, the Judge Advocate Generals and rear admirals of the second nine have kept up a continuous and baseless attack upon this bill, and you will see by their letters of May 25, 1920, and March 1, 1921, they demanded this omission because the General Staff and the rear admirals of the second nine had decided that your laws could not be put in effect, and they would therefore beat the bill, because we published the law as you made it, about who should go into dinner first, and hence these tears from the naval lawyers and rear admirals of the second nine.

Nevertheless, these very gentlemen, who know less of the law than any similar force in any department, have registered more alleged criticisms than probably all the rest put together. Hon. James R. Mann once remarked to me that there was more incompetence in the Department of the Navy than in any other in Washington. You wonder why such presumption should go with such ignorance, but I will show you. Perhaps the greatest difficulty that the revisers have had has been avoiding the malice of people who insisted that we should leave out the law or should put in something that had long since ceased to be the law. The most egregious and unpardonable offender has been the Department of the Navy.

When the Committee on Revision began this work and got it under way, they invited the assistance and cooperation of the legal staff of every department and bureau. Some of them were very prompt and helpful. The War Department made a thorough and careful examination of our work, comparing it with their aggregation of the laws of the Army. They found two mistakes which we gladly corrected. They also found 27 sections of the military law that they did not have in their compilation and promptly utilized them, giving us credit for them. But witness the Department of the Navy. In response to the committee's letter, the Secretary of the Navy at that time, on May 25, 1920, wrote the chairman of the committee that he had found many sections of the naval law of which he had never heard. He evidently had no intelligent compilation of the laws of his department with which to compare ours, but he promptly announced all the law he did not know was not there.

He said on May 25, 1920:

> The department has noted a large number of sections which to the best of its information and belief are no longer in force. * * *
> The following sections in said compilation have been noted as not in force March 4, 1919, and should be omitted therefrom: 2444, 2448, 2449, 2460, 2463, 2465, 2486, 2489, 2512, 2513, 2522, 2523, 2524, 2526, 2527, 2531, 2534, 2542, 2544, 2546, 2551, 2555, 2556, 2563, 2576, 2577, 2582, 2587, 2589, 2590, 2598, 2609, 2610, 2614, 2617, 2618, 2626, 2633, 2638, 2639, 2640, 2641, 2644, 2653, 2654, 2659, 2660, 2663, 2664, 2679, 2718, 2719, 2721, 2743, 2744, 2749, 2758, 2759, 2760, 2764, 2767, 2772, 2773, 2775, 2784, 2815, 2899, 2900, 2915, 3019, and 3023.

You will note at once the difference between the intelligent law department the Army then had and the gentlemen who had never tried a lawsuit who purported to be lawyers for the Navy. They actually expect people to give consideration to the criticisms of men who undertake to write a law brief beginning "to the best of its information and belief" this is not the law. That there should be anybody in the world so supremely ignorant as to ask a committee to accept such a statement on information and belief as of any value is almost beyond imagination. We knew, of course, then, that there was nobody down there who could be of any assistance to us, and we have never had any reason to change our minds since May 25, 1920.

NAVY SAYS CAN'T USE THE LAW CONGRESS MADE AND CODIFIER MUST OMIT IT.

But that was mild. Turn to the last page of the letter of May 25, 1920, which reads as follows:

> Section 2757 demotes rear admirals instead of promoting brigadier generals, as was intended by section 3 of the act of October 6, 1917. Further, so much of said act as provides that brigadier generals of the Army shall hereafter rank relatively with rear admirals of the lower half of the grade is defective and it has been impossible to put it into operation, for which reason the War and Navy Departments have requested its repeal. It is the opinion of the department, therefore, that all reference to relative rank between brigadier generals and rear admirals of the lower half of the grade should be omitted. The provision of section 1446, Revised Statutes, ranking commodores with brigadier generals is still in force and should be included in this section.

The gentleman gravely states that the law embodied in section 2757 "is defective and it has been impossible to put it into operation, for which reason the War and Navy Departments have requested its repeal. It is the opinion of the department, therefore, that all reference to relative rank between brigadier generals and rear admirals of the lower half of the grade should be omitted." We, of course, explained to them that we had no place in our plan that permitted us to omit any law. Of course you realize, gentlemen, that a man must be either extremely ignorant or wholly lacking in personal integrity to ask a committee to omit the law, but what shall we say of a man who, after being thoroughly informed of the situation, came back a year later on March 1, 1921, and repeated and again urged that we should omit that law, the letter reading as follows:

> The clause in the act of October 6, 1917, was the subject of the fullest consideration by the experts in both the War and Navy Departments, including the General Staff and the war council, with the result that the two departments agreed that this provision could not be put into effect, and concurred in recommendations to Congress that it be repealed. Inasmuch as the said provision could not be put into effect, its repeal would serve no purpose other than to eliminate it from the statutes, thereby preventing confusion which it might cause in the minds of those not familiar with the subject; whether repealed or not, the fact would be that it was not in effect and could not be put into effect, and therefore could not be regarded as a provision of law which was in effect in 1919.

As a matter of fact, gentlemen, you see at a glance why it is that the Navy Department has accumulated more alleged errors than anybody else, or than all the rest, probably. They were determined that we should omit the law, and we incurred their rancor and vicious opposition from that moment till now because we would not omit the law.

NAVY INSISTS CAN'T ADMINISTER NAVY IF LAW ON SEATS AT DINNER BE PUBLISHED.

If it were a matter of any importance it would be easy to understand, but as you glance at the letter of May 25, 1920, you will see that it is nothing at all but a little matter of social prestige, of what they call "precedence"—a quarrel as to whether a brigadier general or a rear admiral of the lower grade shall go in to dinner first—and, gentlemen, as astounding as you may consider it, they actually tell us that "it has been impossible to put it into operation"; and later they tell us that they could not administer the Navy unless we leave it out.

Kitchener, of Khartoum, once told me that with a commissioner from France and one from Germany, he representing Great Britain, he took part in investigating some points on the African coast line, each having a ship of his own. They went ashore in one boat every day, and the other two gentlemen quarreled constantly over a point of precedence as to which of them should go ashore first, until finally one day one of them fell into the water during the quarrel; and afterwards they went in three boats. An immense percentage of the obstacles that have been so viciously thrust in the way of this great code has been because the Navy did not want a rear admiral of the second nine to go in to dinner alongside a brigadier general. I have too much respect for the Government of the United States to state in full my views of such conduct; but you will see at once, gentlemen, that anything coming from the Navy must be discounted at least 99 per cent.

When House bill 9389 passed the House in December, 1920, they went into spasms because we did not omit the law, rushed down and told the Senate committee that they could not administer the Navy if this code went into effect, and began piling up an array of infinitesimal and contemptible criticisms. For example, in their first essay of May 25, 1920, they criticized section 2437 of House bill 9389, which is now section 2438 of House bill 12. We were worrying a bit over that and had about decided to make a slight change, and were glad to have their correction and made it. The first section, of course, in the Navy had their exact approval, which was just the way they wanted it; but when they found we had not omitted the rest they began by starting in again with another criticism of that section. Either they were ignorant when they made the first one or they were malicious when they attacked it again, and they were both. Let us proceed another step in reviewing their letter of May 25, 1920, showing the basis of the work which is still hurling bricks at this committee.

NAVY REQUIRES HEADLINES IN CODE BILL BE CHANGED.

We asked the Department of the Navy, as we did the others, to compare our compilation of their laws with their own and to tell us what, if any, we had omitted and what dead law we had inserted. They evidently did not know that that was all they could do, and they proceed to make 103 criticisms of the wording of the headlines to the various sections in the code. This bill especially provides that the headlines are no part of the law. They were simply matters of taste and were written by the chairman and the revisers and the committee. Naturally, we felt that our taste was sufficient, and we did not ask for their criticisms; but, instead of proceeding to look up the law, they stated that "to the best of their information and belief," and gave full rein to their literary tastes and interests, changing the heading of one section from "Dentists' qualifications" to "Qualifications for appointment to Dental Corps"; changing "Enlisted strength" to "Enlisted strength defined," and so on ad infinitum. The committee, with their strenuous and extensive duties, found themselves unable to give consideration to the literary tastes of gentlemen who knew no law. By the time they had read our disposition of their original criticisms, some of which were adopted, the alleged lawyers from the Navy were far beyond control, and since then, over and over again, they have multiplied and dignified every possibility to make a suggestion into some criticism. One of the greatest mistakes of this Government is having Judge Advocates General of the Navy who never studied law. No man who never studied law should be permitted to occupy such a position.

REAR ADMIRAL OF SECOND NINE'S DINNER SEAT AT STAKE.

The whole difficulty has been because some Judge Advocate General, like the present one, a rear admiral, is worried about where he will sit at dinner when a brigadier general comes in, and has kept the gentlemen doing the work on the jump to find more and more imaginary objections.

The Assistant Secretary of the Navy recently said in testifying before a Senate committee that they had three Judge Advocates General in St. Elizabeths Hospital. I am going to be perfectly frank and say that from the best of our observation of the Judge Advocates General during this great work, every one of them ought to be in St. Elizabeths, and we suggest that as an improvement in the Navy legal department.

A few months ago for the first time we finally got somebody in the Navy to give us the name of some lawyer that was working at it, and they did, two very pleasant gentlemen, neither of whom ever tried a lawsuit. The chairman, after a conference with them, found 41 things they suggested, most of which did not amount to anything, and conceded their being placed in the book as perfecting amendments and so wrote the chairman of the Senate committee and suggested that when he brought the bill in, he might make those amendments. At that time they had brought with them about 90 others and it was absolutely agreed between the gentlemen and myself in my office that practically all of them were not worthy of consideration and should be eliminated from the question. After returning to the Judge Advocate General and rear admiral of the lower half of the grade, whose place at dinner was at stake, they repeated the 41 that we had already agreed to put in and turned up with 96 more alleged criticisms, most of which they had already conceded to be of no value. Gentlemen of the House, this was done simply because we would not let them compel us to omit the laws of the land from the code of its laws, and not one of those objections was made in good faith, all just a malicious effort to make trouble.

WHY AREN'T ALLEGED ERRORS CORRECTED, IF ANY?

The committee has been told by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Revision that the Navy had some objections. Well, why does he not state them like I have? Why does he not say they are right? He has received from the House committee a full and clear analysis of even these 96, most of which were supremely silly. His committee has been drawing $6,800 a year for revision of the laws. Why should he not sit down and go to work, and if 96 of them are right, say so and amend the bill? That is what he is appointed for. The House committee gave 22 months to this work. Is there some society gentleman whose fingers must not be stained with a few minutes' honest toil? If there are some objections that are good, he ought to be just as able as the House committee to find them, and he is just as much at liberty to move their insertion. We will be glad to have the arguments in favor of why the Navy thinks the law should be omitted and why we should follow the "best of its information and belief." If there are no arguments in favor of that view, let us hear no more about it and let us take up something serious and finish this great bill, which has cost so much time and so much honest effort and which is so enthusiastically indorsed by members of the Cabinet, by solicitors of the departments, by United States judges, by great authors of the law, and by eminent attorneys.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I have complimented the gentleman from Kansas here on this floor and other places upon the efficient work performed in regard to the recodifying of the law. Will the gentleman from Kansas kindly state, I have inquiries from lawyers every day, when this work will be available for the law libraries?

Mr. LITTLE. I have only 10 minutes, and I am endeavoring to make the most of it. It went over, and as soon as it landed there I afterwards found that there were a great series of underground attacks being made on it which I could not locate then. I found much came from alleged law clerks in the departments who were mad because they could not dictate to the committee. I called the attention of one of the bigger ones to the fact that the lawyers on this committee had an active practice combined of something like 400 years, and I wished they would get somebody to examine them who had been in a court. These men then went to the Senate, apparently, and then we heard this talk about mistakes. Nobody in that committee has ever suggested to us any mistakes he had located, and I have sought eagerly for them. At this time, as far as I know, every department except the Navy has withdrawn every suggestion about a correction except those in which our committee concurred and asked such amendments be made. We have offered 66 amendments to the original bill. I have shown the status as it went there. Now, what has become of it? Gentlemen, I am very much better prepared than several weeks ago to answer that. For 20 months till yesterday no committee has held any meeting on House bill 12 or given it any examination whatever. They had a meeting yesterday. Now, is not that progress? You do not look pleased; I thought you would. They did; and some one is, he says, at work. Just how much work—the 4th of March this Congress expires—just how much work anybody is going to do in two months on 2,000,000 words I do not know. You can figure it out yourself. There are 10,700 and more sections; and I am going to ask you, gentlemen, would you think of beginning an examination now after holding it up for 20 months? Would any man in good faith make such a pretense of work on such a bill?

I am going to say this, just between us now, not for publication, that in my judgment every man who approached it with a particle of good faith had, within 12 months after it passed the House, fully presented every objection that he had to it, and criticisms which originated a year after it passed here were made merely to occasion confusion and delay.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. LITTLE. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Has the gentleman in mind the date when the Senate created the committee to take charge of this matter and pass upon the bill which was sent to the Senate by the gentleman's committee?

Mr. LITTLE. It is a committee like ours. It is about two years, with only three members. Senator ERNST is chairman.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. About two years ago?

Mr. LITTLE. Before it left this House.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will ask, When did the bill leave this House?

Mr. LITTLE. May 16, 1921.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And when did this Senate committee hold the first meeting?

Mr. LITTLE. Yesterday.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Could I ask for three minutes more?

Mr. ANDERSON. I have not any time.

Mr. LITTLE. I would like to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, some very ludicrous situations occur from time to time in this House. The Corpus Christi project, from both an economic and strategic standpoint, is a fixed policy of the Government, and it is so big and necessary to our progress, that it is not dependent upon the pork barrel for its life or destiny. When the distinguished subcommittee having the river and harbor appropriations in charge reached that item, General Taylor testified, and the whole inquiry was conducted by our able friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], and that portion of the hearing speaks such volumes on that question that I ask, if there is no objection, that I may put the whole questions and answers in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD the matter indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I will not take the time to read it. I will insert the entire hearing in the RECORD. It is as follows:

CHANNEL FROM ARANSAS PASS TO CORPUS CHRISTI, TEX.

Mr. STAFFORD. The next item is the channel from Aransas Pass to Corpus Christi, for which you estimate $750,000 to be expended on improvement work in the next year and $10,000 for maintenance. Congressman WURZBACH, of Texas, appeared before the subcommittee in advocacy of this project and directed attention to the bill he had introduced (H. R. 12821) providing for its construction and maintenance. Describe generally that important project.

General TAYLOR. The reason for the recommendation for the improvement of the channel to Corpus Christi is that southwestern Texas is developing at a very rapid rate, and the need of additional shipping facilities is very evident. Galveston is the nearest point to Corpus Christi.

Mr. STAFFORD. And how far away is Galveston?

General TAYLOR. About 180 miles. There has been a project for a channel into Aransas Pass, with a terminal just inside of the pass. Several times facilities for making shipments have been developed, but almost as soon as they have been developed and started in operation a hurricane has destroyed them. The object now is to provide a harbor where it will be sheltered from hurricane effects. There were several localities considered and investigated with a view to the establishment, as the law said, of "a safe and adequate harbor." After very careful consideration Corpus Christi was selected as the proper point.

Mr. STAFFORD. What other places were considered?

General TAYLOR. Rockport, the city of Aransas Pass, on the mainland, and Harbor Island, near the entrance. Those three places and Corpus Christi were all considered, and Corpus Christi was selected for various reasons, one being that there are four railroads entering Corpus Christi; another, it is the largest place and is the business center of that country. Everything pointed to Corpus Christi as being the better place for a large development, and I see no reason why a port there comparable to Galveston should not develop in the future. It will affect a very large section of country in southwest Texas and all of the country tributary to that section.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is an entirely new project?

General TAYLOR. Yes, sir. There has been a 12-foot channel, but that is not sufficient for deep-draft ships.

Mr. STAFFORD. That also shoaled by reason of prior hurricanes?

General TAYLOR. Yes, sir. They tried to run a small boat from Corpus Christi to Galveston, but any boat that could operate in a 12-foot channel was unsafe in the Gulf.

Mr. STAFFORD. What character of traffic is likely to develop with the improvement of this harbor?

General TAYLOR. It will be a large cotton shipping point, for instance, and general merchandise will come in.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the total cost of this project?

General TAYLOR. The total cost is estimated at $5,051,900, of which the United States is to contribute $1,394,800. The local interests are to contribute the balance.

Mr. STAFFORD. None of this work will be done until the local interests manifest their willingness to actually raise the necessary money to go ahead?

General TAYLOR. They have manifested that interest already; they have had a State law passed providing that a certain amount of taxes is allowed to be used for this work; the city of Corpus Christi has undertaken to raise a large amount of money and, I believe, they will be ready to go ahead with their part of the work as soon as we are.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does this consist of building jetties?

General TAYLOR. No; our work is altogether dredging; dredging the channel across Corpus Christi Bay.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the National Government undertake any other work for the municipality?

General TAYLOR. No; they will do all of their own work. Their work is dredging the harbor basin, making some jetties for protection of the entrance into the harbor, building wharves and slips, and all accessory work.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will this be contract work or Government work?

General TAYLOR. Contract work.

Mr. STAFFORD. Suppose that one-half of this amount should be made available, what work would be done?

General TAYLOR. If one-half of the amount were made available, then one-half of the work would be done, and I am not certain whether it would be advantageous to do it or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not certain that the money which is to be raised by the municipality will absolutely be available during the coming year?

General TAYLOR. They think it will be available by the 1st of March; they are planning to meet all the requirements imposed upon them by the 1st of March.

You will observe that General Taylor showed that he had provided $750,000 for the project and $10,000 for its maintenance, and the whole matter was practically approved and passed upon by our friend from Wisconsin. It passed his vigilant eye. Thereafter, after the whole hearings on this subject were over, our distinguished colleague from Texas [Mr. WURZBACH] went to the chairman of the committee and said he wanted to be heard on that item; that he had a bill to cover it, a private bill, and he wanted to be heard on it. The chairman [Mr. ANTHONY] told him that the whole matter had been passed, and it was too late. But out of courtesy to him our distinguished colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], as he always does to help a fellow out, before the hearings were printed, preluded that feature—the first question asked in the hearing—with this statement:

Mr. STAFFORD. The next item is the channel from Aransas Pass to Corpus Christi, for which you estimate $750,000 to be expended on improvement work in the next year and $10,000 for maintenance. Congressman WURZBACH, of Texas, appeared before the subcommittee in advocacy of this project and directed attention to the bill he had introduced (H. R. 12821) providing for its construction and maintenance. Describe generally that important project.

That reference to Mr. WURZBACH was put in after the hearings were had, but before they were printed. I do not blame the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. He knows how beneficial that is to a Congressman——

Mr. STAFFORD. Especially to a Republican Congressman from Texas——

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; especially when he is the only Republican from Texas, and the administration wanted to help him out. But when Mr. DEMPSEY'S amendment was offered yesterday—keep this in mind, gentlemen, that General Taylor and the committee had already taken care of Corpus Christi in its bill—but when the amendment was offered to put a lot of "pork-barrel" items in it, here is what happened. Mr. MADDEN was speaking, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WURZBACH] tried to get in a question. I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, page 2023:

Mr. WURZBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not yield.

Then, on page 2024:

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINDRED. I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. Am I recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. WURZBACH] did not get in there. Now, after the Dempsey amendment was offered, here are some more attempts to get in. On page 2025:

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first word.

Usually it is the last word, but he wanted to get in first. [Laughter.] I read further:

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wyoming in opposition to the amendment.

The gentleman from Wyoming was recognized. Then while the gentleman from Wyoming was speaking the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WURZBACH] asked, "Will the gentleman yield?" And the gentleman from Wyoming replied, "No; I can not. I have only five minutes."

Then the Dempsey amendment was passed by a vote of 152 ayes to 44 noes. Was the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WURZBACH] responsible for that? No. If he had not been here, it would have passed just the same. But long after it passed, after nine pages of debate on the Muscle Shoals proposition, here is where our friend comes in. He got up over here, after the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] had moved to strike out the last word on the American Legion proposition, and said:

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I have been trying all day to get a few words in on the river and harbor appropriation. I have a vital interest in the matter, not a selfish, personal interest, but one of those interests that affect the entire State of Texas.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment.

Mr. ARENTZ. The gentleman will not yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a minute. I always yield eventually; but I do not want my remarks to be interspersed with irrelevant questions. From Mr. WURZBACH'S speech published last night in the RECORD I read further:

I have heard it said that "an honest confession is good for the soul," and therefore I may frankly confess that a somewhat selfish interest prompts me to favor the increase of appropriations for rivers and harbors—

As if that was a matter he was about to bring to pass. Then Mr. WURZBACH says:

My good and genial friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], a member of the subcommittee that framed this bill, and who measures his words with great caution, was so impressed with the project which I had theretofore briefly presented to the subcommittee that he was impelled when referring to it in his interrogation of General Taylor to state most impressively, "General, describe generally that important project."

[Laughter.]

Now, listen; let me repeat what Mr. WURZBACH says:

The project which I had theretofore briefly presented to the subcommittee that he was impelled, in referring to it in his interrogation of General Taylor, to state most impressively, "General, describe generally this important project."

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not yet. I have not got to the yielding point yet. [Laughter.] Mr. WURZBACH also said:

I repeat a prediction I made several months ago, that San Antonio and Corpus Christi will become the twin-city metropolis of the great Southwest. The benefit of a deep-water port at Corpus Christi to the farming and live-stock interests of all that section will be enormous. It will cause thousands of acres of our virgin soil now lying in pastures and used for grazing purposes only to be cleared and plowed and put in a state of cultivation, and all that section made to blossom as a rose and make it the garden spot of the world. Where the forks-in-the-road country stores now stand will spring villages, villages will grow into towns, towns into cities, and cities will double and treble their population, and there will be happiness and prosperity for all.

You understand he did not say all this here on the floor in his five minutes; but that is what he extended in the RECORD, several pages of it. [Laughter.] But here when he rose to that pro forma amendment and spoke that five minutes, hoping to extend this speech in the RECORD, he said:

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks—

Mr. STAFFORD said, "I object." He did not have any right to put this speech in the RECORD, but he went back to his office and extended his five-minute remarks into this magnificent speech and put it in, over objection and against the rules of the House. Here is the keynote of the transaction——

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman ought not to bother me. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ARENTZ] ought to know the rules, and he sought to be placed where he should know the rules of the Senate as well.

Mr. ARENTZ. I do not want to have a misstatement made.

Mr. BLANTON. There is no misstatement.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield, and I ask the Chair not to allow the gentleman from Nevada to interrupt me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Here is the keynote of the whole proposition. Mr. WURZBACH said:

I repeat a prediction I made several months ago, that San Antonio and Corpus Christi will become the twin city metropolis of the great Southwest—

And so on. That is the keynote of the whole proposition. That is the ludicrousness of the situation, I will state to the gentleman.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not now. I will yield to the gentleman later.

Mr. ARENTZ. I just want to state——

Mr. BLANTON. I am not going to let you do it till I get ready. Here is the ludicrousness of it. Mr. WURZBACH and his friends went from one side to the other of the fourteenth district of Texas and said, "There is just one way to get Corpus Christi taken care of. The Republicans are in power and I am the only Republican from Texas. They will listen to me. They will do more for me than they will for a Democrat. Elect me and I will take care of Corpus Christi."

The Texas people are just like anybody else. They wanted to take care of Corpus Christi. In the fourteenth district they want pork just like the people do in your district, and believing him they elected WURZBACH. They elected him and he has got to make it appear that he got the goods. Did he get the goods? No. Let me show you. It was Texas Democrats that put that increase in the bill, not WURZBACH. Let me show you the names of the Texas Democrats who voted for it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Why, WURZBACH'S administration was against it. Did not Mr. MADDEN, the great he-Republican of you all, speak against it? Did he not fight it? Did he not try to whip you boys into line? Did not the great floor leader, Mr. MONDELL, oppose it and try to defeat it? Did not your distinguished chairman from Minnesota, Mr. ANDERSON, one of the leading leaders that you have on this side of the House—did he not oppose it? Did not your great big floor manipulator from Ohio, my good friend JIM BEGG, oppose it? Did not the distinguished Senator from Ohio, Mr. BURTON, oppose it? Why, your leaders tried to kill it; but Texas Democrats like Box; and BRIGGS, and BUCHANAN, and CONNALLY, and GARNER, and GARRETT, and LANHAM, and MANSFIELD, and SANDERS stood up with the rest of the meat getters and helped put that in there. [Laughter.] Why, it was not WURZBACH who managed it; and when WURZBACH sends this speech out to those 300,000 people in that fourteenth district he ought to let them know that the whole thing was cut and dried by a Democratic meat bloc and not by the Republicans. It was the Democrats from all over this House who wanted it; who took in a few of you Republicans with them and put it over your administration. [Laughter.] Now I will yield to my friend from Nevada.

Mr. ARENTZ. I just want to say to my friend from Texas that compared to him WURZBACH is a modest and shrinking violet.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; he is almost as shrinking as the distinguished gentleman from Nevada who will shrink out of the House on March 4. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman from Tennessee give me five minutes more?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. I was not one of the Texas men who voted for that $19,000,000 increase, because I believed that as a matter of justice and not as a pork-barrel matter Corpus Christi would be taken care of and that every other project that ought to be taken care of would be taken care of by the bill itself without that $19,000,000 increase. I am one of the few men in this House who stands consistently for a budget system. It is the only way on earth we will ever cut down expenses. I vote against my own interest sometimes in upholding the President's Budget. Why, the President's Budget sets this item at $27,000,000. To show that the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin and the distinguished gentleman from Kansas were liberal on this matter they increased it $10,000,000, because in their bill they gave $37,000,000, and I was for upholding the Budget, and Mr. DEMPSEY and his meat getters then increased it to $56,589,910.

What is the Budget? It is just this, that the President, who is responsible to the people for the manner in which they are taxed, shall have a survey made of the available income of this country, and then, taking all the manifold interests of the Nation into consideration, he maps out the maximum expenditures that can be made along certain lines that will come within that income. Unless there is a Budget of that kind strictly adhered to there is but one thing staring this great Republic in the face, and that is bankruptcy. We have got to hold to a budget system and keep within budget maximums, and as long as I am a Member of this House I am going to continue to do it. I am going to fight for upholding the President's Budget, whether it is a Democratic or Republican one. I am going to stand behind the President in keeping down the expenses of this Nation and removing the great burden from the tax-paying people of this country. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, one of the sad results of the World War is an all pervading cynicism. Men seem to have lost faith in their better selves. Appeals to idealism, appeals to a spiritual life, appeals to ethical and moral concepts are treated as the prattle of children.

An event of portentous importance is taking place to-day in Europe, an event fraught with most serious danger. Five times since the armistice has France threatened to invade German territory, and twice she has invaded it. France is now in possession of the coal-producing region of Germany. The British Parliament is not in session, but the radical and labor representatives of the British Parliament have given expression to a protest against the invasion. In Sweden an appeal has been made that the League of Nations take up the question, but the League of Nations is an abortion. It has neither moral nor any other force. It has no prestige. No one respects it. Its euphonious name can not conceal the rascalities committed by the Versailles treaty.

The American Congress should not be silent. The voice of America should be heard in this crisis. There is no other voice that can speak with authority. Europe has become Balkanized. It has been split up into numerous little nationalities and States, each jealous of the rest, and all coveting their neighbors' goods. The two greatest powers on the Continent of Europe, outside of Russia, are France and Germany. Unfortunately for France, the population of Germany keeps on growing, and, in spite of the increase of her territory as a result of the Versailles treaty, the population of France has diminished. The world can not accommodate France by killing off 25,000,000 or 30,000,000 of Germans so that the French and German populations may be numerically equal. The policy of France is actuated by fear and by the hatred which is born of fear.

Germany was mutilated by the terms of the Versailles treaty. Through the loss of all her colonies she lost many sources of raw material so essential to her manufactures. She was stripped of a substantial part of her European population. She was deprived of her merchant fleet. Her organization for commerce with the outside world was shattered. She was deprived of a large portion of her iron and coal producing sections. The principal means of communication were put under the control of the Reparation Commission. An army, the maintenance of which costs Germany more than her entire army and navy cost her annually before the war, was placed upon her soil.

The powers of the Reparation Commission practically destroyed Germany as a sovereign power.

Not content with having divested Germany of a substantial portion of her population, of her territory in Europe, of all her colonies, and of many of her resources, an indemnity has been imposed which can not be paid without dooming to serfdom more than one generation of the German people.

It is under the pretext of enforcing the collection of this uncollectible indemnity that the invasion of the Ruhr region is undertaken.

The doctrine which permitted the imprisonment or the physical punishment of a debtor for the nonpayment of debt has long ago been repudiated. It was the South American statesman, Drago, who enunciated the doctrine which was vigorously supported by Roosevelt that at least so far as the American continent is concerned no attempt shall be made to collect debts from a nation by force.

The invasion of the Ruhr can have only one meaning and only one real object: It is to permanently strangle German industry, to prevent her industrial and commercial revival, and to enable the steel industrialists of France to add to their acquisitions of the iron region of Lorraine the coal regions of Germany.

The myth of the "one guilty nation" has by this time been disposed of. No serious student of history has ever believed it. It was a convenient war propaganda to divide the world into two groups—one endowed with all the noble qualities and contending for the highest ideals of democracy, the other representing an incarnation of all that is evil. Some people would want us even now to forget that when the European war began the Allies had on their side the autocrat of all the Russias, the King of Serbia, and the Mikado of Japan as a good counterpart of the Kaiser of Germany, the Emperor of Austria, and the Sultan of Turkey. While there is division of opinion as to whether the Czar of Russia or the Kaiser of Germany was responsible for the initial move which brought about the World War, I have not any doubt that it was German military strategy which determined when and where the first blow should be struck.

Analyzed in the light of the facts which we now possess, Germany was ready to strike while everyone around her was getting ready. No one nation can be charged with the sole responsibility for the European war. It was preceded by a severe imperialistic contest for colonies, for world markets, for the absorption of the weaker nations, for the acquisition of new sources of raw material and of new markets, by commercial rivalry, by the endeavor of Germany to establish a competitive route by land to penetrate Asia Minor, by dynastic intrigues, the fanning of national and racial hatreds, and by the artificial stimulation of the war spirit.

As I said four years ago in one of my speeches on this floor:

Europe was first an armed camp, then it became a slaughterhouse, and it is a madhouse now.

It is inevitable that the invasion of German territory should lead to a revival of the war spirit. France, which has been complaining of kaiserism—and there is no doubt that the presence of a militaristic caste in Germany was a constant source of danger to her—is playing into the hands of the junkers and of the old military clique. Is there any surer way of destroying the confidence of the German people in their present Government than the humiliating of the Government by what amounts to a forcible annexation of German territory? How long can a self-conscious and self-respecting people tolerate foreign military domination?

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman said that this country ought to do something. What would the gentleman have this country do?

Mr. LONDON. I would have the American Congress express in kind but solemn words a desire that the invaded territory be evacuated. I would ask that the President be instructed to mediate. I would urge the convocation of an international economic conference. I believe that, in the name of the joint sacrifices made by the United States in the war, France owes a respectful hearing to the American Congress. While France relied for sustenance in her distress on czarism, it was not czarism that saved her; it was the American democracy that finally saved her. [Applause.]

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. What does the gentleman think Germany owes civilization for the ravages she committed from 1914 to 1918?

Mr. LONDON. Oh, please, can the gentleman for a moment abandon this war talk about ravages? War is destruction. There is no mercy; there is no humanity during war. There is no greater negation to everything human than war.

I have no doubt that there were many acts of brutality, but every war is brutal, and we must abandon this war psychology, for it is about time to abandon it.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Suppose the United States carried out the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, and France did not see fit to heed her admonitions. In that case what would the gentleman do?

Mr. LONDON. The only thing that we could do would be to morally isolate France. The only punishment that you can inflict is to isolate a nation and refuse to do business with it. If it is right for France to invade German territory in order to collect money, it would be right for America to invade French territory to collect the $3,000,000,000 that she owes America, and nobody would ever think of suggesting that.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Is not France within her treaty rights to-day in endeavoring to collect money from Germany?

Mr. LONDON. I want to say that that treaty has no moral sanction in the mind of any thinking man. The Versailles treaty is a treaty of violence. It was dictated by physical force, and one of the most infamous things committed in that treaty was to compel a nation to admit that it was the only guilty nation.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. I again ask the gentleman whether or not France is within her treaty rights.

Mr. LONDON. At the present time?

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Not according to the opinion of her British or Italian allies.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Within the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. LONDON. In my opinion she is not. In my opinion it is wrong to take the territory of another nation, which means taking the livelihood of the other nation. It means the enslavement of another nation. Slavery can not be defended on the basis of any treaty or of any piece of paper which was dictated under physical coercion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, on the 12th of December last, when the committee had before it for consideration the bill H. R. 13232, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] propounded certain inquiries to me, then in charge of the bill, respecting the accountants that had been employed in the Department of Justice. I was unable at that time to reply to the inquiry or give any definite answer, either affirming or denying the statement which he then said that he had received from high authority. As soon as I could, I got in touch with the Department of Justice and requested a statement from the department and from Mr. Cameron, who is the chief accountant, as to the questions propounded by the gentleman from Tennessee. I have in my hands a letter written by Mr. Cameron, of date December 14, which it had been my intention to present to the House at the time the conference report upon the bill was being considered, but at that time I was engaged in committee work and was not present and I failed to do so. I ask now that the Clerk be permitted to read the letter in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OLD LAND OFFICE BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., December 14, 1922.

Hon. ROBERT E. EVANS,
Chairman Subcommittee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under date of December 12, 1922, pages 370 and 371, reports some discussion relating to the appropriation for the investigation and prosecution of war frauds. During this discussion certain questions were asked, and with a view to furnishing the information for reply to those inquiries the following data is sent you:

The present staff under the director of accounting investigation consists of 45 permanent employees, to wit:

One director, $18,000.

Seven employees (5 accountants and 2 engineers), ranging from $7,500 to $4,000.

Thirty-five employees (33 accountants and 2 engineers), ranging from $3,900 to $1,680.

Two typists, at $1,200 and $900, respectively.

The immediate needs of the work require 8 additional accountants. If the various matters now undergoing preliminary survey require extensive accounting, approximately 50 additional engineers and accountants will be required.

There are at present no special accountants; that is, firms of public accountants in the employ of the war transactions section.

With reference to the employment of special accountants for the examination of the records of the Lincoln Motor Co., please be advised that this firm was utilized for this service in conjunction with the permanent force of this office. The accountants had the work well under way on August 23 and completed the accounting by October 28. These special accountants are only paid for the actual number of days on which they perform service. On no occasion have accountants been employed at the rate of $50 per diem, nor have any junior accountants or assistants been paid at the rate of $25 per diem.

In the case of the Lincoln Motor Co., this firm of public accountants, one of the most reputable in the United States and having amongst its clients some of the most prominent individuals and largest corporations in the Middle West, accepted a contract from the Department of Justice to furnish accounting services at the rate of $30 per diem for principals and $15 per diem for junior accountants or assistants. At the present time a member of this firm is at the call of counsel in this case; that is, he is available on demand without charge to the Government except on such days as he actually performs services.

For your information, the employment of special accountants at per diem rates includes the furnishing to the department without additional charge of such services as stenography, typewriting, report writing, stationery, and the usual office facilities, such as space, typewriting machines, desks, etc.; that is, the usual overhead.

The use of firms of public accountants in connection with the permanent force of the department was decided upon after mature reflection. It was deemed wise and prudent, more economical in the long run, and for the Government's best interest in every way to secure the services of firms of public accountants who were well known and who have been in business for some time and who will be available whenever the Government proceeds to try the cases at issue, whether it be this year or five years from now. It is no more than right that the Government have at its call the best accounting minds in the profession for use in cases where the opposite side have used public accountants.

With few exceptions practically the entire accounting profession, including the most prominent firms, recognizing that they had a patriotic duty to perform, have offered support to the director of accounting investigation by agreeing to accept per diem rates from the Department of Justice considerably less than the usual rates of $50 minimum, which they are paid in the commercial world.

As some question arose as to my training and experience, the following information concerning myself is submitted:

I have been a public accountant since 1901; a certified public accountant since 1915; from 1905 to 1909 I was executive manager of the Audit Co. of New York. That is the company owned by T. DeWitt Cuyler, George Harvey, William A. Nash, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Joseph S. Auerbach, James B. Forgan, John J. Mitchell, and others. Since 1909 I have been in business in New York on my own account. In the more prominent cases mentioned below I was retained more particularly because of my wide experience in the examinations growing out of charges of fraud in public affairs.

I was retained by the executive department of the State of Pennsylvania to prosecute an examination into the expenditures in the years 1901 to 1907 for the acquisition of grounds, erection, construction, and furnishing of public buildings, more prominently referred to as the Harrisburg capitol conspiracy cases.

I was then retained by the attorney general of the State of Pennsylvania in criminal and civil suits against public officers of the State.

I was later retained by a group of taxpapers in the investigation of charges of fraud in the printing of the legislative record of the State of Pennsylvania.

I was a member of the advisory council of accountants in the investigation into the distribution of coal cars by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. at the time when charges of preference were made by coal operators.

Then I was retained by the executive department of the State of NewYork in the investigation of the department of the sinking fund, investigation of the educational department of the State, and investigation of the State road contracts. Later I was retained to prosecute an investigation of charges of fraud, known as the New York dock frauds investigation.

Then I was retained in the taxpayers' suit in the State of New Jersey in an investigation of charges of fraud in the erection, construction, and furnishing of public buildings in Jersey City, Hudson County.

I was then retained by the State of New Jersey to prosecute charges of fraud in the erection of these public buildings.

I was appointed lay prosecutor in the State of New Jersey by the Hon. Francis J. Swayze, presiding judge of the supreme court, to prosecute alleged frauds in the fiscal affairs of Hudson County (Jersey City).

I was then retained by the executive department to report on the conduct of public affairs in all counties in the State of New Jersey.

I was later retained by the prosecutor of pleas in criminal charges against public officers in Hudson County.

The city of Louisville, Ky., retained me in cases growing out of fraud in public contracts and the erection and construction of filtration plants.

The city of Nashville, Tenn., retained me to prosecute an investigation of affairs growing out of charges of fraud in contracts for road construction and the taxpayers' suit to throw the city in the hands of a receiver, followed by a survey and investigation of all departments of the municipality.

The city of Wheeling, W. Va., retained me to lay out the fiscal affairs under the new charter growing out of change of form of municipal government.

In many of the above cases Mr. H. M. Brinckerhoff, engineer, partner of Col. William Barclay Parsons, of New York, was associated with me as the engineering representative.

I trust the information submitted herein will be of service to you.

Respectfully submitted.

JAMES CAMERON,
Director of Accounting Investigation, War Transactions Section.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think that in the colloquy I had with the gentleman I said anything that would in any way reflect upon the capability or competency of Mr. Cameron. At that time I did not know that I knew Mr. Cameron. Since then I have learned that he is the same gentleman who did extensive work on the records of my home city—Nashville, Tenn. He did a splendid service there. Certainly I had no reason to question his competency and did not. I think he is an exceedingly competent accountant. My inquiry was based upon information which had been brought to me to the effect that accountants had been employed to investigate the Lincoln Motor Co. case at $50 and $25 a day, whereas those same men were employed by the firm which furnished them for this investigation at $200 per month. The letter which the gentleman has had read states that that is a mistake; that they were employed at $15 and $20 a day, but there is no statement in the letter contradicting the information brought to me that while the Government was paying for their services at that rate they were receiving only $200 per month from their employer.

Mr. EVANS. It is very probable that the employees of accountants used by Mr. Cameron in this investigation were employed at very much less or at considerably less than the price which the Government was required to pay, but the contracts which are made by Mr. Cameron with various firms of accountants are that at any given time, on his demand, he shall have placed at his disposal for the benefit of the Government certain accountants of a certain class, trained in a particular way, who are vouched for by these firms.

And it is certainly unnecessary to say that you could not expect any firm to create an organization, which has commended itself by its work to the public generally, for a price which they themselves are actually paying to them in wages and then add in addition thereto the overhead which is enumerated in Mr. Cameron's letter. Further, in respect to this matter of inquiry as to Mr. Cameron's employment briefly, the facts attending are as follows: That the Department of Justice inquired from all creditable sources as to where they could get such a person as would properly take charge of the immense problem they had in the investigation of these fraud cases, and after numerous inquiries in general throughout the country they decided that Mr. Cameron was the best, if they could get him, and called him to Washington and asked for his assistance, and he volunteered to give to the Government free of charge his advice in consultation in every way possible without permanent employment. What the Government desired was some person who would take charge of the organization and the investigation and be responsible.

They then offered him a salary of $10,000, and he would not consider it at all. They offered him $12,000, and he would not consider that. He was getting an income much more from his private business than he is now getting in salary, and it was only after repeated attempts on their part to secure his services, and when they had secured other persons outside of the Government employment to go to him and impress upon him the importance of the investigation to be made and the duty that he owed as a citizen that they could secure his employment. In this matter he has gone to the leading firms of accountants, men of influence and standing, where investigations have been or may have to be made, and has an arrangement with them by which he can secure their advice without cost, by which he can secure from those various firms at the rates to which I have called attention and to which he refers. There was another matter which came up during the consideration of that bill in reference to the rate paid attorneys, and I have secured a statement which sets forth this information, and also I ask that it may be included in my remarks as an extension if there is no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing the matter referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The time of the gentleman has expired.

The memorandum referred to is as follows:

Comparative statement showing special assistants to the Attorney General and to United States attorneys, in special cases, under all appropriations, of the Department of Justice in service at the close of business on March 4, 1921, and December 12, 1922, respectively.

	On Mar. 4, 1921.		On Dec. 12, 1922.
	Number.	Range of compensation.	Number.	Range of compensation.
Engaged in antitrust work and paid from antitrust appropriation:
Special assistants to the Attorney General.	8	From a maximum rate of $24,000 per annum to a minimum of $2,000 per annum.	18	From a maximum rate of $12,000 per annum to a minimum of $1,800 per annum.
Special assistants to United States attorneys.	4	.....do.....	7	Do.
Engaged in war-fraud matters and paid from war-fraud appropriation—Special assistants to the Attorney General.	.....	.....do.....	35	Do.
Engaged in general work other than above and paid from appropriation for pay of special assistant attorneys:
Special assistants to the Attorney General.	129	.....do.....	111	Do.
Special assistants to United States attorneys.	114	.....do.....	103	Do.
Total.....	255	.....	274

It will be noted from the foregoing statement that omitting the attorneys employed in the war-fraud work which constitutes a new element, there is actually a decrease of 16 in the number employed on December 12, 1922, as compared with the number employed on March 4, 1921, and that including the new branch of work there is an increase of only 19, whereas, there has been an increase of approximately 30 per cent in the amount of business transacted, apart from the business arising in connection with war-fraud matters.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee use some time?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, continuing my remarks with regard to the code, I depicted somewhat its history and condition up to date. We kept working on it in the House for 22 months. When it went over to the Senate it was just 22 months from that time until the close of this present session. In other words, the other people had the same time that we had. But they have had this great advantage that an immense amount of work had been done which would be wholly unnecessary to do again, and they could put in their time on such parts as they desired. For that reason there never was any reason why it could not be done. Now, the question arises, why has it not been done, and why have they never had a meeting until yesterday? I think I stated before that after that bill left us everybody in the world who had a real objection to make in good faith had made it. I repeat that in my judgment any objections made after a year, from May 16, 1921, were made from some motive other than a desire to make a good bill or to have one. I am going further to suggest that every suggestion since a year after it was passed here was made for some ulterior motive, unless they have done what the Senate did in 1874, and, as I have said, they have never made any objection I know of personally except one. Every department, I think, except one has withdrawn its criticisms. There are none that have not been gone over thoroughly and accepted if correct. In 1874 Roscoe Conkling was chairman of the revision of the laws committee of the Senate, and Matt Carpenter and some of the ablest lawyers who ever lived were members of that committee, and after spending a month or so looking at it Mr. Conkling took the floor and in 40 minutes procured a unanimous approval. They were asked if they did not think there might be some mistakes in it. Conkling and Carpenter replied in effect that they supposed there might be, but there could not be any mistakes in it half as important as not to have the bill, and so the bill was passed in 40 minutes. I take it these distinguished gentlemen have reached the conclusion they will do the same thing, and possibly for that reason have not devoted any time until yesterday, and have concluded they would adopt that policy.

I feel the more assured of this because of the fact that the chairman of the other committee had so often informed me and others that he had decided to report the bill favorably. He had told me that one Member was very much opposed to the bill and would fight it.

ERNST SAID WOULD REPORT CODE FAVORABLY.

When Congress was last in session, prior to the recent election, I met him, and he voluntarily informed me that he had smoothed out all the difficulties and he was now prepared to report the code bill favorably, and he would do so, and that it would pass, so informing others, too. In the Kansas City Kansan of September 28 last, United States Senator ARTHUR CAPPER said:

The code bill, of which LITTLE is the author, is virtually sure of passage at the next session. Senator ERNST, chairman of the Senate Revision Committee, told me just before I left Washington that he would make a favorable report on the measure, which he highly commended.

As far as I know, no department has now any criticisms to offer with regard to the bill, except the Navy Department, which will always object until we omit some of the law that they and the General Staff decided could not be enforced. If there are any remaining criticisms any lawyer with any qualifications whatever can, in a few days, prepare and insert in the bill the amendments necessary. All it needs is a little ordinary sense, some reasonable knowledge of the law, and some industry, of which there was plenty in the House for 22 months to the general knowledge of most of the House Members. Of course, it is quite possible that errors may still be discovered occasionally. More than 300 were discovered in the old Revised Statutes of 1874, after they had been in print for several years, including some that the bill (H. R. 12) people have discovered and corrected. The great point is to get an assembly of the laws so that people can use it. What if there are a few mistakes in 2,000,000 words? Conscientious men will endeavor to find them and finish the work. I think it best that I shall now take advantage of my leave to extend and present here a fairly full discussion of the attitude of the Navy Department toward this bill, and the reasons, and make some reference to the bill (H. R. 9389) which was the code bill that passed the Sixty-sixth Congress and received four months' careful review before it was introduced in the Sixty-seventh Congress as the bill H. R. 12.

On February 27, 1920, the committee chairman wrote the Secretary of the Navy that the committee had now the galley proofs of all the Navy part of the codification and would be glad to have his department look it over, the Secretary replying that they would be glad to do so, and on March 9, 1920, the Secretary was sent a preliminary copy of the bill, including the part with regard to the Navy. On May 12 the Secretary replied that it was received and had been referred to the office of the Judge Advocate General, adding:

I am advised, however, that the proper consideration of this matter is a very tedious and onerous task, requiring considerable time for its consummation.

On May 14 the chairman wrote that the War Department had received similar material about that department and had already compared it with their own collections of military and departmental law and returned it. (I may say right here that the War Department discovered two mistakes at that time.) The chairman said:

The task is greatly simplified as they simply take their collection and mine and ascertain what sections they have that I have not in the bill, and vice versa.

On May 25, 1920, the Secretary of the Navy returned his views and the views of his Judge Advocate General's Department, and said that—

The department has noted a large number of sections which, to the best of its information and belief, are no longer in force.

And added:

That lack of time and personnel qualified precludes the possibility of undertaking a further review at this time.

He further said:

The following sections have been noted as not in force on March 4, 1919, and should be omitted.

Then he just offhand points to 71 sections that he tells the committee have no place in the code. As the committee had been working, then, for nearly a year on it, it seemed better that he give in detail his reasons for omitting 71 sections, but he did not.

Then he proceeds to speak in some detail of 147 sections. He devotes a good deal of his time to suggesting changes in the titles of the sections. We had asked the Secretary to suggest any omissions or mistakes in the law. The section headings are no part of the law and nobody asked his views about those titles and nobody wanted his views. The committee felt quite competent to write its own headlines, and he could have been of some service if he had devoted his time to the matter that was submitted to him for his suggestions.

As to the rest of the views he presented, they are so juvenile in nature as to absolutely demonstrate the correctness of his statement in that letter that—

A lack of time and personnel qualified for the task, which could be detailed for such work, precludes the possibility of undertaking a further review at this time.

JOCK LOST ASHORE.

Let me add that after two years and seven months I am now prepared to state that his original statement to that effect was thoroughly well founded, and I shall now indorse it by saying a lack of lawyers who ever tried a lawsuit in his department has been so marked that he has never been of any serious assistance. The newspapers announced yesterday that Col. Theodore Roosevelt, jr., Assistant Secretary of the Navy, in the hearings before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, said that three of his judge advocates were now at St. Elizabeths. I will frankly say that the whole outfit of judge advocates in the Navy ought to be in St. Elizabeths, and I will cheerfully support a bill to appropriate money to take care of them till they can be returned to a normal mental condition.

The same paper stated that the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, Rear Admiral of the Second Nine Latimer, testified that a marine had died at Parris Island before finally accepted in the Marine Corps, and that the department could find no law or method of getting rid of the corpse. The Judge Advocate General of the Navy should be a lawyer, which he is not, and much of the difficulty that has been made by that department has been made by judge advocates who were neither lawyers in peace nor sailors in war and never served under fire. The law should provide that a judge advocate general should be a lawyer of long experience and ability, and these difficulties the committee has run into have made this entirely obvious.

For example, suggesting changes in little headings, which are of no legal importance and no part of their duty, they say that the title "Extension of term of enlisted men" should read "Extension of term of enlistment" and that the title "Limitation of total number of clerks' should read "Limitation of total number of pay clerks," and that the title "Inconsistent laws relating to Dental Corps repealed" should read "Prior inconsistent laws relating to Dental Corps repealed." The prodigious talents of the lawyers of the department conceived evidently the idea that the words "prior laws" should be inserted for fear that without that some subsequent legislation would be wrecked, ruined, repealed, and destroyed. While we have long since learned that the Navy Department knows no law, we did suppose that they could furnish us some common sense. And so they continue almost indefinitely with silly suggestions which require just as much time to be considered by the hard-working force of the committee as if they were drawn with ordinary intelligence.

The Judge Advocate General's Department, over the signature of the Secretary of the Navy, rose to the highest and loftiest flight in their final suggestions of May 25, 1920, when they said:

Section 2757 demotes rear admirals instead of promoting brigadier generals, as was intended by section 3 of the act of October 6, 1917; further, so much of said act as provides that brigadier generals of the Army shall hereafter rank relatively with rear admirals of the lower half of the grade is defective and it has been impossible to put it into operation, for which reason the departments have requested its repeal. It is the opinion of the department, therefore, that the reference to relative rank between brigadier generals and rear admirals in the lower half of the grade should be omitted.

LAW BY GENERAL STAFF.

In his letter of March 1, 1921, Secretary Daniels said:

The clause in the act of October 6, 1917, was the subject of the fullest consideration by the experts in both the War and Navy Departments, including the General Staff and the War Council, with the result that the two departments agreed that this provision could not be put into effect and concurred in recommendations to Congress that it be repealed. Inasmuch as the said provision could not be put into effect, its repeal would serve no purpose other than to eliminate it from the statutes, thereby preventing confusion which it might cause in the minds of those not familiar with the subject. Whether repealed or not, the fact would be that it was not in effect and could not be put into effect and therefore could not be regarded as a provision of law which was in effect in 1919.

Probably in the entire history of this country no member of the Cabinet before ever wrote such a remarkable and astounding letter. The Secretary sympathetically informs us that after a conference of "experts" from the War and Navy Departments, "including the General Staff and the War Council," actually held to decide whether the laws made by Congress should be enforced, they decided that they would not pay any attention to the law, and adds:

Inasmuch as the said provision could not be put into effect, its repeal would serve no purpose other than to eliminate it from the statutes, thereby preventing confusion * * *; whether repealed or not, the fact would be that it was not in effect and could not be put into effect and therefore could not be regarded as a provision of law which was in effect in 1919.

NULLIFICATION BY NAVY EXPERTS.

What was this that challenged the attention of both departments and all their experts? Just simply a question of how brigadier generals and rear admirals of the second nine should go into dinner. There was not another thing involved, but this distinguished gentleman had stepped into the breach and saved the country from ruin by carefully considering it and announcing that it was not necessary to repeal it, but that they would just drop it out. This was simply a nullification, and every man engaged in it should have been court-martialed and dismissed in disgrace, and the Secretary who encouraged it should have been impeached, and yet, because the committee declined to give any serious attention to such rot, for three years the work of the committee has been hamstrung, handicapped, and subjected to continual assaults by people who had no qualifications to criticize, but who time and time again after finishing up their criticisms began another series.

The committee undertook to assemble and codify the laws made by Congress without changing them. In his first letter the Secretary of the Navy demanded that we nullify and drop out the law as above shown, and gravely said that it was defective and must be left out. The committee, of course, pointed out that we were not endeavoring to repeal any laws or omit any laws, but we worked on the theory that Congress knew all the laws it wanted and all we were doing was to get them together. All the difficulties that have arisen since then about the Navy have sprung from the declination of the committee to change the laws Congress made in order to please the department.

H. R. 9389.

On December 20, 1920, the bill (H. R. 9389) to make a code of the laws unanimously passed the House of Representatives and went to the Senate, which adjourned on the following March 4. The chairman of the Senate Committee on Revision of the Laws was sick and called to Florida and was not able to get the bill before the Senate, though he frequently told me he would call it up and ask for its passage just as Senator Conkling and his committee did in 1874 with the Revised Statutes. A few days before the bill passed one of the force in the Navy Department that had been doing the work on it telephoned the House committee inquiring for a copy and said he wanted to see if we had followed his suggestions. As most of his suggestions were crude, puerile, and foolish, we had not followed all of them and he flew into a rage and immediately began a vicious assault upon the bill, which has been continuously maintained by his successors. He was mad because we did not drop out the law about the brigadier generals and rear admirals, which is a matter of no importance whatever, just a question of precedence as to who should go into dinner first. He then began to pour in every objection he could conceive or think of to the bill, sending it to the Senate committee, which referred it to the House committee, which gave it immediate and careful attention. Every suggestion which was worthy of serious consideration, that was worthy of being approved, was promptly approved, and the House committee sent to the Senate committee reams of matter, thoroughly explaining everything else, and the poor fellow dropped dead one day and others succeeded him. Before dying he had gone down to the Judge Advocate General's Department of the Army and had induced another poor fellow down there to get up and send in a ridiculous set of criticisms without any foundation whatever, a man without any legal experience.

Attention was called to the absurdity of these, and Secretary Baker withdrew those objections and wrote the chairman of the House committee very highly indorsing the whole bill and urging its passage.

The Senate adjourned without getting time to take the matter up. When this gentleman and anybody he could stir up began his efforts to compel us to omit the law about who should go in to dinner first in the Army and Navy, the House committee began a four months' careful analysis of all the criticism that was made, and a very thorough one, and when the Sixty-seventh Congress convened the thoroughly revised revision was placed before the House after a review of four months, having the benefit of all the criticisms from all the departments that were offered. Some of them were very good and useful. Probably 90 per cent of them were of no force or value. I have yet to learn of any lawyer that ever tried a lawsuit that has made any real criticism of the bill, though there have been some very excellent suggestions.

WANTED $1,000,000,000 MORE.

The absurdity of them is indicated by a letter, for example, that the committee received from the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Houston. The Secretary said that the bill H. R. 9389 had omitted certain authority for the issuance of certain Liberty bonds. He said sadly:

It is entirely omitted—

And added—

In view of the $2,000,000,000, or thereabouts, of outstanding bonds of the first Liberty loan, a repeal of the statutory authority under which they were issued would be unfortunate and embarrassing.

The committee wrote him that in view of the fact that all the bonds authorized by law had been issued, and that law had been fully executed, it would be very unfortunate and embarrassing if the law should be reenacted, which is what the code would do, because if it were the law on the date the code should go into effect, and it would be if reenacted, the Secretary of the Treasury could issue another $2,000,000,000 of bonds, which we declined to assist him in doing. Furthermore, it was suggested to him that even if the law were repealed that it was executed and that would not affect the validity of $2,000,000,000 of bonds. Of course, it is a suggestion that no lawyer could possibly make and that nobody with any sense would make, and of course that precipitated a few onslaughts from some people, and with such silly stuff as that we have had to contend for three years.

GEOLOGICAL LAW.

Another excellent illustration of the vicious and silly character of the criticisms which we had to examine carefully, just as if somebody fit to make suggestions had made them, came from the Geological Survey of the Interior Department. In the last days of the Wilson administration somebody in the department sent word around to see what flaws could be picked in the new code bill. The "brilliant and learned scholarly lawyer" at the head of the Geological Survey, who probably was never in a law office in his life, wrote that the geology laws seemed to be in, though not as well arranged as they would have been by his bureau, but that section 10742 did not meet with his approval and if permitted to stand would ruin the whole work. He said section 10742 changed the whole bill and made it a jumble of confused absurdities without form and void and simply a bundle of nonsense. He was informed that that section was prepared in 1874 by Luke Poland, Benjamin F. Butler, James Lawrence, of Ohio, George F. Hoar, and other great lawyers, and approved by Roscoe Conkling, Matt Carpenter, and other great lawyers; that it had stood unchallenged since 1874 as the governing section of the Revised Statutes, the greatest law book the world ever saw; and that our committee had copied it exactly on the theory that with such famous names authorizing it and its approval for nearly half a century, it would be all right. We thanked him for his scholarly advice and informed him but for his wise prudence and caution we would have been involved in what was evidently a total wreck, and that we had sons studying law and we would like to know where he acquired his profound and erudite legal scholarship; but we have never had an answer. We asked Secretary Houston who was his legal adviser, but he said it was not practicable to say. In this statement I think he was correct.

On May 16, 1921, the bill went to the Senate committee, and 20 months have elapsed and it has never had a meeting. Of course, long since every man who in good faith had any criticisms to make has made them. On May 26, 1922, a year after the bill passed the House the last time, the chairman of the House committee wrote the chairman of the Senate committee:

All those who in good faith wish to make suggestions have long since had ample time in which to do so.

Since then nobody who in good faith wished to assist in making good laws has offered any criticism. The bill had then been before the country over a year as it now stands, and anything offered since that date was, of course, done just to annoy and necessarily was of a trivial nature and a matter of no importance.

ASKED OPINION OF ALL BUREAUS.

In the spring of 1922, nearly a year ago, the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, through its chairman, entered into conversation and correspondence with all the departments. Most of them had long since declined to offer any suggestions of correction. A few departments had some on file with the Senate committee, though not many. After the chairman of the House committee had conferred with the attorneys and solicitors of those departments an agreement was entered into as to just what changes, none of them important, should be made, and the department and the committee joined in suggesting to the Senate committee that those changes be made. A bill has just been introduced in the House to make the 66 perfecting amendments to the code on which the departments and the committee agreed, including finally those made by agreement with the Navy's attorneys, and there was no more work for the Senate committee to go over, everything being fully placed before them. Since that time the Navy presented what they call 137 criticisms, 41 of which were fully settled upon and agreed to by the Navy lawyers and the committee, and they are inserted in the corrections suggested to the Senate committee. Yet just for purposes evidently of confusion they include them in the 137. Of the remaining 96, it had been absolutely agreed between the committee and the representatives of the Navy that practically all should be discarded and not utilized because they were of no value, yet they come back repeating them. The balance were just an endeavor to create an array of pretended suggestions and criticisms in order to make the work seem more extended and difficult. The Navy Department is the only one that has permitted itself to stoop to such conduct. None of those criticisms made since May last is entitled to any consideration whatever, because they were not made in good faith, but simply to create an appearance of confusion and criticism. This bill went before the country in December, 1920, and again in May, 1921. Long since every man who was entitled to be heard has made what suggestions he has to make and there is no reason why anything made in recent months should be given any time whatever.

The Navy, I believe, has 96 criticisms of 96 sections which the other committee should examine. The House committee has 96 answers thereto. All that is needed is that the attacks and explanations and answers be read and a decision thereon be reached, and amendments be made if needed. That is what legislators on committees are for. Let them work a little, about 10 minutes; a total of 960 minutes will be enough to reach conclusions. If they make 96 amendments it will require about five minutes each to write out the amendments. Three days of good work will dispose of all the Navy has said, at the most. We worked 22 months.

There is where it stands now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NEWTON] is recognized for 21 minutes.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, for the present I object.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I did not hear all of the speech of the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], but I am told that he charged me and other Members of this House with leading certain blocs for the purpose of making a pork-barrel raid on the Treasury. That is a reflection upon my integrity and the integrity of other Members of this House. I think I am just as conscientious, that my purpose is just as high, that I am just as much interested in serving this whole country as the gentleman from Wisconsin or any other gentleman. [Applause.]

I have been trying for three weeks to get an opportunity to discuss the river and harbor needs of the country before the membership of this House and to lay before the House the facts which I think are of vital concern to this great country, but because the gentleman from Wisconsin and others opposed to the amendment had charge of the time I have been denied that privilege. This forenoon the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] was allowed 45 minutes in which to hold a funeral ceremony that should have been held on Sunday over the remains of his inadequate budget for rivers and harbors and to attack the personal character and integrity of Members of this House. I tried on yesterday and again to-day to get a reasonable time in which to present the facts which justify the action of three-fourths of the membership of this House, but without avail. I have to-day asked for the privilege of extending my remarks in order that the facts which this House ought to know, and which the country ought to know, might go into the RECORD, and I am met with an objection from the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

What is this pork-barrel howl which he delights to make? It is the cry that the railroad lobbyists have been echoing around these corridors for the last half century. [Applause.] Three-fourths of the membership of this House went on record yesterday in favor of cheap water transportation for the shippers of this country, and I thank God the time has come when the railroad lobby can no longer run this House or the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

And I will say to you now that you are going to have to meet the issue. You can hurl your warnings all you will, and you can threaten to remove the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors if you will. But I will tell you something. The vote in the House of Representatives on yesterday was in response to the great call of the mass of the American people, a call which will echo from the people back home in the next election.

You who are trying to defeat the will of this House and of the country are raising the same old cry. When you want to scare Members away from voting reasonable appropriations, everybody's project except your own project is "pork barrel."

The gentleman from Wisconsin has talked pork, pork, pork, and yet under this appropriation he gets for his Milwaukee breakwater one-fifth of all that is appropriated for all the harbors on the Great Lakes; but he stuck it down in his jeans and ran away with it, and when challenged he tried to justify it. If he is so anxious about economy, why does he not turn it back into the Treasury?

Now what are the facts? The gentleman from Wisconsin talks about $90,000,000. The truth of the matter is we appropriated last year $43,000,000 for the rivers and harbors of this country, and we were compelled to do it then over the protest of the gentleman from Minnesota——

A MEMBER. Wisconsin——

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Yes. The gentleman from Wisconsin, and I beg the pardon of the Members from Minnesota. [Laughter.] But it passed the House and it passed the Senate, and it was necessary for the absolute needs of the rivers and harbors of this country.

Since we passed that bill we have adopted projects—this House and the Senate—new projects, meritorious projects every one of them, which call for an additional appropriation of $38,000,000.

The engineers in their report this year provided for the projects which were on the books last year the same that we appropriated last year, $43,000,000, and they provided $13,000,000 for the new projects adopted since we made appropriation last year, and in this bill we are doing no more than carry on the same kind of reasonable improvements that we provided for last year.

They talk about the "pork barrel." Where is the "pork"? They talk about appropriating for little rivers. I tell you that the engineers of this country have cut the estimates to the bone. I challenge them to show you one piece of "pork" in the whole list of projects. "Little rivers," they say. Why did not the gentleman from Minnesota tell you this morning?

A MEMBER. The gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Again I beg the pardon of the Members from Minnesota. [Laughter.] Why did not the gentleman from Wisconsin tell you this morning, when he was holding his funeral ceremony, that the sum total for improvements of all the second-class rivers was only $181,000 and yet these smaller rivers carry millions of tons of freight each year?

Ah, it is the old cry, the celebrated old cry that comes from the railroad lobbyists. You sound your warnings if you will. I give you warning now. The people of this country are not interested in railroads. They are not interested in waterways. The thing that the people of this country want is an adequate system of transportation that will carry the commerce of the country at the cheapest rates. [Applause.] And I think the people back home will be able to take care of the fellow who comes down here and advocates a system of transportation to the exclusion of all others that costs four or five times as much as water transportation. This old railroad pork barrel cry is getting stale, and the people back home are coming to know who is making it. [Applause.]

The most serious problem confronting the American people to-day is the problem of transportation. Our industries can not develop and will not grow beyond the limits of our transportation facilities. When you shut down the machinery for transportation, you paralyze the industries of the country.

We have an abundance of evidence to show that our facilities for transportation are inadequate. In a speech recently before the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, in Washington, the president of the Illinois Central Railroad declared that our railroads are continually being offered more freight than they can haul, and that within the past six years more miles of railroad have been abandoned in this country than have been constructed.

As further evidence upon this point, Vice President McCrea, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, before the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, on February 24 last, is reported to have said:

> In the United States during the 12 months ending December, 1921, but 400 miles of new rail lines were built, while 700 miles have been abandoned.

Vice President Elisha Lee, of the Pennsylvania Co., in a speech before the Manufacturers' Association of Philadelphia early last year, made a statement which contained the following:

> Traffic on our American railroads measured in ton-miles doubles about once in a decade. The next time our country has a real revival in business we shall in all probability be confronted with the most severe congestion of railroad traffic and the greatest inadequacy of railroad facilities ever experienced in our history.
>
> When that happens, rates will be lost sight of. Everyone will be clamoring for service, and our public highways will again be torn to pieces by huge truck loads of freight carried over roadways never designed for such purposes, and at rates and costs of operation so high as to constitute gross economic waste.
> Then business men will not be bothering themselves much about rates. All they will be thinking about will be how to get transportation at any price.

From statements such as these from men like Mr. Markham, of the Illinois Central, Mr. McCrea and Mr. Lee, of the Pennsylvania system, it is evident that the railroads of the country are totally incapable of meeting the demands of commerce, and it is ridiculous to assume that the railroads will increase their capacity sufficiently during the next 10 years to meet the requirements of a 100 per cent increase in commerce, which experts like Mr. McCrea advise us is the usual and natural development in this country.

I am not here as an antagonist of the railroads, and I fully appreciate that the railroads are the basis of the transportation system of our country. As a Member of Congress, I voted for the Esch-Cummins bill, and I did it knowing that it contained the so-called "guaranty clause," which was intended to give to the railroads a reasonable return upon their investments. I have voted for all appropriations necessary to make up to the railroads the losses sustained by them during war-time operation. I did this, however, not because the beneficiaries of such legislation were railroads; and I say to you that the American people are not interested in railroads as such; they are not interested in waterways; and they are not interested in highways. The thing that the people of this country are interested in is an adequate system of transportation, made up of railways, waterways, and highways, constituting a system able to meet the commercial needs of the country, capable of aiding our commercial growth and development, and which will produce transportation at the least possible cost.

We would not have railways if we did not have shippers to use them. We would not improve our waterways if it were not for the commerce which needs them for transportation, and because of the demands of commerce, railways, waterways, and highways are being developed. Our difficulty, however, comes from the fact that the various transportation facilities of the country are not sufficiently cooperative.

They have not yet learned to recognize that they are instruments of the public, and that what the public is interested in is not a controversy between carriers but a great system of transportation, adequate to meet the demands of commerce and capable of supplying the cheapest possible rate.

Mr. Markham, of the Illinois Central Railroad, in his speech before the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, declared that public sentiment is uncharitable to the railroads, and I agree with his contention. I believe that the railroads of the country ought to be paid enough to meet their necessary expenses and to yield an adequate return upon their investment, and that the returns ought to be sufficient to stimulate investment in railroad property. The public ought to be willing to aid rail transportation, but if there is another form of transportation which can carry a part of the commerce of the country at a cheaper rate than the railroads can afford, then the railroads ought not to oppose the development of that form of transportation, but they should encourage it in order that the public may have the benefit of the cheaper rate and in order that the transportation congestion of the country may be relieved.

It is conceded that our transportation facilities are totally inadequate; that public sentiment is not charitable to the railroads and that capital is not seeking investment in railroad property. Our industries are trying to develop; our commerce is trying to grow; and yet they are retarded by the inability of the railroads to keep pace with the demands made upon them.

But why is public sentiment not charitable to the railroads? Why are our railroads not charitable to our waterways; why do they antagonize them? Why do they not cooperate with them, why have they always opposed physical connections and joint terminals, and why have they opposed the issuance of through bills of lading? Why have they constantly declared to the public that river navigation is impracticable, and yet for years they have made cut-throat rates upon rail lines which paralleled our rivers? And when Congress required them to make physical connections, to issue joint through bills of lading, and to make joint through rates, they have been unconscionable in their demands for the division of the freight collected upon such through rates.

As an illustration of the unfair competition made by rail lines which parallel the river, the railway officials knew that a barge line was to begin operation between Minneapolis and St. Louis in April, this year. In anticipation of this barge-line service, the rail line paralleling the river between Minneapolis and St. Louis, early this year, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, made a rate upon first-class freight of $1.06½ per 100 pounds over a distance of 586 miles, while the rail rate from Minneapolis to Kansas City, over a more level country, a distance of 500 miles, was $1.44.

If it is necessary for the rail line to charge $1.44 on 100 pounds of first-class freight from Minneapolis to Kansas City, then it should not be permitted to haul the same amount of freight from Minneapolis to St. Louis for $1.06½. And if the rail line can afford to haul this freight from Minneapolis to St. Louis for the rate it has made, it should not be permitted to charge a 50 per cent greater rate to haul the same freight a less distance to Kansas City because no water competition exists.

As to the unfair division of through joint rail and water rates, I will call your attention to the through joint rate from St. Louis to Bayless, Ark. The total rate on 100 pounds of first-class freight is $1.55½. The rail line hauls this freight 74 miles and demands $0.88½ of the freight. The barge line hauls the freight 306 miles and gets $0.67 of the freight. From St. Louis to Monroe, La., the rail line hauls the freight 38 per cent of the distance and takes 81 per cent of the freight. The barge line hauls the same freight 62 per cent of the distance and gets 19 per cent of the freight. From St. Louis to Collinston, La., the rail line hauls freight 35 per cent of the distance and takes 81 per cent of the freight. The barge line hauls the same freight 65 per cent of the distance and gets 19 per cent of the freight. From New Orleans to Quitman, Miss., the railroad hauls the freight 40 per cent of the distance and gets 96½ per cent of the freight. The barge line hauls the same freight 60 per cent of the distance and gets 3½ per cent of the freight. And yet in the face of this unfair competition and the unfair division of joint rail and water rates, which I have described, the railroad officials continue to contend that river navigation is not practicable.

The truth about the matter is the barge line upon the Mississippi has demonstrated that river navigation is practicable. That it can afford to make rates which the rail lines of the country can not afford to meet. The earnings of the Mississippi Barge Line during the first six months of this year were sufficient to defray all of the operating costs and expenses of the line, to pay a reasonable depreciation upon the reproduction cost of its equipment, and still had enough left, if the same rate of earning continued during the year, to yield a return of 17.6 per cent upon the investment. This showing was made in the face of the fact that the barge line operation was experimental; that it was handicapped for adequate terminals; that the river was not fully improved; and that the rate which it charged to the shipper amounted to only 3.86 mills per ton-mile, while the records of the Interstate Commerce Commission show that the average rail rate throughout the country last year amounted to 12.74 mills per ton-mile.

Before the rail lines of the country are entitled to the confidence of the public they should cease their unfair competition with water lines; they should make a fair division of the through joint freight collected; they should concede to the public their inability to successfully compete with water transportation; they should cooperate with the waterways of the country and encourage their development; and they should be willing for the shipper to enjoy the blessings of cheap water transportation wherever it can be made available. When railroad officials of this country assume an attitude like this before the public sentiment toward them will become charitable and they will receive the help and public sentiment of which they are now so much in need.

As heretofore stated, railroad officials concede their total inability to meet the demands of commerce in this country. As an evidence of the potentiality of river transportation in dealing with freight congestion, let me call your attention to the fact that it has frequently occurred that one towboat leaves St. Louis with a cargo of barges and makes the trip to New Orleans in six days, carrying enough freight to load 12 full freight trains, with 50 cars to each train and 50,000 pounds to each car. If we had enough towboats and barges to carry the outgoing and incoming foreign commerce of the Mississippi Valley, we could readily relieve the freight congestion of the country.

The success of the Mississippi Barge Line, under Government operation, has dispelled every doubt as to the practicability of water transportation. It has demonstrated that the barge line can earn a profit carrying freight at one-fourth of the rate which is necessary for the rail lines of the country to charge, and I have no doubt but what this rate will be infinitely less when the river is improved, terminals constructed, unfair rail competition and discrimination eliminated, and private enterprise is given an opportunity to operate upon our inland waterways.

That the improvement and use of our inland waterways is necessary to relieve the freight congestion of the country is evident. That the industries and commerce of the country can not develop without facilities for transportation is still more evident. But the distressing thing about the whole situation has been the indifference of Congress in providing the necessary funds with which to complete our river projects.

We are threatened by those who oppose adequate river and harbor improvement with the wrath of the President of the United States, because we have done what we know to be our duty with respect to this appropriation, and in an effort to procure adequate appropriations for the river and harbor needs of the country. It was boldly insinuated that the President was opposed to the sum which we know to be necessary. I do not believe for one minute that the President has interfered, or attempts to interfere with the duties of the House in making this appropriation. The President was elected upon a platform which contained the following plank:

> We declare it to be our policy to encourage and develop water transportation service and facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States.

I am advised that during the campaign the President made a speech in Tennessee in which he declared himself in favor of the improvement and use of our waterways; that subsequent to the election and before his inauguration he made a speech in New Orleans in which he declared in no uncertain terms that he favored the improvement and use of our waterways; and again in the message which he delivered to this Congress early in the present session, he declared that we should begin to utilize the vast sums of money heretofore appropriated for the improvement of our rivers, and no one knows any better than he that our waterways can not be utilized until the improvements heretofore undertaken have been completed, and that our investments will not begin to yield a return until the job is finished.

The Bureau of the Budget has pursued a parsimonious policy with respect to our inland waterways. Last year the bureau for all the harbors and rivers in this great country for the current fiscal year at first allotted $13,500,000 and later, on our protest, increased the sum to $27,500,000. In this allotment the bureau ignored the recommendation of the Army engineers as to the essential river and harbor needs of the country. Congress, realizing the total inadequacy of the bureau allotment, increased the amount to $43,000,000.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and certain other alleged leaders of the House have denounced three-fourths of the membership of this House for voting for an appropriation for river and harbor improvement in this country in excess of the amount provided for by the Bureau of the Budget, and they charge that we, the overwhelming majority of the membership of this House, consisting of Members representing every State in the Union, are "pork-barrel" raiders of the Treasury because we refuse to abide by the recommendation made by the Bureau of the Budget for $27,500,000 for all the rivers and harbors in the United States. We have taken the report of the engineers, enumerating the projects heretofore adopted by Congress, and specifying the amount for each project, which constitutes a sum total of $56,589,410. There are approximately 500 projects in the United States heretofore adopted by act of Congress, and certainly there is no one who is better qualified to judge of the needs of these various projects than the Army engineers, who have trained engineers under them in every section of the United States, who have no interest in the river and harbor projects except to conserve the best interests of the country. In addition to that, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, consisting of 21 Members from various States of this Union, representing both political parties, many of whom have studied the river and harbor needs of this country for terms ranging from 15 to 20 years, have unanimously declared that the recommendation of the engineers is conservative. Hence you have upon one hand the engineers of the Army, recommending the amount which was approved by a three-fourths vote of this House on yesterday, supported by the unanimous judgment of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, and upon the other hand you have the Bureau of the Budget, which, without intelligent investigation and without recommendation from the engineers as to any particular project, recommended a lump sum of $27,500,000 for all the river and harbor projects of the country. And you have the gentleman from Wisconsin and certain other members of the Appropriation Committee, who made no investigation as to the river and harbor needs, who charge us with "pork-barrel" intentions because we refuse to abide by the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget, while they themselves, without rhyme or reason, have reported a bill providing for $37,000,000. They charge that we refuse to stand by the Bureau of the Budget, while they themselves increased the Budget estimate $10,000,000 when they submitted the bill to the House. It was they who repudiated the Bureau of the Budget, and if they themselves will not stand by the Budget's recommendation, why should they blame us for voting for a sum which we know to be necessary to meet the essential river and harbor needs of the country?

As a matter of fact, $56,589,410 is not enough to meet the urgent needs of river and harbor work for the next fiscal year. For illustration, in 1910 Congress adopted a project for the improvement of the Mississippi River from Cairo to St. Louis to cost $21,000,000, and it was written into the law that this project should be completed within a period of 12 years. That period expired on the 25th of last June, and yet only $2,000,000 of the estimated amount has been appropriated. The item for this stretch of the river in the $56,000,000 approved in the House on yesterday amounts to only $500,000. The barge line is endeavoring to operate over this unimproved stretch of the river, and there is not a more important project in the country. And yet if Congress continues in the future to appropriate each year the amount which is provided for this river section for the next fiscal year, it will take 38 years to complete the project, and during that time commerce, doubling once in every 10 years, the commerce of the Mississippi Valley will have increased 1,200 per cent, while the railroads of the country have less miles of track to-day than they had six years ago, without substantial prospect of increasing either their mileage or equipment in the future.

We have a waterway system in the valley consisting of projects heretofore adopted by Congress comprising 6,523 miles of rivers, including the Ohio from Pittsburgh to Cairo, the Mississippi from Minneapolis to the Gulf, the Missouri from Kansas City to the mouth, the Illinois from the Great Lakes to the Mississippi, and certain tributaries of the Ohio. Congress has heretofore appropriated and the engineers have expended upon these adopted projects a sum total in excess of $174,000,000, and yet this vast expenditure of money can not be utilized, because Congress has failed to appropriate the $75,000,000 estimated as necessary to finish the job, in order that this great waterway system may be made available for navigation and for commerce.

The gentleman from Wisconsin wails about "pork barrel" in the river and harbor item adopted by the House on yesterday. He talks about the vast sums to be expended upon important rivers throughout the United States, and he assumes to be familiar with all the items provided for river and harbor improvement and asserts that the amount is extravagant. The bill provides a sum total of $15,975,000 for the 10 principal rivers in the United States. The "pork-barrel" insinuations have all been lodged against the smaller rivers of the United States. There are nearly 80 of them, carrying millions of tons of commerce, while the total amount carried in the $56,000,000 item for the improvement of all of these second-class rivers amounts to only $181,820, and the distinguished economist from Wisconsin has failed to point out one single project of all this lot that is not meritorious. In fact, he and those who have aided him have failed to point out, out of the total number of 500 river and harbor projects provided for in the amount adopted by this House on yesterday, one single project which is not meritorious, and they have failed to show that the amount provided for a single project was greater than the needs that the projects justify.

Our opponents in their opposition to river improvement cry economy. I believe in economy. I believe in reducing the expense of the Government where such reduction can be made without injuring the necessary activities of the Government, but I say to you that when you build up a great waterways system, which will provide adequate transportation facilities for our commerce at a greatly reduced cost, such an expenditure is not an expense but an investment.

I am advised that the assistance that Congress has given to aid in building railroads in this country, consisting of land grants alone, comprise an acreage greater than the original thirteen States, and possess a value of more than $10,000,000,000. We have expended upon the highways of this country during the last four years, according to the Engineering News-Record, nearly $2,000,000,000, while, according to a statement made by Secretary Weeks before the recent Rivers and Harbors Congress in Washington, we have expended in the last century only $443,000,000 to improve navigation on more than 25,000 miles of navigable rivers in the United States, and more than 75 per cent of that amount has been expended upon projects which have not been completed, so that the investment thus made can not be utilized. It is time that the projects heretofore undertaken should be completed so that the vast sums heretofore expended may become productive.

I believe in a budget system. I like to support the recommendations made by the Bureau of the Budget, but I realize that the members of that bureau are human; that they are not infallible; and when I am convinced, as I am with regard to their recommendation for river and harbor improvement, that they have made a mistake which will result in a grave injury to the country, I will join hands with those Members of Congress who believe as I do in an effort to increase the appropriation to an amount commensurate with the country's needs, in the hope that thereby we may build up in this country a great system of transportation, consisting of railways, waterways, and highways, not conflicting and competing but harmoniously cooperating with each other, to the end that adequate facilities for transportation at a reasonable cost may be afforded so that our resources may be developed and our commerce permitted to grow.

Whom are we here to serve, the railways or the whole people? If we are trying to serve the whole people and we find that we can get water transportation which will relieve the freight congestion of the country at one-fourth the cost of the present rail transportation, then why, when we try to procure such transportation, does somebody get up and yell "pork barrel," unless it is the cry of the railroad lobbyist? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman was so insistent yesterday in stifling debate that I feel obliged to object. I do not object to his revising his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Vice President.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed, out of order, for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed, out of order, for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NEWTON] in the course of his remarks referred to the influence of the "railroad lobby," as he called it, in connection with the appropriation recommended by the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. So far as I am concerned as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I never heard of any railroad lobby. I certainly never heard from any railroad lobby, and I think the suggestion that a railroad lobby had anything whatever to do with the amount of the appropriation recommended by the subcommittee is about as silly as anything I have heard of since I have been a Member of this House.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I decline to yield at this time. I know how this rivers and harbors item was made up. The subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations heard the evidence, and they fixed upon an amount which in their opinion was all the Board of Engineers ought to have, all they could wisely and usefully expend. They came here and recommended that amount to the House. The House did not agree with them and the House increased the amount, and that is all there is of it. All this talk about a railroad lobby having any influence upon the situation is sheer nonsense.

But that is not what I rose to talk about. In the bill that we passed yesterday we carried an item of nearly $7,000,000 for the completion of Dam No. 2 at Muscle Shoals. We also carried a contract authorization of about $10,000,000. The object of this appropriation and the object of this authorization is to complete at Muscle Shoals a plant capable of producing the maximum amount of hydroelectric energy which can be generated there.

It was the intention of the Committee on Appropriations that this money should be used solely for the purpose of developing a power plant which could be adapted to any purpose to which the Government may hereafter see fit to put it, whether for the manufacture of fertilizers or for the manufacture of nitrates or for anything else. I am not altogether satisfied with the language carried in the bill which limits the use to which this money can be put. It provides that the $10,000,000 can be used for the completion of the project. I do not know what the project is. The only project that I know anything about was the one to produce nitrates during the war. I do not know anything about any other project which has ever had any Government sanction. I suggested different language, which I thought would meet the situation, but that language was not adopted. However, it is certainly the intention of the Committee on Appropriations, and I believe it will be carried out by the War Department, to construct there a general power plant which can be adapted to any particular use to which Congress may hereafter see fit to put it, and I hope that such use will be for the manufacture of fertilizers during time of peace, and that the plant will be so constructed that it could be used for the manufacture of nitrates during time of war. However, I do not think we should be in any haste to adopt a definite policy, and I certainly do not think we should be in any haste to accept any proposals which may be made for this plant.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUSTED. It is only common sense from a business standpoint to realize that when you negotiate on the basis of an incomplete proposition you are negotiating at a great disadvantage. The advantage is always with the man who wants to buy. We do not know what we have at Muscle Shoals. We do not know how much hydroelectric energy can be generated there. We do not know how much our proposition is worth. I believe it will prove to be a very valuable proposition. General Taylor says that it is the finest water-power site in the United States; that more power can be generated there than at any other site in the United States. We should wait until our dam has been completed, until our gates have been constructed, until our power plant is ready for operation, and then we will be in a position to negotiate with anybody who wants to take it over at the best advantage to the Government.

As I said, I hope this plant will be used for the manufacture of fertilizers during time of peace. I agree absolutely with what the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] said, that no nation is any stronger than its soil. Our soil has been suffering for years. Even in our great Corn Belt we are not producing the average yield per acre that we did a few years ago, we are not doing it on the wheat lands, we are not doing it in the cotton fields of the South. The average yield per acre is decreasing steadily. There was a time when we produced in this country a great deal more than we could consume, but the time is rapidly approaching when this country will not even be self-sustaining from an agricultural standpoint. We are rapidly approaching that point at the present time, and therefore the question of the production of fertilizer and the improvement of our soil is a matter of vital importance.

Germany realized the danger of a similar situation many years ago. Long before the Great War practically the only thing that Germany exported of an agricultural nature was beet sugar. She imported our grains and she consumed our grains in Germany, and they went back into the soil, and she exported beet sugar, and beet sugar has nothing in it that is of value for soil enrichment. It contains neither nitrogen, phosphoric acid, nor potash.

Mr. LITTLE. Does the gentleman happen to have on hand the figures of how much we exported to Germany before the war?

Mr. HUSTED. I have not the figures. That was the German policy, and Germany adopted that policy in order to put fertility back into her lands, and she put it back so well under that policy that during the World War she was able to produce enough food to support not only the army in the field but the people at home. During the entire war she imported practically nothing in the way of foodstuffs. It was all produced in Germany. That was a tremendous accomplishment which would not have been possible in Germany 20 years before the World War began. It is time that we gave heed to the agricultural situation in this country. I believe we have a proposition at Muscle Shoals which could be utilized to very great advantage in furtherance of that policy if it is wisely handled, if we get the plant into the hands of the right people, and see that it is put to the right use under reasonable profit to the operator for the benefit of our people in the manufacture of commercial fertilizer in great quantity and at low cost. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Mississippi rise?

Mr. QUIN. To move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I hope gentlemen will let us go on with the bill and not talk on matters outside of the bill. We have been very liberal in general debate, and we have not begun to read the bill yet. I am not objecting to the gentleman taking five minutes, but I hope after that gentlemen will permit us to go on with the bill.

Mr. QUIN. I thank the gentleman. I have not said anything or taken up any time on this bill. I thank the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not complaining; I am just making a request.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I just want to make an observation about these gentlemen who seem to be complaining so much about two-thirds of this House voting for the people yesterday afternoon when we voted to increase the amount for rivers and harbors to $56,000,000. The gentlemen who are doing this complaining voted to give billions of dollars to the railroads out of the pockets of the people. They subsidized the railroads and the same gentlemen voted to subsidize the ships of the United States by giving them every year from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000, besides a billion dollars' worth of ships. Now forsooth, because the Representatives of the people want transportation at reasonable rates and so vote a little paltry sum of $19,789,000, you are growling about it. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, it is time for the people of the United States to receive their freights at reasonable rates. What are you going to do; talk and do nothing? I am in favor of repealing the Cummins-Esch bill. As I said before, the committee has had all these months to consider it. How are you going to reduce the freight rates of the United States? Here we voted yesterday to improve these rivers and harbors and keep on with its operation to a point where freight can go upon the bosom of the waters.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I can not now. The gentleman who last spoke said he did not think there was any necessity to be in any hurry about Muscle Shoals. Did you ever know a man to build a great building and have nothing in view as to what he is going to do with it? Did you ever know a man to construct a magnificent office building and not propose to have some tenant to occupy it? Is it possible the gentleman wants the United States Government to proceed with this project, putting in it $57,000,000, without knowing what it is going to do with it? You have before you, and have had ever since last May, a proposition from Mr. Henry Ford that guarantees the United States every dollar of money that it has put into it; that guarantees to make fertilizer in time of peace which when made, according to the evidence, is more than two-thirds of the entire amount that is to-day produced in the United States. He further puts in a guaranty that it will be made at a less cost than it is made to-day. He furthermore guarantees that the whole plant will be ready, well manned, well organized, and if we should ever happen to have a war it will be turned over to the United States Government so long as it may need it for the purpose of making explosives that it would be compelled to have in time of war. And yet the gentleman says he does not think there is any necessity for us to be in any hurry. I do not think there has been any hurry. You guaranteed us on your side last year when the recess was taken that the question would be taken up in the fall. Here it is now the 20th day of January, 1923, and the leader on your side says it is not yet time to take it up, and the distinguished gentleman from New York just said we ought not to be in any hurry. Is it possible that the farmers of the United States are not in need of any fertilizer at a lower price? They are the men who are looking to this Congress to do something on this proposition. They are the men who have the right to expect the Congress of the United States to take it up and act on it at once, and let every man here go on record and say whether he is willing to accept that Ford proposition for Muscle Shoals or to turn it down, to go out on the byways and hedges and let the great trusts of the United States do what shall be done with it.

Do you want to turn it over to the powers that appeared before the committee endeavoring to defeat the very ends that the gentleman from New York just spoke about with reference to having fertilizer in time of peace? All of the fertilizer interests, all of its allies, all the water-power interests, all the automobile interests, all the farm-implement interests, more than a dozen of the great powers and trusts of the United States appeared before that committee with their witnesses, saying that the dam could not be built and would not be, and that fertilizer could not be made there, and when that was refuted they came in with the other propositions and said, "We can offer you something better than Mr. Ford." The whole propaganda was had that it could not be finished, and if finished it would amount to nothing, that the nitrate plant would not be worth a "cuss" after we have spent $57,000,000 on the dam, and yet in the next breath they would come up and say, "We can give you a better offer." The farmers and laboring people know who their enemies are. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman indicate along what line he wishes to extend his remarks?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. I wish to add some facts and figures purely on the discussion of the project.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the Army bill passed on yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For driving, maintenance, and operation of an automobile for the Vice President, $3,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of order on the paragraph, on page 8, in lines 14 and 15, that it is legislation unauthorized.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the House provided an automobile for the Vice President by law, and clearly it is in order to provide for its maintenance.

Mr. BLANTON. It is merely an annual appropriation-bill affair, no authority of law for it, either the provision for the automobile or for its maintenance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The item in question provides for the continuation of a public work in progress, and is in order under the rules; and so the point of order of the gentleman from Texas is overruled. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For packing boxes, $970.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to line 1, page 9, as legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by law.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, this is a necessary expense in connection with the Senate. It is just as much in order to appropriate for packing boxes as for lead pencils.

Mr. BLANTON. I cite to the Chair numerous decisions holding that it is legislation and subject to a point of order. It has been so decided many times here in Committee of the Whole. The Chair will find ample precedents for the position I take, and no precedents against it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the matter will be passed over for the moment, and the Clerk will read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers to committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, $100,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.
